THIS art, which has lately been introduced with great success for ichifying the rivers of France, Scotland and Ireland with salmon and other fish, and claimed as a recent discovery, has been practiced in China for centuries. We find a record of this in a work published thirty years ago. In it is stated that "the Chinese fishermen carefully collect the spawn of fish and put it into the shell of a fresh hen's egg then stop up the opening, and set it under a sitting fowl. After a certain number of days they break the shell in water warmed by the sun; the young fry are soon hatched, and are kept in pure fresh water until they are large enough to be thrown into ponds. The sale of spawn for this purpose forms an important branch of trade in China."

Keeping Flies off Gilding.

THE London Builder states that the meat market at Ghent, Belgium, is now completely free of the intolerable nuisance of flies. The simple remedy is the inner walls having been painted with laurel oil, (Oleum lauri nobilis!) the smell of which the flies cannot support. Even gilt frames can thus be preserved unsoiled. The smell of the laurel oil is not unpleasant, and one easily gets accustomed to it.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 25, 1856.

The Last News from Utah.

THE New York Herald of Sunday contains a letter from its Salt Lake City correspondent, dated Aug. 31st, the substance of which is that a "Mr." Joseph Troskolawski, who has been daubed for the occasion with the title of "a United States Deputy Surveyor," has got a beating in Salt Lake city from "Bill Hickman" and three of his associates, for using "too great freedom of speech in expressing his views of Mormon religion." The Herald's correspondent says that Hooper & Williams, merchants of that city, ran to the assistance of the "Deputy" and succeeded, at the risk of their own safety, in throwing off the attacking party, and finally causing their exit. The correspondent makes a fine story of the affair, tells how Jedediah M. Grant and Heber C. Kimball were well satisfied with it, and how they had snubbed the people for sympathizing with the "United States Deputy Surveyor." The Herald devotes an editorial to the subject under the heading "Mormonism Running Riot—Alleged Attempt to Assassinate A United States Officer," in which the Editor prides himself in being somewhat a prophet. He had taken certain views of what Mormonism would come to, and "The statements of our correspondent show that this view of the case was the right one, inasmuch as the insanity that precedes destruction is now urging on the Saints to acts which, if true and persevered in, will call for their total extirpation from our territories."

Our readers will remember that three weeks ago the Herald published a batch of lies about a row taking place in our Hall in this city, in which Judge Appleby was represented to have spoken on Polygamy, and while doing so had been "called a liar," and the uprising of the "Mormons en masse" to chastise the offending Englishman who had been to Utah, "that den of infamy," and deemed it his duty to warn the people lest they might be deluded by the Judge's statements &c., all of which was a pure fabrication from beginning to end. The Editor of the Herald, next day when challenged for the author of the report, expressed regret, and said it was a person named "John Stewart" who had handed it into the office, but as an atonement he would publish the Judge's reply the following day. The false report was so cleverly written that we recommended John Stewart to our city editors, as he would undoubtedly be an excellent Utah correspondent. We had at the time some notion of hinting to the Herald that he might take him on at once, as he would then be upsides with the Tribune, which has had a "John Stewart" there some time, but thinking it might be considered by Horace as unkind on our part, to suggest competition, we let the thing pass, but we have since learned that our recommendation would have been superfluous, as the same Utah correspondent divides his letters at so much each between Greeley and Bennett, and thus the expense is lessened while the public is gratified the same with the big doings of the Mormons, and the awful, terrible, horrible state of barbarism that exists in Utah.

When something very bad is related against one party and something very favorable to the other, it is a common expression "there are always two sides to a story," we expect, therefore, that there will be another version when others besides the Herald's correspondent speak out. But supposing that Troskolawski got a drubbing, just as the correspondent alleges for "too great freedom of speech about the Mormon religion," what of it? Is it only in Utah that men get drubbed for their foul some tongues? Did the Herald not censure Senator Sumner's "too great freedom of speech," and characterize it as a tirade of abuse that was calculated to irritate Southern gentlemen—when Col. P. S. Brooks canned him in the Senate chamber? If a man of the education and position of Col. Brooks could not quietly submit to hear his aged relative, Senator Butler, maligned and the South abused, what are we to expect from men of the rank assigned by the Herald's correspondent to "Bill Hickman" and his friends when they are brought into contact with some contemptable ass like Troskolawski, who has neither heart nor brains to enable him to feel and know that every man is not able to quietly submit to hear his religion outraged, and to hear the men whom he regards as the most upright of mortals abused and calumniated—all of which is embraced in the correspondent's "too great freedom of speech about the Mormon religion," without teaching them there are bounds to everything?

Did the Herald suggest "the total extirpation from our Territories" of all those who were of the faith of Col. Brooks or those who approved of his conduct? Have not Governors and officers of government, ladies and gentlemen of every rank and respectability in the South flocked round Mr. Brooks, feted him, honored him, and sent him back to Congress loaded with canes, labelled with "knock-down arguments?" They have, and though the opposition of the North may have carried the South beyond the bounds of prudence in their demonstrations of sympathy for Mr. Brooks, it is no less the fact, that the principle they started with is hostility to unbridled abuse and meddling. The Mormons claim freedom for themselves and are glad at being placed in a position to show that they can and will extend it to others, but it is a different freedom from that bullying, libelling, calumniating freedom that characterizes the Herald and its paid correspondents, it is a FREEDOM TO DO RIGHT but no further. The Herald and his correspondent tries to make something of the affair by crying "A United States Officer," well what of it? If the President of the United States were in Utah with an uncivil tongue in his head, his civil position we fear would be no protection to him against the "Bill Hickmans," connected with Mormonism, and furthermore, for the Herald's information we may tell him that there are Bill Hickmans in the States that would never submit to hear from his tongue what they are obliged to read from his pen without his again passing through a similar experience to Troskolawski, to which by-the-by he is no stranger, but like some other critters will keep at his dirty work though it do coast him a kicking. We speak this plain that the Herald may profit by the instruction we offer and may in turn instruct his correspondents and all others passing through Utah, that a civil tongue is a blessing which by this time the "deputy surveyor" has learned to appreciate. Any person, Jew or Gentile, that has anything to say can hire halls in Utah to deseminate their principles and religious views, and be listened to with attention; but "too great freedom of speech"—that is, abuse, low blackguardism, is not likely to find great patronage. We have not thought the affair alluded to worth much attention as the next regular mail will put the thing right, but as the subject was up we thought we should like to remind our cotemporary the Herald of our views on freedom of speech.

The Utah correspondent, to fill up his sheet and do something for his dollars, is under obligation to hunt up every thing that he thinks may suit the tastes of his employers, and thus present something like a show of necessity for his continuing to scribble and draw. In the dearth of exciting news we can easily imagine with what joy he learned that four men escorted the last mail from the city to the first Kanyon, and, not being acquainted with their business, want a nice story—how well it would read—that they had accompanied the mail to prevent persons from leaving the Territory! And what a dreadful thing for Governor Young to tell the Mormons to be careful of their grain and not let it go into the hands of speculating Gentiles. Dreadful thing! But how much more dreadful would it be if he acquiesced in the sale of the "staff of life" for speculation, and saw thousands of his brethren, their wives and children, in a few short months reduced to the smallest possible amount of rations, and almost entirely dependent upon roots and vegetables of a questionable character. We don't know that the Governor said what this John Stewart correspondent reports; but this much we do know, that our heart beats with admiration for the man who, regardless of the belching and howling of paid whelps, and the disappointed rage of speculators, will stand forth, like President Young, and give his brethren counsel by which they may live. There is money in the hands of the Mormons in Utah to buy up every ear of corn that Mormon labor has raised, that can or may from any necessity be brought into the market; and he would be a simpleton indeed that would let one grain go into the hands of heartless speculators, whose exorbitant retail demands would place it beyond the reach of his less fortunate brethren; and furthermore, he would not be many degrees removed from heartless Shylock, that would attempt to barter for grain in Utah at a time when all the world knows the people there have been in a position bordering upon famine. We say, success to President Young's policy, and let those who know more than we do condemn "Bill Hickman."

It is worthy of remark, that in spite of the best efforts of the Utah Correspondent, bad reports cannot be had. What must be the position of Utah, when a dungbill raker, like the Herald's employee, cannot find anything better to suit his master than the lame story about Troskolawski. What a proud position for Utah—a Herald's correspondent dried up! No insubordination to government, no murders, no robberies, no arson to report as in California, no civil war, with all its cruelties, as in Kansas—and to that distinction the New York Herald for her enemy. Notwithstanding all this abuse and hullabaloo from the Herald, we are prepared to prove, by the admissions of California papers, that there has been more crime committed and gone unpunished in that State in one day and night than all that has been reported in Utah since it was inhabited by the Mormons, while these same reports have ever scarcely had the slightest foundation in truth, and yet no extirpation for others than the Mormons.

Since the foregoing was written we have received the letter of a late "Citizen of Utah" on the subject, published elsewhere. Some poor pussy folks may think he talks too plainly, but it will be better understood. Will the Herald publish it and this? We shall send him a copy and see.

Notice.

A CONFERENCE of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, will be held at Brook's Assembly rooms, 361 Broome street New York, on the first Sunday of November, commencing at 10 1-2 A. M. All officers of the Church unconnected with the Philadelphia District, are expected to attend, or report themselves, and all members of the Church, who have not yet been received in membership, by any branch of the Church, are likewise requested to report themselves.

We invite as many of the Elders, and members, of the Church, connected with the Philadelphia District, as can make it convenient, to meet with us. Remember the 2d. of November.

Letters and Newspapers from Europe.

WE should feel obliged if the editor of the Millennial Star, would call the attention of the Travelling Elders to our protest against receiving unpaid letters at our office. Letters and Newspapers sent to the New York Post Office, are advertised in the Herald every Friday, and can be as easily obtained there as from us—the employees there are for that purpose, ours have other business to attend to.

When there is any doubt of the persons addressed being in New York, and we are supposed to be in a position to know of their whereabouts, we have no objection to receive such paid letters, and forward them when we can—likewise, when emigrants are crossing the Atlantic, and their friends may wish to communicate with them immediately, we are willing to hand them paid letters on their arrival, but beyond this no reasonable person can expect us to act. To use our name and require us to advance money on piles of letters, many of which, have never been called for is more than we can tolerate. We believe the elders can remedy this.

WE are constantly receiving complaints about the irregularity and loss of our paper. We have just received the following letter which resembles too much many others that we have received on this subject:—

LAWRENCE CITY, MASS., Oct. 9, 1856.

ELDER JOHN TAYLOR,—DEAR SIR:—I write to inform you that THE MORMON comes to me very irregularly. I have been to the post office to ascertain the cause; but received nothing. So I thought it wise to let you know about it; you may be able to remedy the irregularity. The last copy I received is dated Sept. 27, the one preceding that date I have not received, nor none since. I got the paper above referred to last Saturday, October 18, which was published on the 27th Sept.

We beg to assure our friends and subscribers that the MORMON is regularly mailed every Friday and Saturday to all subscribers. We endeavor to go to press every Thursday afternoon, for the accommodation of distant subscribers who wish to procure the paper at their Sunday meetings, and furthermore we may say that Mr. Dulin, who has charge of that business, has not only been careful in seeing every paper mailed, but when by times through accident to the press, pressure of business, sickness or any other circumstance which might interfere with its early publication, he has remained in the office in order to regain the time lost till near the "wee short hour ayont the twal."

The irregularity and losses to our subscribers are very annoying. We feel ourself very much annoyed, for the MORMON is published for the edification of the Saints, and when they fail to receive it our labor is lost, and what we hope to accomplish fails.

We know of no measures that we could put into operation at the present time to prevent those losses. They occur from the dishonesty of the post-office officials. They are so much in the habit of using gum, that, when a paper like THE MORMON excites their curiosity, it sticks to their fingers and they carry it home. When, by chance the child does not tear it at the supper table, or the wife or help are not scarce of fuel next morning, the paper is re-mailed after it has been passed round to friends, and thus the delays are accounted for; but, in the event of less fortune, of course THE MORMON never reaches its destination. The election is nigh at hand, and with it no doubt there will be some changes in officials, which we hope may be for the better. In the meantime, should this meet the eye of any of these same gummy-fingered, pilfering gentlemen, and they have compunction at heart, and yet too stingy to subscribe, we promise them, upon receiving their address, free copies, if they let those of our subscribers pass freely. For the present we cannot do more than hope for better times.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger and the Mormons.

PERIODICALLY, some Philadelphia editors are troubled with night-mare, generally a night or so after the arrival of the Utah mail. As the seasons roll on and are waited for, so wait we for the new tale about the awful ghost that terrifies those bread-and-butter scribblers. Another season has come round but though nothing awfully bad from Utah had arrived, the editor of the Ledger from force of habit has had the night-mare as usual. With perspiration streaming down his half starved "Physic," hair erect "like the quills upon the back of the fretful porcupine," eyes bursting from their sockets, heart leaping with fright, he roars out—Oh! The Mormons! Utah! The Mormons! Save us! Save us! He seizes the pen to tell the vision, "cools off a few" and realizes it was but a dream, the offspring off his disordered stomach, bigoted heart and addled brain. After telling his vision in which he shows how the Mormons might be useful friends and dangerous foes he concluded, of course, with Polygamy, and society in Utah must relapse into barbarism. The greenhorn after all his fright is simple enough to let out. "We do not say that this is the present condition of the Mormons, but it is one which may soon be." The Mormons have always been going to do dreadful things; but it is somewhat remarkable that those prophets of evil never could point to the first thing of a discreditable character. It is very pleasing for the Mormons to know that they can defy their bitterest enemies to show one disgraceful act against them as a people.

To the Scattered Saints

WE frequently receive letters from persons at a distance requesting their certificates of membership, when they are about to leave for other districts of country. We wish to inform all concerned, that all such business pertains to the president of the New York branch of the Church to whom they have been delivered and not to us. Address him, Mr. Wm. H. Miles, 117 John street, New York. Enclose a postage stamp for the return letter.

Col. Babbitt.

SERIOUS apprehensions, says the Washington Union, are entertained that Colonel Babbitt, the Secretary of the Territory of Utah, who was formerly the delegate in Congress from that Territory, has been murdered on the plains by the Cheyenne Indians. We learn from W. M. F. Magraw, just arrived in this city, who left the frontier eight days since, that Colonel Babbitt, whose train had been captured this side of Fort Kearney, had gone on to Fort Kearney after the capture of his train, and had there obtained four government mules, and left on the 2d of September with one man, in a light carriage, with despatches for Fort Laramie, which point he had not reached on the 14th September, when Magraw's party, with the United States mail, left Fort Laramie for Independence. The party could hear or learn nothing relative to him. His friends in Missouri and on the plains are of the opinion that he and his companion have been murdered.

Colonel Babbitt should have got through to Fort Laramie in five or six days if not molested. One of the Sioux Indians, who had been pardoned by the President of the United States for the murder of Magraw's men two years ago, and was being escorted home to his tribe by Captain Stewart, of the army, got permission to go on in advance of the escort. This Indian knew that Colonel Babbitt had left Fort Kearney for Laramie, and followed the tracks of his mules up into the Bluffs, near Ash Hollow, until he found evidences that Babbitt's waggon had been destroyed; found a man's shirt and other marks going to satisfy him that Colonel Babbitt and his companion had been murdered. He turned, for his own safety, and crossed the north fork of Platte river and proceeded on that side to Laramie, where he reported what he had seen and his conclusion on the subject.

Nicaragua.

THE steamship Texas which left San Juan del Norte on the 6th inst, arrived here on Saturday evening. At the date of her departure a battle between Walker's army and the united forces of the neighboring States was anticipated at Granada. For some time back they have been gathering their strength in Nicaragua and marching closer and closer upon Walker, in hopes of bringing his reign to a close, and being unprepared to fight such odds, his garrison have vacated place after place at the approach of the enemy till they have fallen back upon Granada the seat of Walker's government and head-quarters of his army. According to the advices brought by the Texas, Walker was daily expecting field ordnance from California and New York which, did he receive in time, would probably secure Dame Fortune's smiles at a moment most desired—their absence makes Walker's success very doubtful. Next mail is expected to bring the news of the battle and with it success or entire failure of filibusterism.

P. S.—By the arrival of the Tennessee at New Orleans, on Wednesday, the battle expected above is reported. On the 12th inst, Gen. Walker, with 1000 men, advanced from Granada towards Massaya, met "the allies," drove them back to the city where they fought till midnight. At early morning, Walker learned that 1400 Guatemaleans and natives were besieging Granada: he returned and found the seat of his government barricaded by the enemy: he drove them from their ports, captured the commanders and field pieces, and drove the troops from the city with great slaughter. Walker's loss is reported 16 killed and 30 wounded—the loss of the allies, 1,100.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE thing "that marks the age (or week rather) we live in" is high-pressure politics. The rejoicing over the success of the Democracy in Pennsylvania last week has not yet terminated. Indiana going the Democratic ticket right on the back of it has filled up the two cups of sweets and bitters. On Tuesday we had big spouting in the Park and in Old Tammany at the reception of the Keystone Club from Philadelphia. The same evening, Mr. Fillmore's friends were out in torchlight procession, and held forth in Union Square, where "Rockets, Roman Candles, with alternate red, white and blue balls, were burned in the greatest profusion." No demonstrations on the Fremont side. A terrible change has come over the Fremont press this week—the Herald was even suspected to be leaving the ship; but he declares he never gives up anything, only tells the truth; he might have added—"by times."

Charles Carpentier, late cashier in the Northern Railway of France and principal in the great robbery of shares, was apprehended last Thursday in a farm house in Orange Co., N. Y., where he had engaged, through disguise, as a farm laborer. The gentleman was so apparent, in spite of the disguise, that the attention of the police was soon directed upon him, resulting in his capture.

In the midst of the excitement of this large fraudulent business Gotham has been surprised by something as great at home. Mr. C. B. Huntington, a Wall-street broker, has been carrying on for some length of time a gigantic business in forgery. Forged notes to the amount of $537,000 have already been discovered, and more are yet to come.

Major Heiss has returned to Washington, the accredited Envoy of the Republic of Nicaragua, empowered to ratify the treaty between that State and the United States.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

BY the last mails from Europe affairs between the crowned heads are as complicated as ever. The Russian Counsellor of State had arrived in Vienna with despatches relative to the affairs of Naples and Montenegro. Russia adheres to old Bomba, and seeks the co-operation of Austria. The Journal de la Corse (published at Ajaccio) of the 30th of September says: Two English steam corvettes came into our port to-day, and have orders to wait for despatches to be received by telegraph. Other vessels of the same nation are expected, it is said, to-day or to-morrow. The English Vice-Consul has received despatches for the commander of the Duke of Wellington, which leads us to believe that the English squadron will not be long in arriving. The latest accounts from Naples show the king stubborn and as little disposed to make concessions as ever. The Duke of Modena is fortifying his frontiers on the Piedmont side, in order to guard against invasion from that quarter. Six hundred delegates of the people had assembled at Morges, Canton de Vaud, Switzerland, and constituted a central committee, declaring the sovereignty of the people endangered from monarchical intrigues. Prussia feels terribly bad at the firmness of The Federal Council against her paltry claims to Neuchatel. An order received by telegraph at Constantinople from London directs that three steamers and ten gun-boats shall enter the Black Sea. Admiral Lyons remains there. The Isle of Serpents question has not been satisfactorily adjusted. The French squadron has been ordered to co-operate with the English fleet, and an Austrian squadron, consisting of three steamers and six gunboats, has been ordered to Constantinople.

The last accounts from the East state that the differences between England and Persia were very far from being accommodated. The representatives of France and Russia would make another attempt at reconciliation as soon as the Shah came back to Teheran, whence he had fled for fear of the cholera. An extensive fire broke out, July 23, among the boats at Shameen suburbs, Hong Kong, which destroyed great numbers, and about two hundred lives were lost. The movements of the rebels still created much uneasiness, but large bodies of Tartar troops had lately been brought down from the north, and there was a report that the rebels had been defeated and obliged to retire towards Ching-kiang-foo. This requires confirmation.

NORWALK, Conn., Oct. 20, 1856.

Editor of the Mormon: DEAR SIR: I was much amused in reading an article in last Sunday's N. Y. Herald, purporting to be from a correspondent in Utah, giving the particulars of some terrible things said to have transpired in Great Salt Lake City, with the editor's remarks thereon. I thought while reading it, O! the gullibility of this generation! Editors in particular, how they will grasp at anything for excitement, let it be ever so false or exaggerated, they will publish the scribbling, deceive themselves, and then deceive others, and thus they defame and misrepresent the character of all they can attack with impunity.

Having resided for the last two years in Great Salt Lake City, which place I left a short time since, and not being a member or belonging to any religious sect, and being pretty well posted up, I think I should speak out and put things in their true light. The article states that "Gov. Young told the people not to let the Gentile merchants have any grain for what they owed them, if they did, they should pay as much to the Church," but let them sell their cattle, thereby implying not to pay their honest debts: that certain men followed the U. S. Mail: that one Joseph Troskolawski, a Government Officer was knocked down and beat in the street, that the perpetrators were not brought to justice, but suffered to roam at large: that the notorious Bill Hickman, that assisted to do the deed, a few days after, was sent to the Snake Indians, with a load of Indian goods, instead of the agent Armstrong: that Gov. Young, H. C. Kimball and J. M. Grant, approbated the deed done to Troskolawski and are hard upon the sympathizers with him, and that T. S. Williams who took his part, had a mission given him, on this account &c., all very nice indeed! Now let me speak from knowledge and experience. What has been Gov. Young's council to the people? that he wanted them to raise all the grain they could, and take care of their flour and grain for themselves and the poor, and not sell it to speculators and merchants there that wished to stow it away, and would not sell a bushel of grain or a pound of flour, unless they could get so much for it. I have known tons of grain and flour being bought up by these speculators and merchants, and kept lying in their store-houses while the poor had to go without bread, and subsist on roots &c., unless they could pay them $10 or $12 per hundred for flour that cost them only from $5 to $6. These speculators generally sold it to the California emigrants, at a high price, thereby sending it out of the Territory, and depriving the poor (who were willing to pay a reasonable price for it) of their bread. Hence the course Gov. Young takes, and any wise ruler would do the same. Not that he does not wish every man to pay his honest debts, for this I have often heard him in particular enjoin upon the people, but in the times of such scarcity of grain, sell their horses, cattle &c., (of which they have generally a given supply) to pay their debts, but keep the grain for the poor.

Any one who has been in Utah knows, that all kinds of people stop on their way to California and Oregon. Some go to stealing goods and cattle, running off horses, mules &c., and often times when they have good success, they send them ahead and then the thieves follow after by mail, or by any conveyance they can get, in order to deceive and thereby return to the States, disposing of their booty to the mountaineers, or trading there with the Indians—Hence the necessity of the officer sometimes seeing who leaves Salt Lake in the mail. I am well acquainted with all the persons said to have followed the mail, Col. J. C. Little is Marshal of Great Salt Sake City, formerly of Peterboro, in the State of New Hampshire, a man that can be trusted any where. I believe, one that will not molest or disturb any person, but will act fearlessly in the line of his duty and no doubt the posse he had with him would do the same.

The article states that Joseph Troskolawski is a Government officer, that is false. Gen Burr of Washington City, is the Surveyor-General of Utah, in the employ of the U. S. Government, and receives so much per year, for surveying, offices &c. He hires Troskolawski and one or two of his (Burr's) sons, and the Government has nothing to do with Troskolawski, he makes no report only to General Burr and he pays him. Troskolawski is a Pole, and an infidel, oftentimes drunk: a cursing, swearing foul-mouthed fellow: Gen. Burr can do but little with him; I have seen him drunk time and time again. He is all the while cursing and damning the Mormons to hell, I have heard him do so. He was fined before the Aldermans' Court in G. S. L. City last Winter, for cursing, swearing and drunkenness. He took an appeal to the U. States First District Court, but Judge Kinney dismissed the appeal.

I have seen the feelings of the Mormons excited, when people came there, and commenced cursing and damning them; they say that they have been murdered, plundered, and driven by infernal scamps until they have protested and declared they will stand such oppression no longer. If people will follow them into the mountains, and come into their midst they should behave themselves and leave the Mormons alone, and they will not receive the treatment of Troskolawski. This I know myself by experience.

The "notorious Bill Hickman" as the correspondent calls him is a United States Deputy Marshal for Utah, a man that none can fool with, and this the rowdies that come to Salt Lake soon find out. I know he is a terror to them, for he will not be imposed upon by them, neither suffer his friends to be imposed upon. As it regards his being "sent to the Indians with goods," what of it? Gov. Young is Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and I expect had a perfect right to send whom he pleased. Hickman being well acquainted with the Indians and their Chief, and understanding their language, was certainly a fit person to send. Major Armstrong, the Sub. Indian Agent, residing some fifty miles South of G. S. L. City.

In relation to Gov. Young, and others approbating the attack on Troskolawski (provided it be true) and reflecting upon his sympathizers, permit me to say that I have known drunkards and thieves to come there, curse, swear, and damn the Mormons and say they ought to have their throats cut, that their women were prostitutes &c. And when these same poor miserable devils were sick the Mormons would take them into their houses; nurse them, and if they died give them a decent burial. Here let me say, before I would have borne what I have heard and seen, had I been a Mormon, I would have broken the heads of such infernal scoundrels. Yet I have often heard some professing to be Mormons, (for they have some few miserable devils among them, who are all the while living in fear) sympathize with such characters, when they have been taken up for stealing cattle &c. These are the sympathizers that Gov. Young, Kimball and Grant have spoken concerning in my hearing. As for T. S. Williams getting a mission he had one I heard given last Summer before I left G. S. L. City.

The main difficulty in Utah, is this: There are such reports circulated concerning the Mormons, their licentiousness &c., so that all the rascals, libertines, thieves, and adulterers, that have escaped from prison, or the laws in the States, and start for California and Oregon, come by way of Utah. When they arrive there, the first thing they do is to endeavour to carry on their old tricks—but they get disappointed, and soon find the place too hot for them, they get frightened, and having fled away, then appears a long letter, about the abominations of the Mormons, or about some one that has been imposed upon, in the columns of some paper in California, from some one of these scoundrel sympathizers at Salt Lake, such as the correspondent of the New York Herald.

It is death, by the law of the Mormons, for a man to seduce another's wife or daughter, and several I have been informed have met their fate by committing such deeds. The Mormons believe in plurality of wives, but those who have them must take care of them, support them and their children, and not go after strange women.

I am somewhat acquainted with Gov. Young; he always treated me like a gentlemen, although he might have called me a Gentile, (which is a scriptural name, and applies to one not of the same faith,) yet I do know from experience, that any person that goes to Utah, attends to his own business, and behaves himself, will find friends, home and protection, and they will be honored and respected if they deserve it. An example of this was manifested towards the late Judge Shaver; he resided there three or four years, discharged his duties as a United States Judge, fearlessly and without opposition, as his clerk informed me—but was beloved and respected by all, because he attended to his own business, and the most profound respect was manifested at his funeral that was ever paid to any person deceased in the Territory, and a monument in Great Salt Lake City Cemetery erected to his memory.

There are also scores of others that have lived there for years, always respected and treated as gentlemen, and I have often heard Gov. Young repeat that his remarks were intended for base scoundrels, and did not so apply to any one but them.

They will not suffer their women or daughters to be seduced, neither will they suffer any house of prostitution, so numerous in the cities of the States, to exist there. A libertine or prostitute is looked upon by the Mormons as a curse to society and not fit to live; and woe be unto the man or woman that undertakes to practise iniquity in Utah. They prefer their daughters marrying with those of their own faith; but I know there is but little opposition to their marrying a Gentile, if he be but an honorable man, as in the case of Mr. William Bell, of the firm of Livingston, Kinkead & Co., and also of Captain W. H. Hooper, formerly of the house of Holladay & Warner, at present one of the firm of Hooper, Williams & Co., of Great Salt Lake City. Both married Mormon girls, and, as I understood, with no opposition, Gov. Young performing the ceremony himself in Mr. Hooper's case.

Lest I should weary your patience with things you are no doubt a great deal better acquainted with than myself, I shall desist, hoping you will give the foregoing a place in your paper, for I like to see fair play and equal rights, and I do know from experience and positive knowledge, derived from living among the Mormons, that they are basely lied about in the States. I have seen articles published in the States about them in Utah that had not the least foundation in truth, especially in the New York Herald. A great many of its articles, signed "Utah Correspondence," are got up and written, no doubt, not far from the Herald office, and the chief of them a tissue of falsehoods and misrepresentations.

Will the editor of the Herald publish this in reply to his article? I think not; for it appears to me that when he publishes a palpable lie, reflecting upon any person or society, he must be paid to correct the lie and publish the truth.

LATE A CITIZEN OF UTAH.

Correspondence from Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI Oct. 14, 1856.

PRES. TAYLOR—Dear Bro.: I embrace the opportunity of informing you concerning the work of the Lord, in this part of His vineyard. As to myself I never felt to rejoice so much in the principles of Life and Salvation as at the present time. I can say with truth and soberness it is my meat and my drink, by day and by night. The more I partake of the principles and blessings of the Gospel, the more I desire to do so, and I find that they eminate from an inexhaustible fountain, and that they always bring an additionable portion of light from this source by which I am enabled to go forth through my extensive field of labor, and teach both Saints and sinners, and I hope and pray that good will be the result.

Prospects throughout the conference are generally good, and the Saints are increasing in faith and good works. Since I last wrote to you, I have attended the conference at St. Louis where much of the spirit of God was enjoyed and the Saints made to rejoice under its influence, while much good teaching and instruction was given by the servants of God. Many elders were present from the different branches and all brought favorable reports of the situation of the Saints, and the prospects of doing good in their different fields of labor. Elders E. Snow and George A. Smith were present, though the latter, not until after the close of Conference owing to a mishap on the railroad, but in time to participate in a social party of the Saints on Wednesday evening the 8th, where his jocular remarks and manner of delivery, were quite a feast for the Saints. Since my return to this city, we have had a good meeting and although we are in this place in a measure swallowed up in politics, we can meet together and rejoice in the principals of truth which we have embraced. I received news this morning from elder Woodburn of Cannelton, Indiana, that the word in that place was progressing finely. More at another time. My respects to the bretheren in the office. Yours truly.

J. M. BERRY.

Correspondence of Judge Wm. I. Appleby.

ROCKVILLE CENTRE, L. I., N. Y.,
Oct. 17, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: As politics appear to be the all-engrossing subject of editors and people, Clergy included, at the present time, and having travelled some thousands of miles the past summer through the Western, Southern, and middle States, spent upwards of a month at the Nation's Capitol, listened to the angry debates of Congress, been somewhat a discerner of men and things, having taken considerable notice of passing events, the aspect of the political horizon, and not taking any active part, in relation to the election of either party's nominee—gives me an opportunity, and places me in a situation to proclaim my sentiments impartially in relation to the signs of the times, the disunion, discord and malevolence reigning at present and the causes thereof.

If we take a retrospective view of the scenes that have transpired, and what treasures of blood, sacrifices, and trial it cost, to rear the beautiful fabric, the Independence of these once happy and United States, then look at the angry surges of fanaticism, intolerance, and bigotry that threaten to overwhelm and destroy that liberty and independence for which our venerated Fathers fought, bled, and died: surely it speaks in tones, trumpet tongued, to every lover of liberty and right to wield his pen, and raise his voice, in support and defence of those principles, which our ancient sires established and bequeathed to their offspring as the greatest earthly boon they could enjoy. But alas! trace up the history, in brief of the few past years, and see the political demagoguery, party cliquery and chicanery---the loss of confidence and integrity—the deterioration of virtue—the acceleration of vice, discord and disunion, and the innovations made upon the sacred rights of free American citizens, by those in power, with impunity, upheld by party cliques, and mobs, and where right and justice once flourished, nought but love for the perquisites of office, power, intolerence, truckling, proscription, and bigotry reigns.

Look at America, in the days of her infancy and innocence, and first-declared freedom—a land blessed by the Almighty above all other lands—a land dedicated to freedom of speech, freedom of conscience, to justice, humanity, protection and equal rights to all—the haven of the oppressed, the asylum of the weak, and the home of the brave and free. Her laws and institutions the admiration of all nations. Her constitution given by the inspiration of the Almighty—who "raised up wise men to make the laws and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood." The God of battles protected her generals, and led her armies to victory and conquest over her enemies. Where, once the poor, the oppressed and persecuted of all nations could find mercy, justice, redress, right and protection, and enjoy all the blessings, privileges and immunities, bequeathed to Columbia's sons, with the injunction to perpetuate, protect, preserve, and keep that noble and worthy legacy, sealed by the blood of veterans, inviolate, and perpetuate the privileges and principles contained in that heaven-born declaration of Freedom forever.

Look around you, "degenerate sons of noble sires," where are your rights, privileges, and freedom now? Where is the rich heirship of our fathers now? Despised, desecrated, stigmatized and counted as a curse that ought to be burned and destroyed; that the union ought to be severed and scattered to the four winds of heaven. Where are your laws, once potent, good and wholesome, now a thing of naught, impudently set at defiance, and trampled upon with impunity?" Where is justice that was formerly clothed in its ermine, and robe of state? Where is peace? Where is safety? Where is union? Where is mercy? Where is love and friendship? Where is charity? Where can you meet a brother and a friend? Where is confidence? Where are the Constitution and the laws? Where are those rights and immunities that we once enjoyed? Where are the noble spirits of former days? Where is a master spirit that can rise up, and stay the lashing and angry billows of discord, division and disunion, that can command and put his hand to the helm of the ship of State, and pilot it safe into the haven of peace---that can return liberty and justice to all, make the laws honorable, restore confidence, punish the guilty; put down mobocracy and sectional strife—give liberty of speech and conscience, stop the torrents of vice, abomination, murders, mobs, and bloodshed abroad in the land---and punish the maddened bigot that wishes to lay his sacriligious hands upon the Constitution, or separate or divide the union of these United States—one that cannot be bribed or purchased with money? Echo answers, where? There are no such spirits among you.

Your proud Eagle, once with his wings extended, bearing in his beak the ensign of "Liberty, Independence and justice," has looked upon the scenes enacted; his pinions have fallen drooping by his side, until he could behold the scene no longer; he has again plumed his wings, arisen high in the heaven, bearing the glorious scroll, together with the peace of the nation, and conveyed them to the chamber of the west, in the "everlasting hills," there deposited the same, and taken up his abode, with great and noble men, master spirits of this generation—while the judgments of heaven go through the nation."

Look at the situation of affairs at the present time—trace the prevailing spirit from the halls of Congress, through all the different avenues and ramifications of the body politic, and what do we behold? A spirit of discord, disunion, hatred and revenge—of madness and frenzy—a spirit of party rivalry, cliques, and President-making, to grasp the loaves and fishes; and, instead of the interest of the nation, selfish motives, acrimonious feelings, insulting and blackguard speeches, truckling for office and the perquisites of Executive patronage, party power and influence, are their aim; and the halls of legislation turned into an arena of pugilists and bullies, consisting of nigger worshippers, bigots, fanatics, demagogues, infidels, blackguards, &c., spending their time in angry debates through the day, and, with few exceptions, their nights in bacchanalian revelry. And does not this same influence extend to nearly all departments in the States? It surely does. Because, "If the head be sick the whole body is faint." See the political excitement at the present time. Men appear actually insane; their passions are excited to the highest key; frenzy has taken hold of them, and they are bound in political bundles and carried headlong by their leaders, pledged to the support of their nominee and party, ranting, raving, and publishing all manner of evil, each party against the other—making out their nominees to be the most consummate scoundrels that walk the earth; and if the one-sixteenth of what is published against them be true, neither one of them is fit to govern Hayti, much less to be President of the United States. A State prison would be the most appropriate place. To achieve their object we see nothing left unturned by either party—character is defamed, honor sacrificed, business forsaken, friends made enemies, money lavishly expended; demagogues, libertines, adulterers, blacklegs, broken-down politicians, editors and papers, bought like sheep at the shambles; and the pious priests, in their sacerdotal robes, have turned their rostrums into political platforms in which to make "stump speeches"—even murders must be kept up, money raised by thousands to purchase arms and ammunition to shed the blood of those who ought to be brethren and to make political capital; some for dividing the Union; North and South for separating, one party infringing upon the rights of the other—some for a sectional President with sectional feelings, sectional party, sectional rights and influence, with slavery, abolition, amalgamation, woman's rights, State rights, secret cliques, and all manner of absurdities—a heterogenous mass of foolery, corruption and nonsense—a burlesque on common sense to every sane and unbiased mind untramelled and unprejudiced by party favor or politics.

Did we behold such scenes of discord and strife in the days of our fathers? Verily, no! I do not say but there are hundreds and thousands of the masses at the present time who are, and have been sick and disgusted at the proceedings of their rulers and men in high places and wish heartily for a reform, and are honest and sincere in their principles in support of their nominee, thinking, no doubt, if he is elected (and made to believe so by their leaders, who are seeking after office and power.) there will be a reform for the better—delusive hopes and promises! But, as I before observed, where is there a master spirit among the respective nominees, if elected? Fremont is a sectional nominee of a sectional party, with sectional feelings, and if elected will be only President of the Northern States, with a platform as proscriptive as it is absurd and illusive. Fillmore, a gentleman himself, the nominee of an intolerant and bigoted party, trampling the very laws they are seen to uphold and protect in regard to the rights of foreigners, &c., into the very dust—with a platform full of collusiveness, of vain hopes and pledges—like a toy on a mantle, only made to look at—and play their political game. Buchanan, a statesman, a man of years and experience, well skilled in jurisprudence and national affairs—the nominee of a party liberal enough to say, "We go for the whole Union and for the good of the same," and say to bigots and enthusiasts, "hands off, leave us and all others alone in our domestic institutions and relations, and attend to your own business"—with the Cincinnati platform, which, if carried out successfully, would preserve the Union a little longer. But the question arises, can Mr. Buchanan, if elected, carry out the principles of that platform, or the Constitution and laws, against all the opposing and combined elements that surround him, and with which he will have to compete and contend? Can either one stay the tide of strife and disunion, restore peace, confidence, security and protection, and arrest the progress of expatriation, murder and crime? Gentlemen of all parties, there are none such among you. Peace and union, justice and right have fled, no more to return, until an avenging God has made an inquisition for blood and brought down high and exalted looks. Division, discord, strife and crime, will go on and increase, and if suffered to slumber momentarily, it will only be like the oppressive calm that precedes and portends the devastating tempest—to burst forth with redoubled fury!

If any one enquires the cause of all this, I answer: This land is the birth-place of Prophets, and dedicated to the God of Heaven. Prophets and Apostles has he raised up on this land, in this generation—who have proclaimed the principles of eternal truth, and told this nation, (and others also) of their crimes and abominations, and of the judgments of the Almighty that were hanging over them, and warned them of their impending danger, and bore testimony to the truth of Almighty revealed to them from heaven. Mobs, with Governors and clergy at their heads, have risen up, murdered those Prophets and Apostles, the anointed ones of the Lord—their blood and the blood of Saints have flowed like water, and crimsoned freedom's soil, for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus, and their blood is now crying for vengeance, and thousands of American citizens have been expatriated because of truth and their religion; and the Nation by their silence have approbated the deed, and no redress has been had; only contumely and persecution. Was it not declared when those scenes were enacted in Missouri and Illinois, and when editors, priests, and people, were rejoicing in the murder of the Saints, that they should have their fill of the same scenes to their hearts' content. And have they not had them in "Bleeding Kansas," in the same counties, and in the same State, and the same leaders, with few exceptions, that led the Missouri mobbers against the Saints. Hence the reason of the strife, division, disunion, and crime, and overthrow will surely come; come it must, for the Lord God of Israel has declared it.

What do the greater portion of the political parties care for murder, bloodshed and rapine, or the welfare, prosperity and perpetuity of the Union if they do not militate against their party?

"Bleeding Kansas" has already been made the Theatre and base of operations for political cliquery and jugglery, murders and bloodshed, have been the fruits they desired, as the most potent, to make political capital; can any discerning or rational mind that has watched the steady acceleration of crime, mobocracy, licentiousness, political insanity—the trampling of law, justice and right with impunity, and the spirit of revenge and madness that exists, pervades, and envelops all ranks and parties, with few exceptions, from Congress down, and not perceive that the spirit of light, truth, peace, and justice, that characterized our Fathers, and councils of the nation and States—some years ago, have fled, and darkness, confusion, strife, and discord reigns, and what will the end be? The answer is plain. The sacrilegious hands that have already attacked the Constitution, to destroy and scatter the same to the winds, will never let go their grasp until their designs are accomplished and distraction exists in one general array, not only between the North and South, but throughout the States. We have already become a hiss and a by-word of contempt and reproach among the nations of the earth, in relation to the present fruits of this Glorious Republic, founded by our sires,—once the pride and joy of freemen—the admiration of a wondering world—now derided and trampelled upon by aspiring demagogues, for selfish motives, and unholy interests.

O my beloved country! O America! thou that gave me birth—the land of my fathers, where they fought, bled, and died, and where their ashes repose in peace. I love thee as I love my life—once the home of the free and brave sons of Columbia. The asylum of the poor and oppressed of all nations, where once law, right and justice could be found, and obtained by all,—rights then sacred—now trampled upon. Then once the brightest star in the galaxy of nations—thy name feared and revered by them—thy flag unfurled in every breeze, respected and honored on every sea—in every country and clime? Why is it that thy glory is departed? The answer is; because of the deeds of thy degenerate sons.

If our fathers could arise from their sleeping dust in tones of thunder they would say to their unworthy sons "stay you sacrilegious hands, repent of all your wickedness, make the laws honorable, stay the torrent of crime, abomination, pride, murder, and political insanity, prejudice, discord, disunion and whoredom, that is almost overwhelming you, and leading you headlong into the vortex of ruin, and final overthrow. Restore to the Saints of the Most High what you have suffered them to be robbed of and plundered, bring their murderers and mobbers to justice, and appoint wise men that fear God for rulers and judges. Then peace shall flourish and her heavenly mantle will be again thrown over Columbia's head, wisdom will be in the counsel of the nations, union restored, and happiness crown again your efforts." But will the nation do it? Verily, no. The fiat has gone forth, the decree has been made and without the foregoing requisitions it must surely come.

But are there no people dwelling on Columbia's soil that will uphold, protect, and preserve the Constitution? Yes! Away in the chambers of the West on the tops of the mountains towards the setting sun, are a people, a portion of whom, are American citizens, expatriated for their religion,—sons of Revolutionary sires,—a people despised, calumniated and persecuted, who have shown their loyalty to the laws and Constitution, under every circumstance. The leaders of whom know how to govern in wisdom, righteousness, and justice—among whom freedom and union reigns. Where the Constitution, that sacred relic is upheld, revered, and protected as a "Revelation of the Almighty to man." There, where peace and happiness dwell, where cities and towns spring up as by magic—where the Keys of Priesthood, salvation and eternal life to a lost and ruined world are held, where equal rights are extended to all, where but a few years ago the foot of the white man, save the mountain Trapper, had scarce ever trod, where the Indian with his Tomahawk and scalping knife roamed undisturbed in all his native wildness, where the howl of wolf, the angry growl of the bear, and the scream of the panther saluted his ear, and made music for him in midnight dreams in his romantic home. Where the black raven croaked in solemn accents the requiem of departing day far, far, from the abodes of civilized life.

And when political factions, and party strifes have done their work, and made a complete wreck and overthrow of this once beautiful and adored Republic, and the Constitution and laws completely trampled into the dust (cursed and despised, as they are by bigots and traiters already) and anarchy, and confusion reign triumphant through the land, then justice, mercy, and patriotism, will grasp the glorious legacy, the Constitution, and wend their way to the recesses of the Rocky Mountains, and convey it to the mountain home of the Saints of the Most High, in Deseret's peaceful vales, where they will rally around it, protect, uphold, and defend it with their life's blood from all sacrilegious hands, and after the judgments of Heaven have purified this nation, and all others, by the spirit of burning, and the refuge of lies and abomination are swept away, then will the Bold Eagle with that sacred instrument, together with the ensign "E Pluribus Unum," in his beak again plume his pinions—arise from his rocky home, and convey the same to all nations that are left, who will rally under their banner.

W. I. Appleby.

FOR THE MORMON.

Germany.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

Having finished the geographical, statistical and physical accounts of Germany, I will make now some illustrative remarks on the political, military and historical position of that country.

Every kingdom, duchy, principality and territory forms an independent government, having its own laws and rulers; but affairs concerning Germany's common welfare are brought and settled before the Diet which is constituted of representives of every government or state of that country. Those men however who act in the capacity of plenipotentiaries are not exactly chosen by the suffrage of the nation, but more through the influence of the different potentates and their friends, the clique aristocratique, so that the political bias of the members constituting the Federative Diet is in its very nature calculated to remove everything that might lead to a developement of a free, liberal constitution, and thus be pernicious to the established system of iron despotism. In the revolution of 1848, when the German nation spoke loud through the cannon's brazen mouth, and the governments were shaken to their very centre, the people succeeded for a short time in having representatives of their own, but on the re-establishment of the old régime, that democratic innovation was wholly annihilated.

In the sessions of the Diet which meets at Frankfort on the Maine, the Austrian envoy takes the chair, and has in relation to the formation, enactment or changes of laws, 4 votes. Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Hanover and Wirtemberg have 4 votes, but the grand duchies, duchies, principalities and cities of the Hanseatic League have 3, 2, or only 1 vote in proportion to the population, and area of the respective countries. Independent of the Federative Diet, there are sessions held in the capitals of every kingdom, duchy, territory or province, where the representatives chosen through governmental influence among the noble and rich, meet in the capacity of a first or second Chamber. In those assemblies, the members of which are only the political organs of the Rulers, propositions are being made and laws passed in strict conformity to the views of their respective governments.

After the restoration of Louis XVIII., to the throne of France, a treaty of peace was made with that monarch, and Germany regained once more those possessions which the ambition of Napoleon I., had wrenched from them. In consideration of the previous memorable events and disasters, the so-called Germanic Confederation was formed at the Congress of Vienna in 1815, for the purpose of maintaining the external and internal security of Germany, the independence and inviolability of the confederated states. The establishment of a perpetual Confederation was an important step to induce the different governments to act on the principle of union and common interest. History and experience have taught Germany the great lesson, that disunion and selfishness lead to destruction, and that union is power. If in 1805, Frederick William III., king of Prussia, had sent auxiliaries to Francis II., emperor of Austria, when called upon, and had thus helped his friend and neighbor, and laid aside the feelings of jealousy and selfishness arising from the times of the seven years' war, Napoleon I., would not have obtained a victory over the Austrian army in the famous battle of Austerlitz in Moravia, but being united with the Prussians who numbered about 70,000 men, Germany's allied monarchs would have been strong enough to repel the French army. But instead of helping, the king of Prussia stood aloof as it were and laughed in his sleves when the sad news of the defeat of Francis' army reached him, the joy of the infatuated monarch did however not last long. After the Austrians were routed, it was the Prussian' turn to be defeated in 1806 near Iena in Sax-Weimar, by the French, by which Frederick William III., lost nearly all his possessions.

If it had not been for disunion and other dishonest principles among the German Rulers, the Confederation of the Rhine would never have been formed, which drew many of the German states from their allegiance. The electors of Bavaria, Saxony, Wirtemberg and other potentates proved traitors to the cause of Germany, and sent auxiliaries to the French army, for which service they were made kings by Napoleon I., hence Francis II., emperor of Austria, could no longer hold any authority over the respective dominions, and seeing thus the ancient institutions of the empire of Germany overthrown, he resigned the title, crown and regalia of the German emperor on the 6th of Aug. 1806, and assumed the title of Francis I., emperor of Austria.

Germany, being a conglomeration of different governments and states, needs a master-genius to keep up the equilibrium of the many heterogeneous, political elements. It is well known to every historian, that since the decapitation of Louis XVI., in 1794, a great many revolutionary ideas have been propagated from France among the German nation, and that in despite of the great endeavors and exertions made by the rulers of that country, in order to prevent a general outbreak of popular dislike, more than once the Democratic party instigated by French emissaries, tried to carry out a coup d'état. The multitude could not help noticing, that their interests were sacrificed at the shrine of iron despotism, and imprudent and tyranic measures such as that of Count Hardenberg, the Prussian premier, who proposed the levying of new taxes to his sovereign, Frederick William III., after the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, when the country was drained as it were by the heavy contributions for foreign invaders, are well remembered by the people.

After the battle of Waterloo on the 18th of June 1815 and the re-establishment of a general peace, the Germans hoped to see their grievances redressed, but they soon discovered to their utter dismay, that the enunciation of cast-iron rules and laws of despotism, annulled every liberal innovation or improvement. In 1831 the revolution in France by which Charles X., brother of Louis XVIII., who died in 1824, was expelled, and Louis Philippe, duke of Orleans, placed on the throne, found an echo in many places of Germany.

It is true that the great military measures of the different potentates, put soon a stop to those disturbances, but the disaffection of the people increased, and kept burning like the cinders of a fire. In the spring of 1845 a riot of a very serious character, took place in Lower Silesia, arising from the oppression of the poor weavers by the rich and the mighty. The government instead of lending an ear to the complaints and lamentations of its subjects, and of improving their condition, had scores of the starving wretches murdered by the hireling troops, and martial law being proclaimed and enforced in the whole district, order was once more restored at the point of the bayonet. In 1846 the mismanagement of the provincial government caused a great scarcity of provisions in Upper Silesia, in a country which is one of the most fertile in the world, so that the poor were obliged to live on scanty and unwholesome food, such as flour made of the bark of trees, which brought on a contagious disease that was styled by the physicians the hunger-typhus, by which more than 30,000 people were carried off. As Silesia was the place of my residence at the time I witnessed a great many of those scenes, and remember well, that according to official reports, 10,000 orphan children were distributed among the different, neighboring districts, so that the people who had survived, were obliged to take care of those unhappy bereaved beings. This event in connection with the entire suppression of the liberty of the press, and the introduction of the most rigorous censure and a variety of other vexatious and oppressive laws and regulations, brought the country in a great state of ferment, till on the 18th and 19th of March 1848, a few months after the outbreak of the revolution in Paris, an insurrection took place in Berlin, which soon assumed the alarming character of a revolution. In Vienna, Dresden, Breslau, Stuttgart, in the grand duchy of Baden, and nearly throughout the different parts of Germany, the people took up arms, and murderous encounters took place between them and the military forces of the despotic rulers. But the nation being destitute of wise and brave leaders and seeing themselves forsaken before the cannon's mouth by those whom they believed to be the saviours of their country, became disheartened, and gave way, dispersed, and many realized that the hour of liberty had not yet come, and sought an asylum in more congenial climes.

But although the revolution in 1848 has failed, the people have learned one important lesson, viz, to be united, to take a greater interest in political matters, and enlighten their minds in relation to governmental affairs. It is a fact that the present rulers are in constant fear of a revolution. It is their night-mare, and the least indication or manifestation of popular dislike makes them tremble and grasp the hilts of their swords, and they have every reason to be uneasy, as nothing but the physical power of the bayonet, keeps the millions of disaffected and dissatisfied quiet and in order. Hence every town or city has a strong garrison in proportion to the number of inhabitants and its strategic importance. The potentates further know, that as soon as those garrisons or standing armies are withdrawn from their different stations, the Democrats and Republicans will embrace the opportunity and rise en masse. The police is aware of the increasing ferment and hatred of the nation towards royalty, hence the governments try their utmost to compose external or foreign differences and to maintain a strict neutrality in every casus belli; and are even willing to sacrifice their political influence with foreign nations, before they allow their armies to leave their territories. Independent of the German revolutionary elements, the Poles, Italians Hungarians, are as close neighbors, always watching every political movement in Germany and are anxious to improve the first chance of uniting themselves with the German Republicans, and thereby shaking off the shackles of their bondage. This uncertain state of affairs compels the different monarchs to keep large armies ready to take the field in case of emergency.

The law makes every able-bodied man, whether poor or rich, high or low, from the age of 20–50, subject to military duty. Every recruit has to be in active service for three years, at the end of which period, he serves in the militia, is dismissed on uncertain furlough, and has to be ready at a moment's warning to to join his regiment. The forces of the different governments number about 1,000,000 of men, out of which the army of the German Confederation maintaining 400,000 and 1600 cannon, is drafted. The army of the king of Prussia is the largest of the German Powers, and numbers 600,000 men, 70,000 horses and 1200 cannon of field artillery, independent of the vast material of siege trains. The organization of the different military departments are excellent and in the best possible order, so that the Commanding General can have within a fortnight the whole army (not an army of raw recruits, but of old, experienced soldiers) under arms, ready to take the field, which was last done in 1848 and '49. The developement of such imposing military forces put soon a stop to the revolution.

According to Tacitus, the Roman historian, and Julius Cæsar, the great Roman tactician and statesman, primeval forests and swamps covered in ancient times Germany, and miasmatic vapors and fogs were continually hovering over the country. Wild beasts were abundant. The inhabitants themselves did live in huts or tents made of skins, and their main occupations were hunting, fishing and war. Tacitus describes the different tribes, as tall, stately-looking, brave people, dressed in skins. They were heathens and in some parts of the present Prussia, they worshipped snakes. The Island of Ruegen was the residence of the goddess Hertha, who from time to time, made her public appearance, riding in a chariot, drawn by oxen, and accompanied by priests; wherever she went, strife and war ceased, and peace was proclaimed. On her return to the island, she was bathed with the chariot and team in a deep lake, and the priests who officiated in that ceremony were engulfed by the blue waves of that mysterious water. The fall of the western Roman empire was caused by the entire defeat of the Roman Legions by Herman, a prince of the Cherusker tribe, and thus the Germans shook off the Roman yoke. On the demise of Augustulus, the last Roman emperor, in 475, the so-called western Roman empire came to an end. In the succeeding centuries, the Ostogoths, Huns and Lombards had the sway over Germany, and in the year 800, Charlemagne, king of France, re-established the western Roman empire. By a consent of Nicephorous, emperor of the east, Charlemagne was crowned emperor in Rome by pope Leo III. That prince established the Christian religion in Germany. The successors of Charlemagne caused, by a partition of the empire, incessant feuds and wars. On the death of Louis III., without a male issue, the crown of the empire was conferred upon Conrad, the count of Franconia, a relation of Louis, and thus the French ceased to rule over Germany. Rudolphus, count of Habsburg, was elected emperor in 1273. He was the head of the house of Austria, from which descended Francis I., the father of Joseph II., and Leopold. In 1740 a Bavarian prince was elected emperor by the name of Charles VII. That monarch died in 1745 and Francis I., grand duke of Tuscany (in Italy) was chosen emperor. The descendents of the house of Habsburg and Hohenzollern, viz, Joseph of Austria and Frederick William IV. of Prussia are at present the most powerful and influential rulers in Germany, to whose will the smaller potentates have more or less to submit.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas la montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Hold Up Thy Head.

SELECTED.

Hold up thy head! Thou must not tread
The path of life with downcast vision;
But meet the gale, and never quail;—
Face it with stern decision.

Hold up thy head! Thou wert not made
To tremble at imagined trouble:
Whate'er may thwart—a valiant heart
Will make thine armor double.

Hold up thy head, if thou wilt shed
An influence round thee bright and cheerful;
The man who leads to glorious deeds
Can ne'er himself be fearful.

Hold up thy head, if thou wilt spread
Thy standard on the heights of glory—
If thou wilt climb the mount of Time,
And scale its summits hoary.

Hold up thy head! Ay, never dread
The task thy God to thee hath given
Hold up thy head! and firmly tread
The rugged road to Heaven!

The Gunner's Shot—A Thrilling Scene.

Our noble ship lay at anchor in the bay of Tangier, a fortified town in the extreme northwest of Africa. The day had been extremely mild, with a gentle breeze sweeping to the northward and westward, but towards the close of the afternoon the sea-breeze died away, and one of those sultry, oven-like atmospheric breathings came from the great sun-burnt Sahara. Half an hour before sundown the captain gave the order to the boatswain to call the hands to go in a swimming, and in less than five minutes the forms of our tars were seen leaping from the gangways, the ports, the nettings, bowsprit, and some of the more venturesome took their leap from the arms of the lower yard. One of the studding sails had been lowered into the water, with its corners suspended from the main yard arm and swinging boom, and into this the swimmers made their way.

Among those who seemed to be enjoying the sport most heartily were two of the boys, Tim Wallace and Fred Fairbanks, the latter of whom was the son of our old gunner, and in a laughing mood they started out from the scudding sail on a race. There was a loud ringing shout of joy on their lips as they put off, and they started through the water like fishes. The surface of the sea was as smooth as glass, though its bosom rose in long and heavy swells that set in from the Atlantic. The vessel was moored, with a long sweep from both cables, and the buoy on the starboard anchor was far away on the starboard quarter, where it rose and fell with the swells like a dranken man.

Toward the buoy the lads made their way Fred Fairbanks taking the lead, when they were within twenty or thirty fathoms of the buoy. Tim shot ahead and promised to win the race. The old gunner watched the progress of his son with a vast deal of pride, and when he saw him drop behind, he leaped upon the poop, and was on the point of urging him on by a shout, when a cry reached him that made him start as if he had been struck by a cannon ball.

"A shark! a shark!" come from the captain of the fore-castle, and at the sound of the terrible words the men who were in the water leaped and plunged toward the ship.

Right abeam, at the distance of three or four cables' length, a shark wake was seen in the water, where the back of the monster was visible. His course was for the boys. For a moment the gunner stood like one bereft of sense, but on the next he shouted at the top of his voice for the boys to turn, but the little fellows heard him not. Stoutly the two swimmers strove for the goal, all unconscious of the fearful death spirit that hovered so near them. Their merry laugh still rang out over the waters, and at length they both touched the buoy together.

Oh! what drops of agony started from the brow of our old gunner. A boat had put off but Fairbanks knew that it could not reach them in season, and every moment he expected to see the monster sink from sight, and then he knew that all hope would be gone. At that moment a cry reached the ship that went through every heart like a stream of fire—the boys had discovered their enemy!

The cry started old Fairbanks to his senses, and quicker than thought he sprang to the quarter deck. The guns were all loaded and shotted fore and aft and none knew their temper better than he. With a steady hand, made strong by sudden hope, the old gunner seized a priming wire and picked the cartridge of one of the guns—then he took from his pocket a percussion wafer, and set it in its place, and set back the hammer of the patent lock. With a steady, giant strength, the old man swayed the breach of his heavy gun to its bearing, and then, seizing the string lock, he stood back and watched for the next swell that would bring the shark in range. He had aimed the piece some distance of his mark, but yet a single moment would settle his hopes and fears.

Every breath was hushed, and every heart in that old ship beat painfully. The boat was yet some distance from the boys, while the horrible sea monster was fearfully near. Suddenly the air was awoke by the roar of a heavy gun, and as the old man knew his shot was gone, he sank back on the combing of the hatch, and covered his face with his hands as if afraid to see the result of his efforts, for if he had failed he knew his boy was lost.

For a moment after the report of the gun died away upon the air, there was a dead silence, but as the smoke arose from the surface of the water, there was at first a low murmur breaking from the lips of the men; that murmur grew louder and stronger, until it swelled to a joyous, deafening shout. The old gunner sprang to his feet and gazed out upon the water, and the first thing that met his view was the huge carcase of the shark, floating with its belly up, a mangled mass.

In a few moments the boat reached the daring swimmers, and half dead with fright they were brought on board. The old man clasped his boy in his arms, and then overcome by the powerful excitement, he leaned upon the gun for support. I have seen men in all the phases of excitement and suspense, but never have I seen three hundred human beings more overcome by thrilling emotions than on that eventful moment when they first knew of the effect of the gunner's shot.

Dr. Kane's Arctic Explorations.

Dr. Kane's narrative of his Arctic explorations in search of Sir John Franklin, during the years 1853, 1854 and 1855, is now before the public. The publishers have done everything that lay in their power to fulfil the promises of their prospectus in regard to the illustrations and typographical arrangements of the work, and its appearance is in every way worthy of the importance and all absorbing interest of the text. The artistical designs are of a high order of merit, and the engravers have done the fullest justice to those peculiarities of light and shade with which the Arctic atmosphere abounds. Some of these effects are reproduced with almost as great fidelity as they could possibly have been through the medium of colors, and therefore, in an artistic as well as in a scientific sense, the work is one of the most attractive that has ever been presented to the American public.

Of the narrative itself it is impossible to speak in terms of too high commendation. It is, in fact, a model of style in its particular line. Whilst it is full and precise in the description, it is never redundant, never discursive, and seizes only such points of interest as are legitimate and which bear directly upon the objects of the expedition. In other words there is less of egotism in it than we expected to find, considering the peculiar position and responsibilities of the author, and the remarkable degree to which his companions were indebted to his judgment, coolness and presence of mind for their escape from the manifold dangers by which they were beset. Whilst, with the modesty inseperable from true merit Dr. Kane keeps as much as possible in the background his own personal exertions and services, he brings out into the fullest and broadest relief the merits of those gallant men whose fidelity and constancy, under every trial, enabled him to achieve the important scientific results which have rewarded his labors. The warmth with which he speaks of their personal devotion and the tenderness with which he treats the failings of those whose weakness was occasionally productive of inconvenience and embarrassment to the expedition, mark the generosity and nobleness of his nature, and show that he possesses in an eminent degree the qualities necessary to constitute a successful leader.

On the results attained by the expedition—the most important, with the exception of that of Captain Wilkes, that has ever left our coasts, it is unnecessary for us to dilate. They have been so fully stated in Dr. Kane's report to the Secretary of the Navy, and so thoroughly elucidated in the scientific controversies to which that report has given rise, both here and abroad, that there is no occasion for us to dwell upon them at any length. It is sufficient to say that to Dr. Kane belongs the merit of completing the discoveries of previous Arctic explorers, and of confirming the theory propounded by Lieut. Maury, in 1850, of the existence of an open, iceless sea near the region of the Parry islands. But this is but a small part of the service which the expedition under Dr. Kane has rendered science. Continuing his surveys at Cape Sabine, the last determined position of Captain Inglefield, he completed the circuit of the straits and bay known as Smit's Sound, beside elucidating several other important geographical points which previous navigators had left unsettled.

Whether considered, then, in a purely scientific light, or as a work in which our feelings of national pride are interested, from the courage, energy and unflinching resolution displayed in its accomplishment, this expedition must be regarded as one which has shed the brightest honor and lustre on our country.

Future ages will point to it as one of the most daring and successful of the numerous hardy adventures undertaken in the cause of science, and the names of Dr. Kane and his companions will be associated with the most honored of the reputations which are linked with the extension of geographical knowledge. Such being the fact, it gratifies us to find the published narrative of the expedition such as is calculated to heighten the interest with which it is already viewed. Both author and publishers have done their best to satisfy the public expectation in this respect, and it is but just to them to say that rarely have such high anticipations been so successfully fulfilled.—[New York Herald, Oct. 19.

Important Telegraphic Achievement.

London Oct. 3—5 o'clock A. M.

My Dear Sir—As the electrician of the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, it is with the highest gratification that I have to apprize you of the result of our experiments of this morning upon a single continuous conductor of more than 2,000 miles in extent, a distance, you will perceive, sufficient to cross the Atlantic Ocean, from Newfoundland to Ireland.

The admirable arrangements made at the Magnetic Telegraph office, in Old Broad street for connecting ten subterranean gutta percha insulated conductors, of over 200 miles each, so as to give one continuous length of more than 2,000 miles, during the hours of the night when the telegraph is not commercially employed, furnished us the means of conclusively settling, by actual experiment, the question of practicability as well as the practicality of telegraphing through our proposed Atlantic cable.

This result had been thrown into some doubt by the discovery, more than two years since of certain phenomena upon subterranean and submarine conductors, and had attracted the attention of electricians—particularly of that most eminent philosopher, Professor Faraday, and that clear-sighted investigator of electrical phenomena, Dr. Whitehouse—and one of these phenomena, to wit, the perceptible retardation of the electric current, threatened to perplex our operations and require careful investigation before we could pronounce with certainty the commercial practicability of the ocean telegraph.

I am most happy to inform you that, as a crowning result of long series of experimental investigation and inductive reasoning upon this subject, the experiments under the direction of Dr. Whitehouse and Mr. Bright, which I witnessed this morning, in which the induction coils and receiving magnets, as modified by these gentlemen, were made to actuate one of my recording instruments, have most satisfactorily resolved all doubts of the practicability as well as practicality of operating the telegraph from Newfoundland to Ireland.

Although we telegraphed signals at the rate of 210,241, and according to the count of one time even of 270 per minute upon my telegraphic register (which speed you will perceive is at a rate commercially advantageous), these results were accomplished, notwithstanding many disadvantages in our arrangements, of a temporary and local character—disadvantages which will not occur in the use of our submarine cable.

Having passed the whole night with my active and agreeable collaborators, Dr. Whitehouse and Mr Bright, without sleep, you will excuse the hurried and brief character of this note, which I could not refrain from sending you, since our experiments this morning settle the scientific and commercial points of our enterprise satisfactorily. With respect and esteem your obedient servant,

Saml. F. B. Morse.

Mode of Electing a President in America.

A few words to explain the legal forms of the election of the President may not be out of place. It is not done by direct election, but through an electoral college, to which each State of the Union sends delegates. In the first week of November every State names as many electors for this body as it has members in Congress, with two more, called "senatorial electors," as every State, small or large, has two representatives in the Senate of the Union. It is believed that the original intention of the framers of the constitution was that this electoral college should choose the President at its own discretion; but, practically, it soon lost the power, and now the members are merely delegates from the predominating party in every State, which has previously nominated its candidate for the presidency and vice-presidency at a general convention, as Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Breckenridge were "put up" at Cincinnati. No senator, representative, or person holding any office of trust under the Government, can be a member of the electoral college. Any one voter in the State votes for all the names on his party list who are pledged to Fremont or Buchanan, as the case may be. The decision of this election is, in fact, the decision of that of the President if any candidate gains the absolute majority of the electorial "tickets" of the different States. In the meeting of this college, the members vote for a President and Vice-President separately, and the list specifying each vote is signed, sealed, and sent to Washington, to be opened in the presence of both Houses by the President of the Senate. The candidates having the majority are declared President and Vice-President for four years. If no one name has a majority—which, when there are three or more candidates, may happen—the House of Representatives elects from among those who have the highest number; but in this case it votes by States, that is each State has only one vote for President, though it may, like New York, have more than 30 members in the Chamber. The Vice President (who is also Speaker of the Senate) may be elected first, if he is not fixed on by the majority of the college, and this provides for the difficulty that would arise from Congress not being able to agree on the appointment of President before the 4th of March; the Vice-President once elected, and the decision of the House protracted too long, whoever is Vice-President on that date becomes ex officio the chief Magistrate of the Federation. Thus, if the election is not decided by the majority of the electoral college, and Mr. Breckenridge is made Vice-President when it "goes to the House," if the Chamber cannot agree by the 4th of March, that gentleman will gain the chief office, though he is candidate only for the second. But all the real work of the election, the "campaign," is done outside these legals forms, and various and astonishing are the means by which "the masses" are moved.—[New York Correspondence of The Times.

Rules for Restoring the Drowned.

The following rules are the result of half a year's investigation of Apnœa and Asphyxia—a subject on which I propose to prosecute still further, knowing that truth only comes of long continued labor and research. I wish especially to put to the test of careful experiment the correctness of the dogma, that if the heart has once ceased to beat its action can never be restored—a dogma calculated to paralyse our efforts in many cases in which hope may really not be totally extinct.

1. Treat the patient instantly, on the spot, in the open air, except in severe weather, freely exposing his face, neck, and chest to the breeze.

2 Send with all speed for medical aid, and for articles of clothing, blankets, &c.

3. Place the patient gently on the face, with one arm under the forehead, so that any fluids may flow from the throat and mouth; and, without loss of time,

I.—To Excite Respiration,

4. Turn the patient on his side, and

(i.) Apply snuff or other irritant to the nostrils.

(ii.) Dash cold water on the face previously rubbed briskly until it is warm.

If there be no success, again lose no time; but,

II.—To Imitate Respiration,

5. Replace the patient on his face; (when the tongue will then fall forward, and leave the entrance to the windpipe free;) then,

6. Turn the body gently, but completely, on the side and a little beyond (when inspiration will occur), and then on the face, making gentle pressure along the back (when expiration will take place), alternately: these measures must be repeated deliberately, efficiently, and perseveringly, fifteen times in the minute only; meanwhile,

III.—To induce Circulation and Warmth, continuing these measures,

7. Rub the limbs upwards, with firm pressure and with energy, using handkerchiefs, &c., for towels.

8. Replace the patient's wet clothing by such other covering as can be instantly procured, each bystander supplying a coat, waistcoat, &c.

These rules are founded on physiology; and whilst they comprise all that can be immediately done for the patient, exclude all apparatus, galvanism, the warm bath, &c., as useless, not to say injurious, especially the last of these; and all loss of time in removal, &c., as fatal.—[Lancet, Aug. 2.

Political Meetings.

In our neutral position in politics we have abstained from giving in our columns reports of the great doings, first, because we were not present—secondly because we are slow to believe the reports of the press for or against the party reported. The Picayune of the 18th inst. has a capital hit on the subject that favors our course. Here it is:

How we Report Political Meetings.

From the Daily Porcupine.

The Republican mass meeting at Bellwetherville, N. J., yesterday was the largest of the campaign, as several of the speakers said, who have been participants in the contest from the beginning. Far as the eye could reach from the stand, there was one solid sea of heads, whose waves roared with one united tone of approval when some happy allusion was made to the great principles involved, and rose on their feet at every glowing period as if those waves were about to be torn up by the very roots. No less than 120,000 people could have been on the ground—the air was one mass of banners and flags, through which the sun with difficulty penetrated. Thousands of those present had come hundreds of miles to be present on the occasion. The enthusiasm was boundless. The men cheered, and the ladies darkened the air with white waving handkerchiefs at every happy hit. A drove of oxen was roasted, beside two hundred head of sheep, but they were demolished in about ten minutes. After the dinner the speaking was resumed, and the enthusiasm again reached a high point. It was cheering to the Republican heart to see this. New Jersey is safe for Fremont.

Another Report of the Same Meeting.

From the Evening Distress.

The Republican Mass Meeting at Bellwetherville, N. J., yesterday, was a ludicrous fizzle. There were about five hundred individuals present counting the geese on the common. About an hour after the meeting commenced, an infant school was let out in the vicinity, which joining the meeting materially swelled the crowd. A sick calf was killed, and an attempt made to roast it for the "Grand Barbacue," but unluckily it fell off the spit into the fire and was burnt to a cinder. However, this made no difference, as before it was done, the people wearied of the monotonous twaddle with its everlasting Free Speech, Free Kansas, etc., ad disgustem, had gone home to their dinners. After dinner a few idlers loafed back to the place of meeting, and another attempt was made by the speakers to get up an excitement—but it was a miserable failure. The only enthusiasm we saw exhibited was by an old colored lady, who waved what was supposed to be a handkerchief at the close of Senator Wilson's remarks. On investigation, however, it was found, she was only flapping out her husband's shirt previous to hanging it on the wash line. At about half-past 8 the meeting adjourned. The friends of Fillmore need have no fear about New Jersey.

Bone Dust on Old Pastures.

A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph gives an account of the following experiment: "On a piece of light soil that had been pastured for a period upward of thirty-five years, and which had been broken up deeply, and with an even and perfectly inverted furrow slice the previous autumn, I sowed twenty-five bushels of bone dust and ashes, half and half, after horrowing and sowing on oats two and three-fourth bushels to the acre, the surface being limited by accurate measurement. On an adjoining piece of equal extent, sowed also in oats, the same quantity as in the first case, twelve bushels of ashes alone were used, and on a third piece—one acre in extent—the oats were sowed without ashes or other stimulant whatever being applied. The same quantity of seed, precisely, was allowed on the same day, as was the preparation of the soil and harrowing in the seed.

On harvesting and thrashing the crop, I ascertained the following results: The acre not manured produced twenty-one and a half bushels; straw, tall and heavy. The acre manured with twelve bushels of wood ashes, yielded twenty-seven bushels and five quarts, with thinner and more delicate straw, while the product of the boned ashes amounted to forty-seven and three-fourths bushels, the straw being fine and short and the principal development being in the heads."

Trait of Indian Character.

There is one trait in Indian character which civilized society would derive much profit by imitating. Envy is a quality unknown to the savages. When a warrior has performed any deed of daring, his merit is freely accorded by all his associate braves; his deeds are extolled in every public and private reunion, and his name is an incentive to generous emulation. I never witnessed any envious attempt to derogate from the merit of a brave's achievement. No damning with faint praise; none

"Willing to wound and yet afraid to strike;"

no faltering inuendoes that the man has not accomplished so much, after all. The same way with the women. When a woman's husband has distinguished himself, her neighbors one and all, take a pride in rejoicing with her over her happiness. If a woman displays more ingenuity than common in ornamenting her husband's war-dress, or in adding any fancy work to her own habiliments, she at once becomes the pattern of the neighborhood. You see no flaws picked in her character because of her rising to note; no aspersions cast upon her birth or present standing. Such and such is her merit, and it is deserving of our praise; the fact perceived, it receives full acknowledgment.

Enemies.

A man who has no enemies, is seldom good for anything. He is made of that kind of material which is so easily worked that everyone tries a hand at it. A sterling character—one who speaks for himself and speaks what he thinks—is always sure to have enemies. They are as neccessary to him as fresh air. They keep him alive and active. A celebrated person who was surrounded by enemies, used to say: "They are sparks which, if you do not blow them, go out of themselves." Let this be your feeling while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you. If you stop to dispute, you do but as they desire, and open the way for more abuse. Let the poor fellows talk. There will be a reaction, if you do but perform your duty; and hundreds who were once alienated from you will flock to you and acknowledge their error.

Sydney Smith on Swearing.

Sydney Smith, when traveling in a stage coach one day, was annoyed by a young man who had acquired the habit of swearing to such an extent that he could not help interlarding his discourses with it, as though it were a constituent part of the language. As there was a lady present, the matter was doubly annoying. After enduring the young man's display for some time, "the wag, wit, and vicar," as one of his Cockney admirers called him, asked permission to tell the company a little annecdote, and thus commenced: "Once upon a time (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) there was a king of (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) England, who at a grand ball, (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) picked up the Dutchess of (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) Shrewsbnry's garter (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) and said: "Honi soit qui mal y (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) pense, which means in English, 'Evil be to him who evil thinks. This was the origin of (boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes) the order of the garter."

When Sydney Smith had concluded, the young gentleman said: "A very good story, Sir—rather old—but what the devil has boots, sugar tongs, and tinder boxes to do with it."

"I will tell you, my friend, when you tell me what 'd—n my eyes,' &c., have to do with our conversation. In the mean time, allow me to say, that's my style of swearing."

Don't Worry.

When Bulstrode Whitelock was embarked as Cromwell's envoy to Sweden, in 1753, he was much disturbed in mind as he rested in Harwich on the preceding night, which was very stormy, while he reflected on the distracted state of the nation. It happened that a confidential servant slept in an adjacent bed, who, finding that his master could not sleep, said:

"Pray, sir, will you give me leave to ask you a question?"

"Certainly."

"Pray, sir, don't you think God governed the world very well before you came into it?"

"Undoubtedly."

"And pray, sir, don't you think that he will govern it quite as well when you are gone out of it?"

"Certainly."

"Then, sir, pray excuse me; but don't you think you may as well trust Him to govern it as long as you live?"

To this question Whitelock had nothing to reply; but, turning about, soon fell asleep, till he was summoned to embark.

A Good Wife.

In the eighty-fourth year of his age, Doctor Calvin Chapin wrote of his wife: "My domestic enjoyments have been, perhaps, as near perfection as the human condition permits. She made my home the pleasantest spot on earth to me. And now that she is gone, my worldly loss is perfect."

How many a poor fellow would be saved from suicide, from the penitentiary, and the gallows, every year, had he been blessed with such a wife!

"She made home the pleasantest spot to me on earth." What a grand tribute to that woman's love, and piety, and common sense! Rather different was the testimony of an old man some three years ago in the Tombs yard of this city. "I didn't intend to kill my wife;" but she was a very aggravating woman." Let each wife inquire, "Which wife am I?—[Hall's Journal of Health.

Poor Living.

A good Methodist minister, in the West, who lived on a very small salary, was greatly troubled to get his quarterly installment. He called on his steward a number of times, but had each time been put off with some excuse. His wants at length becoming urgent, he went to his steward and told him that he must have his money, as his family were suffering for the necessaries of life.

"Money!" replied the steward. "You preach for money! I thought you preached for the good of souls."

"Souls!" replied the minister. "I can't eat souls; and if I could, it would take a thousand such as yours to make a decent meal!"

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 1, 1856.

Popular Sovereignty.

WHAT is meant by popular sovereignty is a question that we very often have put to us. In answering this interrogatory, we shall at the same time give our views upon it; for so complicated are the views of men in relation to this subject, that one may as well attempt to describe the modern christian religion and tell what it is, as it now exists, as to explain men's views about popular sovereignty.

In the investigation of this subject it may be necessary first to define the meaning of the term "popular." The word popular in this sense is derived from "people," and signifies any thing in which the majority of the people in a town, district or county are supposed to acquiesce; it may be for that which is good, or for that which is bad—for right or for wrong—for virtue or for vice—for justice or for injustice. What the people desire—is popular sovereignty, without respect to any principle but their wish; hence, if the people are good, virtuous and pure, goodness, virtue and purity will be popular; if vicious, corrupt and debauched, debauchery, corruption and vice will be popular. Popular does not always imply law-abiding; it frequently implies a breach of law, as in France during the Revolution, as under the administration of Indians on the Van Rensellaer estates in New York, as under the administration of Lynch law in the south, the insurrection in Kansas, the Vigilance Committee in California, the fillibustering in Cuba and other places, and as in the frequent expulsions, robberies and murders of the Mormons by their persecutors; all these were in their own spheres popular movements. This word, however, has a more significant meaning when the term sovereignty is applied to it, and embraces within itself order, law and power: hence the terms combined, as used in this nation, signify the rule and government of the people.

In explaining this subject we shall have to go, as we do in religious matters, to the foundation, and not to the construction given us by others. What is man in his original state? The answer is, a sovereign. A sovereign over what? Over his own family, and originally he possesses the power of governing them without any laws but those of his own making. He, in fact, combines within himself the law making department; he is the judiciary or judge of that law and the executive; he is in every sense of the word a sovereign, so far as his power extends.

What are governments? A combination of sovereigns, who have delegated certain powers, under certain restrictions, for the mutual protection and general benefit of the whole, except where those governments are obtained and upheld by the sword. When this is the case, the people are made use of, by the governed, as goods and chattles, and ruled without their consent. A sovereign implies a governor or ruler, and Popular Sovereignty, if it means anything, means the rule of the people, or the voice, will and free consent of the people in their own rule and government. When the legislators or lawmakers, the judiciary or law interpreters, and the Executive or law administrators, are all chosen either directly by the people—the governed—or by and with their full and free consent, such a government is a government of the people—properly called Republican, or vox populi—terms very significant, but very much abused.

Our State Governments may very properly be called so many popular sovereignties, because their constitutions were accepted and approved by the people, or their delegates; and as their delegates are chosen by them, they represent their constituents, or their people.

Their Governors and Legislators, too, are also chosen by the people, and every citizen has a free, untrammeled voice in their election, and where there is a difference of sentiment the majority governs by mutual consent; the minority, for peace and quiet, and according to constitutional usage adopted by the whole people, submitting to the majority. Judges, Marshals, States Attorneys, Justices of the Peace, Constables, and all State and County officers, are either directly elected by the people or appointed in a manner provided by them; hence also directed by the people, or popular. The Federal Government, being a combination of the several free and independent popular sovereignties, is itself also a popular sovereignty; for as in the several States each man, or sovereign, gives up a certain specified amount of his own individual rights for the mutual advantage and protection of all; so each of those States, or popular sovereignties, cedes a certain specified portion of its rights for the mutual protection of the whole, or united commonwealth, government, or popular sovereignty. The Constitution of the United States is an instrument agreed to by the people of the United States or by the people's representatives, and may be considered the great "Magna Charta" of American rights. It is a compromise, or an agreement by which the people have pledged themselves to be governed, and the fulfilments and requirements of which are rendered obligatory by oath upon all the public functionaries of the United States; and they are placed under the same restrictions to fulfil its requirements as the representatives of the separate State sovereignties are to abide by the Constitution of the several States; with this difference, that the latter pledge themselves not only to observe and abide the Constitution of their several States where they reside, but also the Constitution of the United States. Thus in every sense of the word both the State governments and that of the United States are popular sovereignties. The former, being so many separate governments, governed by the people, and the latter a number of people's governments, or popular sovereignties, uniting in one general popular sovereignty.

With any of the above governments the people have no right to complain. If there are abuses they have their remedy in the ballot-box; thus abuses can only be short-lived. Some find fault, however, with the Constitution; still they have their remedy, for that instrument provides "That it may be amended or altered by a 'two-third vote,'" a precaution necessary in so important an instrument; for no evil can be of sufficient importance to nullify, abrogate, or alter any part of that compromise that cannot be seen and felt by two-thirds of the citizens of the United States. So much, then, for the popular sovereignty of the several States and of the United States.

Now let us turn our attention to the Territories and inquire how far Popular Sovereignty extends over them. It may be asked by some, Does not Popular Sovereignty extend over them as it exists in the States? We answer emphatically—No! There is scarcely a vestige of that doctrine to be found in the Territories, and by a strange anomaly a nation like the United States, composed of thirty-one separate and independent Popular Sovereignties, itself a government of Popular Sovereignties, should, in every other place and in every other department and form, be governed by the voice of the people; but in the Territories, and in regard to them, a spirit of despotism reigns, at once anti-republican, anti-popular sovereign, and altogether at variance with the spirit and genius of our institutions. They are simply copied after the British Colonial rule, and this might well be a cause of surprise to be wondered at, inasmuch as the very framers of the Constitution were so well acquainted with and complained so bitterly against its unjust, unequal, and oppressive enactments. It is not a principle well understood by those who emigrate to new Territories, yet it is nevertheless a fact that as soon as a citizen of the United States leaves the State that he resides in, and becomes an inhabitant of a Territory of the United States, his political franchise and popular sovereignty cease, his political freedom is rendered nugatory, and he is placed in a state of dependance or tutelage; he is no longer a popular sovereign; he is virtually and really under the direction and guidance of others, who are his self-constituted guardians without his choice; who dictate to him without any redress, and who rule him without his voice. It is true that a Territory has its Legislature, its House of Representatives, and its Council, chosen by the people; but this is only nominal; a foreign government, that he has no voice in choosing, can nullify, at its will, any of the Territorial enactments, just as much as the British Imperial Government can nullify any of the acts of a colonial legislature. To talk, then, about Popular Sovereignty existing in the Territories is perfect nonsense, a mere political ruse which may serve to amuse children, but which is a perpetual annoyance and an imposition to all intelligent men. If we, however, examine the Constitution of the United States, we shall find that no such privilege is granted to Congress, by that instrument, to make laws for, and dictate to, the Territories in the manner which at present prevails. We will briefly examine everything that is found in the Constitution, or the amendments to the Constitution, in relation to this matter.

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory, or other property, belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State."

Now if we examine the above carefully, we shall find that it relates to land as territory, or "property of the United States," and not to legislative or judical authority. Here let us remark that it is one thing to make rules and regulations respecting the Territory and property belonging to the United States, and another thing to legislate for, and dictate to, the people living on those lands as popular Sovereigns in a territorial capacity. The above clause refers to "property" and to claims, and the people of the territories are neither the one nor the other; but form a part of the government or proprietorship; for every citizen of the United States is part owner in its public domains, has a voice legally and constitutionally in its disposition, has a right, so far as his vote extends, to influence all public measures, and no man, nor body of men, has a right constitutionally, to govern him, or dictate to him without his consent. If the above clause had read: "Congress shall have power to make laws for the government of the people of the Territories of the United States," then indeed, however, unjust, unequal and anti-popular sovereign the clause might be, yet we ought not to complain, as being a party to the grand compact, and as such we ought to submit with the best grace we could on finding ourselves disfranchised in a new Territory, and abide a bad law until we could legally change it. But the above article does not touch upon this, it relates only to territorial property and claims.

We will now examine another clause in Art. I, Sec. 8, after speaking of the powers of Congress on various subjects, we have the following:

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of the government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings; and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States; or in any department or officer thereof."

Here then is a governmental authority specifically pointed out and the Congress is endowed with all power necessary to govern. How different the powers granted here to those contained in the forementioned article; there it refers to territorial lands and claims, here to laws, rule and government. But how far does this power extend? To all the territories of the United States? No. But to "exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square.") This then is the bounds of their exclusive legislative authority without the consent of the people; with the exception of forts, arsenals, dock-yards, and public buildings of the United States, purchased from the States as United States property. In the District of Columbia, Congress legislates for the people, the same as State Legislatures legislate for their several States, and they are the only people, with the exception of the officers of the United States, that are or can be constitutionally governed by Congress.

As we wish strictly to analyze this matter and to bring out everything that can in the least refer thereto, we will next examine a clause on the judicary:

Art. III. Sec. 2. "The trial of all crimes except by impeachment shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed."

The above does, and only can refer to unorganized Indian Territory, where there is no local legislature or government, and hence if citizens of the United States go into unorganized territory and there commit overt acts, they shall be judged for those acts in a place appointed by Congress for that purpose; this could not apply to organized territories for there they have their legislature, their officers, courts and prisons, &c.

In the above we have exhibited the utmost extent of power given to Congress, in relation to Territories, or the government of the people, without their consent and authority except in the District of Columbia, and that is simply none at all.

Congress, in reality, have no right to dictate to the people of the territories, and any such interference is an assumption of power which is unconstitutional and not possessed by them. The rights of the people are most sacredly guarded by the Constitution. That instrument does indeed guarantee a strickly republican form of government, a Popular Sovereignty both in law and in fact, and for fear of a misunderstanding on these points in Art. IX, of the amendments to the Constitution, we have the following:

"The enumeration in the constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."

And again, in

Act. X. "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people."

Can anything be plainer than the above, as to the rights of the people as popular sovereigns? What they have not given to Congress they retain, and as they never gave Congress power to rule them without their consent, when Congress exercises a power of that nature, it is merely an assumption that they have no right to exact. Furthermore, Congress are as much bound by the articles of the Constitution as individuals are; and they are bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. See Art. VI.

It may be asked here, do not the people of the Territory govern themselves? We again answer No. Who appoints the Territorial Governors? Do the people elect them? No. The people are not consulted in the matter; they are appointed by the President of the United States, with the consent and ratification of the United States Senate. Who appoints their Judges? Have the people any voice? No. They are appointed by the same power, as are also the Prosecuting Attorney, and Secretary of the Territory, and the Marshall. But it may be said, the people elect their own Legislators and make their own laws, that is a fact; but it is also a fact, that Congress without any Constitutional authority, can unmake those laws at will, and the Territories of the United States are at this day as much under the direction of the President and Congress, as any of the British colonies are under the direction of the British Government, by its representation in Downing street. They have indeed a shadow of popular rule; but even that shadow is dissipated by the power which Congress arrogates to itself to annul any or all of their enactments. In fact, the Territories may be said to be in a state of vassalage or tutelage, coerced to act under the direction, and to be controlled by their self-constituted masters.

It may be said, that the Constitution empowers the President of the United States to make these appointments. Let us examine:

Art. II. Sec. 2. "He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, providing two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next Session."

In the above we have defined the power and authority of the President, not the least of which is his appointing power; hence ambassadors, public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments "are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law, are appointed by him." The question will necessarily arise here are the Governor, judges and officers of a Territory, United States officers? If they are, where did the United States get their authority from to rule the Territories, or to control any people without their consent? and where there is no people to rule, how can rulers be appointed to rule them? We should agree that the President possessed the power to appoint land agents inasmuch as the land is the property of the United States, and there are constitutional provisions made for that; but there is a difference between lands claims and Territories, and the people. The lands and Territories are claims, properties and possessions, and the people according to the genius, constitution and institutions of the United States are Popular Sovereigns; possessing "the inalienable right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," with the right either to govern themselves, or to have a voice in their government. But it may be said that the clause, "and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein provided for, and which shall be established by law," gives Congress the right to govern the Territories. To this we may remark, that unless it can be shown that Congress have a right to govern people without their consent, the President has no authority to appoint rulers over them. And in the Constitution we find no such authority granted to Congress except in the Territory of Washington, to which such power is specially limited to ten miles square. As we have before stated they possess no legitimate power of governing or of exclusive legislation anywhere else; and if Congress possesses not the powers of Legislation how can the President appoint Governors, &c.

If this statement is not correct, where are the rights of the people? Each of the Territories contain from fifty to one hundred thousand inhabitants, a greater number than several of the original States possessed at the time of their coming into the Union. If Congress could not then govern a lesser number of people without their consent, from whence do they now obtain the power to govern a greater? We know of none but that right which the strong has to oppress the weak!

Again, an American citizen, in any of the thirty-one United States, is in every sense of the word a popular sovereign; he has a voice in the election of all town, county, State and United States officers, as well as in the election of the President of the United States; he is a free man, but the moment he steps into a territory which is the domain of the United States, and in which he has as much a right to as any other citizen, he is disfranchised, deprived of his rights, and is placed in a state of vassalage or tutelage; and this is not only the case with an individual, but with a hundred thousand in one territory; and they may be mocked, jeered, abused, tantalized, and insulted without redress, by their self-constituted masters, who have of their own volition snatched from them their dearest rights, and lorded it over them at will; and thus, while loafers, blacklegs, and the very scum and dregs of society are permitted the rights of freemen in the States, the industrious, energetic farmer, mechanic, merchant, and lawyer, who have the ambition to penetrate into a new country, to combat the Indian, to make the first roads and build the first bridges, and who "make the solitary places glad and the wilderness to blossom as the rose;" these hardy, industrious, intelligent pioneers, instead of being fostered and encouraged by the general government in their arduous undertaking, the very moment they set foot in a Territory of the United States, they are proscribed in their liberties and disfranchised. But it may be said the Territories have each a delegate in Congress. True; but this delegate, like everything else associated with Territorial rule, is a mere shadow, an automaton. Like all good and obedient little boys, he must hear and see but say nothing; he has a seat, and he can speak when permitted on particular prescribed occasions, but he cannot vote in the interests of his constituents or against any oppressive law.

But we are told that the Kansas-Nebraska act is based upon popular sovereignty, and that, as all people are sovereigns, that squatters are also, and therefore they are called "squatter sovereigns." We may investigate this hereafter.

To the Saints Scattered Throughout the Eastern, Middle and Southern States:

THE Presiding Elders over Conferences or Branches of the Church, Traveling Elders, &c., in the several States enumerated, wherever there is known to be an organized Branch of the same, or members residing unorganized, are hereby requested to inform me by letter of the same, giving the name of the city, town, county, and State, with the name of the Presiding Elder—if no Elder, the name of one or more of the members residing at the place—so that I may visit them, counsel and instruct them in relation to their duties, &c.

W. I. APPLEBY.

New York, Oct. 29th, 1856.

[We are constantly receiving calls from the Saints that are scattered throughout the States for Elders to be sent to them—some professing great attachment to the work of the last days, and expressing an earnest desire to advance its interests by the propagation of the gospel and craving our counsel, &c. We beg now to call the attention of such persons to the above circular. We have appointed the Judge to travel wherever there are calls, and now say to all, forward your address, inclose information of the most direct route to your residences, don't forget to inclose the dollars to pay the expenses, and he will be at your homes a quick messenger of peace and salvation.]—ED.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 14, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon: DEAR SIR: We wish to caution our Brethren and friends throughout the United States and the Canadas, against the impositions of a renegade Jew, named Levi Abrahams, late from California and Utah, who was ex-communicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, for his licentious and beastly conduct, by the President, Bishop and Council of this city, on the 28th of July, 1856. Some facts of the case were published in our local papers, and it was thought that he was thus sufficiently advertised, but we learn from some of our friends in Iowa, that he is still intent upon his infamous business, imposing upon the inexperienced, and seeking to lead away the unwary. The Saints should not encourage him in their houses.

He is about five feet seven inches high, dark complexion and dark hair, has a strong Jewish accent, speaks several languages, is thick set and a confirmed scoundrel.

JAMES H. HART, President.
JOHN H. GARDEN, Clerk.

The smutty business alluded to above, was noticed in this paper shortly after the circumstance occurred, as it furnished some of our cotemporaries with an opportunity of charging home upon Mormonism the wickedness of one who would

"Steal the livery of heaven
To serve the devil in."

Will those same calumniating scribblers who rejoiced in publishing "Mormon immorality," be as ready to tell their readers that the Mormons harbor no such vipers, that they throw them off like a mass of putrid corruption unfit to dwell in the camp of Israel but good enough for the society of those sanctimonious modern christians, who talk about little domestic irregularities, and weakness of our fallen nature.—[ED. MORMON.

Notice.

A CONFERENCE of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, will be held at Brookes' Assembly rooms, 361 Broome street, New York, on the first Sunday of November, commencing at 10 1-2 A. M. All officers of the Church unconnected with the Philadelphia District, are expected to attend, or report themselves, and all members of the Church, who have not yet been received in membership, by any branch of the Church, are likewise requested to report themselves.

We invite as many of the Elders, and members, of the Church, connected with the Philadelphia District, as can make it convenient, to meet with us. Remember the 2d. of November.

For Next Emigration to Utah.

WE have lately received letters from the Saints in different States, enquiring if we would receive deposits of money, till the opening of the next emigration to Utah. In reply to which we have only to say that whatever money sent to this office for that purpose, will be credited in our books to the persons sending, and subject to his or her order. Persons sending sums of money from other States, should procure orders at sight upon any bank of New York city, made payable to us, otherwise we have to pay discount on bank notes.

Utah U. S. Marshal.

A. T. HORN, of Missouri, has declined the Marshalship of Utah!—[N. Y. Herald's Washington Correspondent, Oct. 23.

We should think Mr. Horn is a very sensible gentleman. Political obligations, that is, "you'll tickle me and in turn I'll tickle you," personal relationship and friendship have unfortunately a greater claim upon some folks than principle and right; but now that Mr. Horn has seen somebody's willingness to serve him, President Pierce might remember the faithful, diligent and honest ex-Marshal Mr. Heywood, now in Washington, whose steady economy and determination to avoid needless expense, must have saved the public tressury many thousands of dollars during the tenure of his office. Should there be a personal objection to Mr. H., which we do not anticipate, there are plenty men of capacity and unspotted integrity to fill that and every office in the government there. A Democratic president like the present chief magistrate might think of doing justice to the Mormons. His friends should remind him.

THOSE who most readily find a God to swear by seldom find one to pray to.

Florence.

WE are glad to learn from the letter of Brother Cunningham, although no particular mention is made of it, that things are progressing so well in this city. When we passed through there, on our way out here, it was a city newly laid out, with only a very few houses upon it; now it is progressing very rapidly in improvement, as so many of the Saints settling there sufficiently indicates; and as it is on the direct route from the West, it not only makes it a good location for those who may be desirous of settling in that western country, but it is also a good place for the temporary settlement of the Saints previous to their departure for the Plains. Those of the Saints who may wish to go west, preparatory to an early start in the spring, from all the information that we can obtain, cannot find a better location. And here we would say, in justice to the gentlemanly proprietors from whom we have received much courtesy, that, situated as Florence is on the western bank of the Missouri river, on a high, beautiful plateau, with excellent shores for wharfage, on the direct (as we are told) surveyed route of the Pacific Railroad, surrounded by a rich and fertile country, that there is not a city in the western country that holds out greater inducements to an enterprising man than the city of Florence.

Departures.

From Utah.

WE have files of the Deseret News, to Aug. 27th.

Fine drenching had been frequent during the month, and vegetation had revived. Early corn had been brought to market.

The wheat crop had been harvested, and promised a full average. The great Fair was to be held Oct. 1, and we look with earnestness for an account of it. We believe that the resources of that Territory have been underrated, but this exhibition will show the world what can be done by enterprise and industry, even though the field of its operations be as isolated as are those of the people of Utah.

Many of the elders had returned from the Pacific Islands, from Europe, and elsewhere. The general condition of the country was good.—[Council Bluffs Bugle, Oct. 14.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

AT home here in Gotham there is little besides politics before the people, and from an extensive exchange we can see it is the same throughout the Union. Pleasing fact, the 4th of November is close at hand; in our next issue we hope to announce the end of the present excitement. There is no use in our surmising one way or another. We don't care who wins or who loses, only may the Presidential chair be filled by an honest God-fearing man who will administer justice to all classes of the people. The probabilities are that Mr. Buchanan will be the next President. The opposition papers of this city have changed from certain success to wavering faith. However, there is the old maxim before all parties—"It is not all gold that glitters."

The affair of the Wall street Broker, Huntington, occupies considerable attention. We were going to say it is really astonishing that any man with the reputation of Huntington, four years ago, when connected with others in passing notes of a bank that never existed, could have gained the confidence of any respectable person, to attain to his present position without creating great distrust, but so it is, there is no place for astonishment, the most daring scoundrel is more likely to succeed in this money hunting, gold idolizing world than an honest upright fair-dealing man. Some men can be bought, and none so likely to be purchased as that tribe who live by speculation.

Gov. Clark in formal language, feeling grateful for the blessings which have fallen upon the Empire State, has, in accordance with a time honored custom, appointed Thursday the 20th day of November next, to be observed throughout the State, as a day of public Thanksgiving and Praise.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The press is and has been for some time considerably occupied with the recent failure of the North British Bank, and the jugglery and plundering of the concern by members of Parliament and other big named respectable scamps connected with it as directors. England is going to war with Persia. The quarrel has been got up by Nobody and for Nothing so far at least as the British nation knows. Even the Times has been taken by surprise and opposes British interference in the affair. Advices from Bombay of date Sept. 12, are filled with accounts of the preparations made by the Indian and British governments to invade Persia. The reason of this invasion is the reported occupation of Herat by the Persian troops. A fleet is to be sent to the Persian Gulf, with certain demands which it is not expected the Shah will accede to, whereupon the invading force is to be sent to take possession of Kuvrack and Bushire, as a basis of operations against Teheran. Six regiments of infantry and three of cavalry, with field and siege trains, are already detailed for land service. The fleet will number twenty-two steamers, with a large number of gunboats. In addition to those preparations, large quantities of ammunition are being sent up to the Inde to the direct assistance of Dost Mahomed and the Affghan party in Herat. It is expected that Persia will fight, but that she must speedily fall before the British force.

FRANCE.—The latest accounts from Paris represent a murmuring discontent among the working classes at high provisions, high rents, &c. The Emperor, have since his return from Biarritz, is said to been visited by a body of working men on the subject. For some time back there has been fears of a financial crisis, but confidence is returning and banking business is reported looking up. Count Walewski has replied to Prince Gortschakoff's circular on foreign intervention.

SPAIN.—O'Donnell and his Cabinet have resigned the direction of affairs, and Gen. Narvaez, with a new Cabinet, has been accepted by Isabella. The one sycophant tyrant is put aside to give place for a greater, and destroy the last vestige of constitutional liberty that may have survived the re-action. That old vixen Christina, Isabella's mother, will return to be a curse to Spain.

ITALY.—Lord John Russell has paid a visit to Turin. Report has assigned to him a mission to learn the true state of things between Piedmont and Austria. France and England have at last sent the ultimatum to Bomba; its contents have not yet got to the public.

St. Louis Stake.

THE Half-Yearly Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was held in the Church, corner of Washington avenue and Fourth street, St. Louis, Mo., on Sunday and Monday, October 5th and 6th, 1856.

President James H. Hart called the meeting to order at half-past 10 o'clock.

The hymn on the first page was sung, and Conference opened with prayer by Elder Joel M. Berry.

President Erastus Snow arose and remarked, that we had assembled one day in advance of the Semi-Annual Conference, and hence the business of the Conference would be left till to-morrow; but he wished, however, the brethren and sisters to feel as if the Conference had begun this morning, as this day would be devoted to doctrine and instruction.

President Snow further remarked, that his health had been poor for some time past, but this morning he felt somewhat better, and requested the united faith and prayers of the Saints in his behalf, that his health might continue to improve, so that he could enjoy the society of the Saints at this Conference, and be able to discharge the important duties committed to his care, and concluded by blessing the Saints in the name of the God of Israel.

Elder Joel M. Berry, from the Cincinnati Conference, being called upon, next addressed the meeting. He observed, that in realizing his position this morning he felt cause to rejoice; two years ago he was on his way to California in pursuit of gold, but staying at Salt Lake City, he heard and obeyed the Gospel, and on the 6th of April last was appointed a mission to the States to preach the Gospel, and he had endeavored to magnify his calling and build up the kingdom of God, and felt happy in saying the results of his mission had given him an experience that gold could not purchase, and concluded his remarks by bearing a faithful and unwavering testimony to the truth of the Gospel in which he was engaged.

Bishop John Yates delivered a short address upon the apostate state of the world, and the futile attempts of an hireling priesthood to evangelize the human family; and made some pithy and humorous observations in contrasting Mormonism with modern Christianity.

The choir sung the 253d hymn.

Benediction by President James H. Hart.

Adjourned until half-past 2 P. M.

Half-past 2 P. M.

President Snow then addressed the Conference upon the subject of the creation of man, his future state and final resurrection, with his usual zeal and eloquence, illustrating many important principles of our holy religion.

The choir chanted an anthem.

Benediction by Elder Berry.

Adjourned until 7 P. M.

7 P. M.

The choir sung a hymn.

Prayer by Councillor James Caffall.

Elder Thomas Bradshaw addressed the meeting from the prophecies of Isaiah, and emphatically proved the restoration of the Gospel and establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

C. Christianson, President of the Danish Saints, next addressed the meeting. He gave his experience in the kingdom of God, with a brief synopsis of the work in Denmark. His remarks were edifying and instructive.

Benediction by Elder James Caffall.

Adjourned until half-past 10 o'clock, Monday morning.

MONDAY, Oct. 6—half-past 10 A. M.

Prayer by President Snow.

President Snow then made a few appropriate remarks, and called upon the Presiding Elders to represent their several Branches.

President James H. Hart made some excellent remarks in his usual clear and forcible style, and referred to the changes that had taken place in the St. Louis Branch in consequence of so many prominent brethren emigrating last spring. Many vacancies had occurred, which would necessarily have to be filled in order to complete the organization that had been established in St. Louis by President Snow; and concluded his remarks by exhorting the priesthood to be devoted to their holy religion, and always sustain the authorities of God's kingdom.

The several Branches composing the St. Louis Stake of Zion were then represented by their respective Presidents or delegates. Their reports showed that the Saints, as a general thing throughout the St. Louis Stake of Zion, were enjoying the spirit of God, and felt willing to sustain the authorities and subscribe to all the laws and institutions established in this kingdom.

The choir sung a hymn.

Benediction by J. Caffall.
Adjourned until 2 o'clock, P. M.

2 P. M.

Prayer by President James H. Hart.

President Snow delivered a brief address with regard to the privileges and free agency of the Saints, and then presented the general authorities of the Church, which were unanimously sustained, as follows, viz: Brigham Young, Prophet, Seer, Revelator, and President over the Church in all the earth; Heber C. Kimball and Jedediah M. Grant as his Councillors; the Twelve Apostles, viz: Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Willford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and F. D. Richards; John Smith as Presiding Patriarch over the whole Church; George A. President Snow made some observations respecting the collecting of moneys on the tithing account, and contemplated making a few changes in that department, and laid before the brethren the plans and arrangements he intended to adopt, and read an extract from Governor Young's letter to him with regard to the re-commencement of the Luminary, which gave him discretionary power to act; he would, therefore, call upon the brethren to express their feelings on the subject. The brethren were united in their feelings for the re-issue of the Luminary, and felt confident that it would be sustained. The subject was left over for further consideration.

President Snow informed the Saints he had received instructions from the first Presidency to organize colonies on the emigrant route, and as he intended to carry out the project, the travelling Elders and Presidents of Branches were to make the matter extensively known among the Saints. He contemplated starting early next Spring to carry out the measures and designs of the Presidency in Utah.

President Snow then moved, That this Conference adjourn until the 4th of April, 1857, commencing at 2 o'clock, P. M.

FLORENCE, Nebraska Ter., October 12, 1856.

ELDER TAYLOR.—Dear Sir: As it is some time since I have communicated with you from this place, perhaps a few remarks may not be unacceptable.

I have sometimes thought that you would consider it strange that I have not written to you before this; but, as I have not progressed very rapidly in the mission which you gave me in relation to forming a settlement in the neighborhood of Wood River, owing to circumstances over which I had no control, and not being in a very good position to make a report, I have deferred it until the present.

I found that in the fore part of the season, and during the progress of emigration, it was almost impossible to get up a company for that purpose, as those who were prepared with means to form a settlement were generally prepared to go to the Valley, and in most instances preferred the latter to the former. I see, too, since President Snow's return to St. Louis, you have, per advice in THE MORMON, placed me and the arrangement of this settlement under his charge; I have, therefore, conferred with him, although I consider it nevertheless due to you to inform you of the general state of affairs here.

Brother Snow was here some time ago, and we organized a Branch of the Church, over which I was appointed to preside, and to attend to any church business under his direction. When here he instructed me to take none into the Branch except by baptism. We have baptized and re-baptized about seventy-three persons in Florence. I have also got up a small company to go out with me and make some claims. President Snow and myself both thought that it would be better to go this fall to search out a proper location and make some claims, and prepare to make an early start in the spring, so as to be enabled to put in and raise an early crop next season. I shall probably start in about two weeks from now. I am at present building a house on the point between the warehouse and the river, for the Church—it is 16 by 32, and two stories high. It is now raised, and as soon as I get it inclosed I shall start out West.

Brother F. D. Richards informs me by letter from Fort Kearney, Sept. 9th, that there is no prospect of making a settlement at Wood River. So we shall make our claims on the Loup Fork, and we may also visit Wood River and make some claims, and settle upon them as soon as practicable.

I have taken the responsibility of obtaining a number of subscribers for THE MORMON; the inclosed is a list of names and the subscriptions. On my return I will report progress.

I remain, as ever,
Yours in the E. C.
A. CUNNINGHAM.

[We are glad to receive the above from Bishop Cunningham; such news is always interesting to the Saints. Anything pertaining to the settlements on the way to Zion is to all the faithful a matter of importance. We are well aware of many of the difficulties under which Brother Cunningham has labored in regard to the formation of this settlement, not the least of which originates with the Indians; and we call upon the brethren to strengthen his hands and those of Brother Snow in the formation of this and other settlements. If sufficient numbers go out, fortify themselves well, and abide counsel, there can really be no difficulty. The Presidency have directed that these settlements be made, and it is not only our duty, but our interest likewise, to carry out their instructions. Anything that is for the furtherance of the interests of Zion is for our good; and, what others find difficult to accomplish for want of union, is easy for us to attend to; and although it would not be safe for disorganized companies to go, yet, companies going out well organized, well armed, and by taking precautionary measures to build good, substantial forts, they would find themselves perfectly safe. We throw out these general items, leaving it for President Snow, under whose charge it at present is, to carry out the details, while we shall use our influence, and say, let the brethren strengthen his hands that he may be enabled not only to make this settlement but others also, that there may be places where the sick, the poor, the lame, the halt and blind may find resting places on their way to Zion; that when the faithful, with songs of joy, shall go thither, they may find sympathy, friends and warm hearts; that they may realize "that there is a highway cast up for them in the wilderness," "a resting place in the desert;" "that the wilderness and the solitary place is made glad for them," and the "desert blossoms as the rose." Let those who may wish to embark in this report themselves to Erastus Snow, Esq., box 333 Post-office, St. Louis, Mo.]—ED.

Correspondence of Hon. G. A. Smith.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 17, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Since I arrived at St. Louis, I have been daily expecting the mails, for receipt of Utah correspondence. Nothing has yet arrived, the principle news I received from Utah, was through THE MORMON.

I addressed the Saints in this place, twice during last Sabbath; the congregation was large and gave me good attention. Elder Snow addressed a congregation of Danish Saints on Sabbath morning, in their own language. On Monday, I was invited by Bishop Christophsen, to attend a party composed of Saints from Scandanavia. After feasting on the many good things provided for the occasion with excellent taste by our worthy host, we were introduced into the hall to an entertainment of another character. Music, praying preaching, dancing, singing and dramatic recitations, all the vocal exercises, to me, in a strange language, which was a novelty I never before witnessed. The ladies dressed in their native Swedish, Danish and Norwegien costumes, served to give variety to the scene.

Christian Christianson, contributed his quota to the amusement, and to whose knowledge of the English language I am indebted for information, or rather representation of the evening's amusement. Although I did not understand the language, yet the good order and unmistakeable spirit which reigned, told most clearly, that I was among a people, who knew how to enjoy social happiness in the right way.

The Missouri State Fair, has attracted immense crowds to St. Louis, and is altogether considered a very creditable exhibition of the products of genius and industry. My health at present, is rather below par.

Elder Snow through over exertion has been on the invalid list for some days.

Yours as ever, G. A. SMITH.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 21, 1856.

EDITOR OF THE MORMON—Dear Sir: In my last, I gave you an account of my interesting visit with the Saints from Denmark, who are now sojourning in this city. By way of variety, I will now give you an account of a visit with the Welsh Saints at Caseyville, Illinois. As an invitation had been given for us to visit them, on the 18th, we took the railroad cars at Illinoistown, at 9 o'clock A. M., we were met at the station on our arrival at Caseyville, by Elders W. M. Lewis and Walter Roach. In the evening, about 60 or 70 Brethren sat down to an excellent supper prepared in British style. Nothing can exceed the pleasantry of an English tea-party, as all travelling Elders in that land well know. After the repast was over, singing, prayers and addresses were made in the Welsh language. The house was surrounded by a gang of drunken rowdies, so common in all Christian countries, who by threats, loud swearing and other menaces, kept up an annoyance around the house, during the evening. Elder Snow addressed them in a friendly manner, invited them to come in and hear the preaching, but few accepted the invitation. Meeting terminated about 11 o'clock, after much valuable instruction had been given.

We then visited the coal mines by torch-light, marching several hundred yards into the dark chambers of the earth. Sunday morning, Sister Kent sent her carriage, and conveyed us to Illinoistown. Elder Snow delivered a highly interresting address in the afternoon, in Fourth street church, on the subject of the Resurrection. In the evening, I addressed a large assembly on the History and Geography of Utah.

The weather last week has been very cold. The St. Louis fair was an excellent exhibition. I expect to leave for Quincy in a few days. I have received nothing from Utah by the last mail. Elder Snow's health is improving.

Yours &c. G. A. SMITH.

Correspondence from Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI Oct. 16, 1856.

PRESI. TAYLOR—Dear Bro.: Having been politely requested by our worthy brother, George A. Smith, to continue writing for the Mormon, I take great pleasure in doing so, although I realize my weakness in the attempt. Still it is my motto to try to do at least everything that may be required of me by the servants of God. In entering upon a work of this kind, it is necessary that a man should be pretty well posted up on the general outline of the subjects upon which he may write—which I do not profess to be; therefore, if I should make any serious mistakes, or suggest any thing that is not correct, you must overlook it, and credit the same to my ignorance. We are a people believing in the providences of God and acknowledging His hand in His dealings with us from day to day, a people whose rise and progress from the begining has been the work of God our heavenly Father, who in His wisdom, has seen proper to commence the re-establishment of His kingdom upon the earth. Furthermore we believe that the Lord had taken preparatory steps, that when he should bring forth His work, at the set time, there might be a place upon His footstool where sufficient liberty of conscience should exist, in order that His Saints might dwell in peace, under the broad panopoly of constitutional law and equal rights. In this view we consider that men in the revolution were inspired by the Almighty to throw of the shackles of the mother government with her established religion. It was the voice of the Lord inspiring all those worthy men who bore influence in those trying times not only to go forth in battle but to exercise wisdom in council, fortitude, courage and endurance in the tented field, as well as subsequently to form and adopt those wise and efficient measures which secured to themselves and succeeding generations the blessing of a free and independent government. The American government is second to none in the world in influence and power, and far before all others in liberal and free institutions. There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding, and many who do not hold the priesthood have ideas which are really true, yet they are not always certain whether they are true or not. Such I believe to be the case, and further, I believe that the cogitations of men, in their moments of sincere reflection when they meditate upon the condition of the world and their final exit from this stage of action are that there is no evil in the Latter Day Saints: their secret reflections tell them this, unless they are so far depraved by wickedness that the spirit of the Lord has ceased to strive with them. The principal evil is in the rulers or those who profess to be rulers and in the dispensers of the law, and not in the Constitution—it is pure. Even those who have evil in their hearts, when they contemplate "the powers that be" as now exhibited before their eyes; when they think of them upon their beds and in their most sober reflections they begin to realize that God is visiting the earth, that the Latter Day Saints are not the bad people that they are represented to be by their enemies, that they are not disposed to be hostile to the government but are a good people. Many begin to realize that we have something they know but little about and to wish that they understood it. When they cast off those reflections, fear comes upon them because the cry from one end of the Union to the other is that the Mormons are going to do something very bad. It has been said: let the Mormons alone and it will be but a little time before they will control the election of not only one but different States: what then should be done with them? I will tell you what ought to be done: the government of the United States and the Presidents of the same ought to treat the religion of the Latter Day Saints as they do Methodism, Presbyterism or any other ism and say, towards hypocrites: here I wish you to be silent about the Mormons, for they have just as good a right to their religion as you have to yours; but such has not been the case. There is certainly something strange about the Saints and something too, that the wicked will not find out until the wrath of an avenged God is poured out upon them—then they will begin to see what is to pay when it is too late to redeem themselves.

In taking this view of the matter what should the Saints do? We know it is just as necessary to have opposition as to have encouragement. The Saints know that they are in the path of life, God has told them so. The revelations of Jesus Christ have told them that they are right. What greater testimony is required. It is enough, it is the privilege of every person to do now as much good as he desires and what a glorious fact is it to know that we are in the Church and kingdom of God, where there is a fountain of knowledge, of light and of faith where no man is trammeled in performing any good action. This is a free Gospel, no distinction made between the poor and the rich, the high and the low, everybody is placed as free as the air that blows, neither is any man limited in his faith by this gospel. We should, therefore, study the laws of God and get a perfect understanding of all things that are revealed and we will find that we can comprehend all that is for our present good. Yours in the covenant,

JOEL M. BERRY.

Correspondence of Judge Appleby.

HAVERSTRAW, N. Y., Oct., 23, 1856.

PREST. TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.:—Having a desire to keep you informed in relation to the situation and affairs of the Branches of the Church, through which I travel, to regulate, instruct, and put them in order, agreeably to my appointment, I would therefore say, that I have lately visited the Branches at Hempstead, L. I., Westport, Conn., and the one at this place.

At Hempstead, I reorganized them, by appointing Elder Benedict their President, adjusted some misunderstanding existing among them, taught them the principles of truth, counselled them in relation to their duties, baptized five, and left them in peace, and feeling well.

At Westport the Saints are rejoicing in the Gospel they have embraced, united in the bonds of the Everlasting Covenant, and endeavoring to discharge the duties devolving upon them under the instruction of their presiding officer Elder E. R. Young. Five or six have lately been added to the Church there, among the number the lady that remarked at the Wood's Meeting I held there some time since, "That she had said a great many hard things against the Mormons, on account of prejudice, but that she was not going to say ang more after what she had heard that day." Also the gentleman that wished me to go and "visit his sick father," at the time of the Wood's Meeting refered to, both are now rejoicing in the truth.

Among the number baptized there, was a a man, upright and honest in his ways and dealings, except at times given to intemperance, he heard the truth, (forsook the intoxicating cup) and embraced the Gospel. His son, a young man some twenty-one years old, one of those called "a hard case," a few days after his father was baptized (both being at Norwalk) endeavored, as I was informed, to induce his father to drink again, and thereby intoxicate him, but did not succeed. On their way home, the son being in good health, was suddenly stricken to the earth, and to all appearance could not survive many minutes, he cried out in agony, and for the first time in his life he sought the Lord to have mercy upon him and spare his life, at the same time promising never to do the like again, firmly believing it was a judgment from the Almighty upon him for his conduct towards his father. After some time he recovered. He came out to meeting while I was there, he appears serious, and as I was informed quite an altered young man. Several more are believing there, and no doubt will be baptized ere long.

The members of this Branch, under the presidency of Elder John Druce, are doing well, live in peace, love and union, rejoicing in the gifts and blessings of the Gospel, with hearts as liberal as the gushing stream.

The membars of the several Branches, with few exception, have their faces Zion-ward, and purpose starting to Utah the coming spring. I expect to be in New York to attend conference next Sabbath, after which to visit the Churches in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, &c.

May the Lord bless, preserve, protect, and open the way before you, to fulfil the arduous duties devolving upon you, and those associated with you, together with all the Saints who desire to do right, and are willing by their liberality to help roll on the Kingdom of God, and sustain and uphold the servants of the Most High.

As ever your true friend and Brother,
W. I. APPLEBY.

P. S.—The young man above referred to as being "stricken to the earth," has since been baptized into the Church. W. I. A.

Be Systematic.

IT will add much more to your convenience than you can immagine. It saves time, saves temper, saves patience, saves money. For a time it may be a little troublesome, but you will soon find it easier to do right than wrong; that it is easier to act by rule than without one.

Be systematic in everything; let it extend to most minute trifles, it is not beneath you. Whitfield could not go to sleep at night if, after retiring, he remembered that his gloves and riding whip were not in their usual place, where he could lay his hand on them in the dark in any emergency; and such men are the men who leave their mark on the world's history.

Systematic men are only reliable men; they are those who comply with their engagements. They are minute men. The man who has nothing to do is the man who does nothing. The man of system is soon known to do what he engages to do; to do it well, and to do at the same time promised; consequently he has his hands full.

FOR THE MORMON.

Gratitude.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

WHEN the excursive mind, which is neither confined to bounds nor controlled by limits, is viewing, through the medium of solemn meditations, bountiful nature as it shines in all its lovely embroidery, and by its sacred beauties beaming throughout the grand panorama, charms the senses and Fancy furls its wings in the breast, so that sweet and soft echoes arise in the heart at the sight of the rapturous Graces living in each leaf, and breathing in every particle of air, then a feeling arises out of the sleeping ocean of human emotions, that has so often inspired the profane string of the bard to bring forth immortal strains. This feeling is Gratitude, which the great Disposer of events has implanted in the bosom of everyone who is not perplexed with anxious, degrading and corroding calculations of interest and popularity, but who is guided by generosity and a proper sense of duty. The psychological investigation of Gratitude shows, that it is an agreeable, pleasant emotion caused by kindness which we have received from our fellow-beings, with a strong desire of returning their services, and seeing thus our benefactors enjoy the happy results of that excellent virtue.

The nervous system of the human frame is so constituted, that every one can realize joy and grief, passions and affections, according to the peculiar turn and cultivation of the mind, and the particular nature of the ever-varying scenes of this life. The reflective mind knows that the gentle whisperings of conscience speak most distinctly in the retirements of serious contemplation, it is then when looking upon Nature's lovely survey, upon the full-orbed moon, the brilliant meteors trembling from the high canopy of Heaven, upon the waving forest, the murmering brook or the peaceful hamlet, that we try to surpass the fever of resentment or the turbulence of passions, that we submit ourselves to an all-wise Providence, and that we are willing to foster noble and sublime sentiments, it is then, when remote from all the noise and hurry of a tumultuous life, that we feel more than ever the necessity of cultivating Gratitude. Is it not congenial to Godliness, to be grateful to those beings, through whose fostering care we have been made participators in the many-fold blessings of this existence? Our friends may have grown hoary with age, or be moulding in the dust, but even from their tombs they speak to us the great lesson of acknowledging and returning past favors and services and proving thus that we are their grateful children.

In relation to the cultivation of noble, exalting principles, there is a vast field of intelligence and operations before us, that is to say, the more we practice and cultivate a principle, the more we improve, and realize the necessity and importance of abiding by the same, and so it is in regard to Gratitude, when we show ourselves grateful to those who dangled us on their knees, who smoothened our pillows, who administered to our temporal and spiritual wants, and we understand then to a certain extent that glorious principle, the more so we feel to be grateful to that supreme Being, by whose will millions of worlds roll into existence, who smiles in the radiant beauty of the sun, who frowns in the tempest, and directs the storm, who speaks from the silent Mansions of the dead, the great lesson, that He is the great Dispenser of events, that by His will we have to bid adieu to Time and terrestrial things, and by his command, we have to resign many a blooming creature to the gloomy recesses of Corruption.

The cultivation of Gratitude is of the greatest importance for every rational being, as it is calculated to ennoble and beautify the mind, as it shows, that we understand to a certain extent the value of those blessings which we receive from God, from our parents and friends. Who, that is possessed of a particle of the Divine Spirit, does not feel grateful to those beings to whom he owes his existence? Who, that has any feelings of humanity, does not thankfully acknowledge those, from whom he received kindness? Who does not feel grateful to his God, for the endless variety of blessings, which are continually showering down upon the righteous and the sinner?

The blessings of Gratitude are multifarious. He who feels grateful, has his mind prepared for that state of existence for which Providence evidently intended him; the strings of his heart, on which passions are so apt to play, will produce strains of pleasure, so that the memory of injuries will disappear before him like a gloomy midnight Phantom; the fatal shafts of hatred and revenge will never pierce his heart, and cause him to struggle with inward anguish, but whether he is in the whirlwind of business or in the languor of pleasures, he will always be willing to submit to an overruling Providence, and be obedient and kind to those who helped to steer the bark of his life through the boisterous waves of this world, and thus he will always solace himself with the prospect of an endless series of earthly and eternal satisfactions.

How ought children to strive to manifest continually that gratitude which is due to their parents! Gentle reader, there are some who are so forgetful of their filial duties, that they actually ridicule, despise and control those, from whom they received their life. Those who dishonor their parents, dishonor themselves; if they do not love their parents and friends whom they see, how can they love God, whom they do not see? Ungrateful persons are destitute of the Divine Spirit, and retrograde in their morals and in the scale of being. Hence parents and guardians ought to be very careful in teaching their children and their wards correct principles, and implant by a circumspect and respectful behaviour Gratitude in them. How many parents, especially mothers, have spoiled and ruined their children by too great an indulgence and overkindness to their offspring! Love your children, but not by vain words and a neglect of your parental duties, but by a wise conduct, especially be not too familiar with your children, but keep them always at a respectable distance, in fact, show as I said before, your love, not by useless praising, but by wise actions, and your children will always feel to acknowledge in you the hand by which they are sustained and made to improve in the scale of existence. And those who are grateful to their parents and friends, will be grateful to God and manifest their love by keeping His commandments and doing His will in all things.

But alas! in the present age, the morals of the human family are so corrupted, that Gratitude begins to be looked upon as an exotic plant, which gets destroyed by the blasting atmosphere of the present society. Everyone of us, I believe, has more or less experienced that kindness for passed favors and services was returned with ingratitude. It is a sad lesson for a feeling mind, to bestow kindness upon a person and thus receive in return nothing but scorn and despite. It is strange, but true, that man is sometimes in regard to his moral value, inferior to the brute creation, and that animals, especially dogs are often more faithful and grateful than man.

The classical history of the Greeks and Romans has recorded a touching instance of filial Gratitutde. Two young men Cleobis and Biton, the sons of a priestess of the Juno, knowing that their mother at a certain hour had to be in the temple, pulled their parent, as the oxen had not come at the appointed time, to the same. On their arrival at Juno's sacred shrine, the priestess knelt down and prayed to the Goddess to reward their children for this great manifestation of filial Gratitude and devotion. The Greek historian relates the mother's prayer was answered, inasmuch as her sons fell asleep and awoke no more, proving thereby that they had done the most noble action in the sight of the Gods, and were permitted to leave their tabernacles after the very performance of the same.

O! Gratitude, flower of the Paradise, coming from regions of a perennial spring, mayest thou find a congenial soil in the bosom of everyone, blossom like a beautiful rose, scenting every surrounding object, and bring forth fruits of eternal happiness, and when the mortal remains of man have been committed to the silent tomb, mayest thou on the grave be an eloquent memento of his excellent virtues, and claim the just tribute of a tear.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24, 1856.

The Union publishes a letter from Gov. Geary, announcing the restoration of peace in Kansas. He says that for two weeks no outrages have been reported, and that many of the most notorious agitators of all parties have left the Territory. He adds that he will shortly proceed with a small force in pursuit of a gang of thieves in the southern part of the Territory.

Advices from Mexico to the 8th inst., announce that another attempted revolution in the capital has been defeated by the Government.

The Revolution in Northern Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 25, 1856.

We are in receipt of Galveston dates to the 23d inst. The frontier papers state that Vidaurri had taken Mier without resistence, and then moved against Camargo, which place was defeated by 1300 troops. Vidaurri has 3000 men, and some skirmishes had already taken place between the opposing forces.

Terrific Gale on Lake Michigan.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27, 1856.

There has been a tremendous gale blowing on Lake Michigan for the last two days. Advices received last night confirm the report of the total loss of the propeller Toledo, off Port Washington, on Friday night. Forty lives were lost, and three saved. The cargo, consisting of general marchandise, for Milwaukie, was a total loss.

The schooner Bohemia was wrecked at the same place and at the same time. The Bohemia belonged to the Oswego line of Fitzhugh & Littlejohn. Her cargo consisted of railroad iron. No lives were lost.

The schooner General Taylor, with a cargo 11,000 bushels of wheat, was lost four miles north of here on the same night. The crew were saved. The vessel was insured in the Buffalo Mutual Company, and the cargo here.

The schooner Yonker, with a cargo of lumber, went to pieces the same night. The crew were saved.

The bark Zadock Pratt is ashore twelve miles from Milwaukie. Her cargo consists of coal and stoves.

Recruits for Gen. Walker.

The Duello.

SOME one—we forget who—said it was astonishing how he liked a man after fighting with him. A pistol ball is a great pacificator. A man who has a bullet lodged in the calf of his leg, at once hugs his opponent to his bosom, and swears eternal friendship for the man who, an hour before, was his deadly enemy. A drop of blood, drawn with a sword point, or let out by a globe of lead, operates like magic on the feelings of an injured duelist. He forgets that he has ever been called a liar and a poltroon, and cordially shakes the hand that has just been uplifted to take his life. A queer thing is this "code of honor"—a very odd thing is this "gentlemanly satisfaction"—a most contradictory character is the modern duelist. It is no doubt a very brave thing to stand up and be shot at—a very amusing piece of sport to make a target of the "human form divine," and riddle it with bullet holes. But the "satisfaction"—the healing of wounded honor—the instantaneous cooling of bad blood, and the warm friendship that springs up in the bosoms of the combatants, are wonderful results of civilization, of which the heathen are profoundly ignorant. A great invention is the duello. Long may it wave!—[Exchange.

CURRANTS GRAFTED ON MAPLE.—A correspondent of The Rural New Yorker says that he transplanted into his yard a young and thrifty maple, and engrafted into it scions from a currant bush. They grow well, and when ripe look handsome. The grafting must not be done until the sugar water comes to run.

GROUND OATS FOR HORSES.—Ground oats contain more of the introgenous of flesh making principle than any other kind of horse food; at the same time they furnish a mixture of coarse and flue food—the husk of the first and the meal of the latter. The coarse serves to keep the bowels in a soluble condition, thus obviating the necessity for drastic medicine.

DIED,

AT Toms River, N. J., Oct. 23d, after four weeks' illness, of the whooping cough, MARGARET MATILDA, daughter of Capt. W. C. and Mary Anne Reamer, aged 17 months.

We sincerely sympathize with Brother and Sister Reamer in the momentary loss of the beautiful and interesting little member of their family, whose innocent, artless, and amusing ways filled their hearts with hopes that she would in riper years be an honor to their family circle and a star in their celestial crown. Peace be to their sorrowing bosoms, for this hope will yet be realized. Time flies swiftly, and the resurrection's nigh.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon." Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe, that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

Contentment.

BY ELDER JOHN LYON, UTAH.

The rich that lie on beds o' down,
Have something still to mar their rest;
And even he who wears a crown,
With happiness is seldom blest!
But I'm determined gowd or gear
Shall ne'er disturb the peace I hae,
When poortith frowns, 'tis cauld-rife cheer
To hanker on life's thorny way.

Contented, I would envy not
What fortune has denied me here;
But seek within my humble cot,
Joys that to virtue aye are dear,
And blest wi' health and strength o' nerve,
To warsel wi' the storms o' fate,
I'll seek the power whilk can preserve
My present hopes and future state!

My wife an' I have made a rule,
To lend to each a helping han',
And I'm determined no to snoul!
And she's as settled no to bann!
She has her faults 'tis very true—
They're unco' fair without a flaw—
And I have faults myself, enow
To balance ill between us twa.

If aught below give cause for grief
To ruffle life's fantastic dream,
Its sunshine and its clouds are brief,
At best a momentary gleam.
Afflictions oft we make oursel',
And mony wants we do create
And they who make them weel can tell,
The bitterness of folly's weight.

Let wrinkled care, wi' fractious e'e!
Despond o'er all the ills o' life,
I'll seek for joys mair worth to me—
The peace and weal o' bairns and wife.
Gee kings and lords the helm o' state,
And ancient barons, pedigree;
But none of them are half so great
As I when Jenny smiles on me.

Silvering Glass.

The following is an extract from a lecture by Prof. Faraday recently delivered before the Royal Society, in which he explained with experiments, M. Petitjean's silvering process:

"M. Petitjean's process consists essentially in the preparation of a solution containing oxyd of silver, ammonia, nitric, and tartaric acids, able to deposit metalic silver either at common or somewhat elevated temperatures. 1540 grains of nitrate of silver being treated with 955 grains of strong solution of ammonia, and afterwards with 7700 grains of water, yields a solution to which, when clear, 170 grains of tartaric acid dissolved in 680 grains of water is to be added, and then 152 cubic inches more of water, with good agitation. When the liquid has settled, the clear part is to be poured off; 152 cubic inches of water to be added to the remaining solid matter, that as much may be dissolved as possible, and the clear fluids to be put together and increased by the further addition of 61 cubic inches of water. This is the silvering solution No. 1 A second fluid, No. 2, is to be prepared in like manner, with this difference, that the tartaric acid is to be doubled in quantity.

"The apparatus employed for the silvering of glass plate consists of a cast-iron table box, containing water within, and a set of gas burners beneath to heat it. The upper surface of the table is planed and set truly horizontal by a level. Heat is applied until the temperature is 140 deg. Fah. The glass is well cleaned, first with a cloth, after which a plug of cotton dipped in the silvering fluid and a little polishing powder, is carefully passed over the surface to be silvered, and when this application is dry it is removed by another plug of cotton, and the plate obtained is perfectly clean. The glass is then laid on the table, a portion of the silvering fluid poured on to the surface, and this spread carefully over every part by a cylinder of india rubber stretched upon wood, which has previously been cleaned and wetted with a solution. In this manner a perfect wetting of the surface is obtained, and all air bubbles, &c., are removed. Then more fluid is poured on to the glass until it is covered with a layer about 1-10 of an inch in depth, which easily stands upon it, and in that state its temperature is allowed to rise. In about ten minutes, by the heat of warm water the hollow box of the table, silver begins to deposit on the glass, and in fifteen or twenty minutes a uniform opaque coat, having a greyish tint on the upper surface, is deposited. After a certain time, the glass employed in the illustration was pushed to the edge of the table, was tilted that the fluid might be poured off, then washed with water and examined. The under surface presented a perfectly brilliant metallic plate of high reflective power, as high as any that silver can attain to; and the coat of silver, though thin, was so strong as to sustain handling, and so firm as to bear polishing on the back to any degree, by rubbing with the hand and polishing powder.

"The usual course in practise, however, is when the first stream of fluid is exhausted, to remove it, and apply a layer of No. 2 solution, and when that has been removed and the glass washed and dried, to cover the back surface with a protective coat of black varnish. When the form of the glass varies, simple expedients are employed, and either concave, convex, or corrugated surfaces are silvered, and bottles and vases are coated internally. It is easy to mend an injury in the silvering of a plate, and two or three cases of repair were performed on the table."

Spontaneous Ignition of Sawdust.

A recent number of the Journal of the Franklin Institute, contains a report on the spontaneous ignition of a wooden box containing sawdust.

It occurred in the factory of Joseph S. Elkington & Sons, Philadelphia. A mass of sawdust which had been confined for nine months in a wooden box around a tank for rendering grease, was observed to be heated like a mass of live coal, ready to burst into flames, although it was 40 feet from any fire. The tank which it surrounded was of boiler iron, heated by steam at 50 lbs. pressure, and was 280 deg. Fah. The heat was applied from 6 to 9 hours in succession, and the apparatus was used two or three times per week. When the fire was first discovered, an inch board forming part of the box was burned through. In 1853, the factory of Mr. Elkington was burned down, and this discovery has led to the inference that the cause of that fire was the spontaneous combustion of such a box.

The Committee of the Franklin Institute, in their report on this case, mention several well-known instances of spontaneous combustion of wood, kept in long contact with surfaces heated by hot water.

In 1848, Day & Martin's Blacking Factory in London came near being burned down by the spontaneous ignition of a wooden casing surrounding tubes containing hot water; and it was also found, on examination, that wherever these tubes touched the flooring the latter was charred.

The following extract from the report we recommend to the general attention of all concerned; it deserves a wide circulation:

"There can be but little doubt that the sawdust in the case before the Committee, exposed at intervals for nine months to a temperature of about 280 Fah., became charred by the gradual distillation of the water and volatile matters of the wood. Charcoal thus formed at a low temperature is much more inflammable and hygrometric than that made at higher temperatures.

"Whether such charcoal will absolutely inflame under 300 deg., the Committee is not able to say; it is possible that the rapid absorption of large quantities of oxygen by it would produce sufficient elevation of temperature to cause actual combustion. The fact, however, is established, that such combustion will occur under the circumstances indicated, and is of importance, from the liability to recurrence of the accident under like circumstances, as in the cases of joists running near flues or through hot air chambers, wood-work on steamboats near the boiler, steam drum, or smoke stack, jacketing of boilers in ordinary situations, &c.

"The Committee believe that the attention of builders and others should be called to the fact, with the object of avoiding the risk, and thus diminishing the causes of fire, already too numerous."

Sawdust boiled for 15 minutes in a liquor containing one pound of plaster of paris to the bushel, then dried in the sun, will be rendered perfectly proof against spontaneous combustion, like the above cited case. This would be a cheap and simple method of treating all sawdust designed for non-conducting packing around hot water or steam pipes.

Live for Something.

The smallest insect in creation has its appointed work to do. The atom that floats before us, the softest zephyr, the faintest ray of reflected light, each has its separate portion of labor. They all exist for a purpose—either for good or for evil. Seeing this, as even untrained eyes and uncultivated intellects must, how culpable are we if we have no aim before us! If we listlessly arise and move around—or worse, if we spend the time God has given us to improve, in soulless pleasure or contaminating action. We may be poor, persecuted, sick, chained to adverse influences, but no circumstances can absolve us from a work to do. We may be blind, deaf, crippled; He who permitted our adversity, gave us our appointed path, and the light to walk therein. We may be Bunyans shut up in prison, our limits circumscribed, our movements clogged, but as far as we have capacity we can all write pilgrimages. They may be written in penitent tears, and transcribed by angels into the books of Heaven.

And the work we do. What shall it be—for good or for evil? Shall we exalt or drag down? bless or curse, build up or destroy? One of the other we must be pursuing. Our every look, thought and action is reflected in a pure or pernicious influence, by the minds revolving around our sphere. Momentous power! thus to choose or reject!

A work to do! You are not excepted, woman of fashion, nor you, gold-worshiping man. Through the walls of adamant built up around your soul—through the thick drapery of selfishness folded over and over your hearts, that voice of the Eternal will penetrate, "Live for something." The very Heaven that bends blue above you—the very earth beneath your careless tread—the flowers of humanity that bloom along your pathway—the weeds that wither under your loathing glance—the yearning of your immortal spirit, that cannot be suppressed—the voice within you that cannot be silenced—all tell you of that work to do. How beautiful your lives might be made, ye who have power; do ye ever think of it? Look back along the life you have traveled; have you built any temples where simple goodness may worship? Have you planted here and there a tree that will live when you are gone, and yield fruit as it is plucked, will call forth sweet memories of your sojourn here? Have you ever made your name a household word, or have you lived but to build houses and buy merchandise, and erect an altar and a temple and a monument to corrupt and perishing self? How are you to answer these questions when you stand up before the Omnipotent! Not then with a laugh or a sneer, or a cold marble face, for the thousands of opportunities that you have murdered will rise up in that hour to condemn you.

Sincerity,

Sincerity is the most compendious wisdom, and an excellent instrument for the speedy dispatch of business. It creates confidence in those we have to deal with, save the labor of many inquiries, and brings things to an issue in few words; it is like traveling in a plain beaten road, which commonly brings a man sooner to his journey's end than by ways in which men often loose themselves. In a word, whatsoever convenience may be thought to be in falsehoood and dissimulation, it is soon over; but the inconvenience of it is jealousy and suspicion, so that he is not believed when he speaks the truth, nor trusted, perhaps, when he means honestly. When a man has once forfeited the reputation of his integrity, he is set fast, and nothing will then serve his turn, neither truth nor falsehood. And I have often thought that God hath, in His great wisdom, hid from men of false and dishonest minds the wonderful advantages of truth and integrity, to the prosperity even of our worldly affairs. These men are so blinded by their covetousness and ambition, that they cannot look beyond a present advantage, nor forbear to seize upon it, though by ways never so indirect; they cannot see so far as to the remote consequences of a steady integrity, and the vast benefit and advantages which it will bring a man at last. Were but this sort of men wise and clear-sighted enough to discern this, they would be honest out of very knavery, not out of any love to honesty and virtue, but with a crafty design to promote and advance more effectually their own interests; and therefore the justice of the Divine Providence hath hid this truest point of wisdom from their eyes, that bad men might not be on equal terms with the just and upright, and serve their own wicked designs by honest and lawful means.—[Tillotson.

Ex-Minister Crampton Honored by Queen Victoria.

The elevation of Sir John Crampton to be Knight Commander of the Bath marks very distinctly the approval of the government of the way in which that gentleman fulfilled his duties as the representative of her Majesty at Washington; and the time and manner of raising him to the dignity may be considered as intended to harmonise with the far more important indications which have been given by Lord Palmerston of his earnest desire to avoid any unnecessary offence to the American Government. Approving as they did of Mr. Crampton's conduct, under circumstances of considerable difficulty, it was, we think, the duty of the government to show, in some unmistakable way, that the aspersions cast upon that gentleman's personal honor found no echo in their minds. To do so at the moment of his landing in this country would perhaps have unnecessarily ruffled our somewhat touchy cousins across the Atlantic. Accordingly occasion was taken to include Mr. Crampton's name in the first list of honors to be conferred upon the diplomatic corps, and along with two other old and public officers, he has been made a K. C. B., in consideration of his long and meritorious services. —[London Globe, Oct. 3.

Number of the Stars.

Of the stars, thousands are visible to the naked eye, and millions are discovered by the telescope. Sir John Herschell calculates that about five and a half millions of stars are visible enough to be distinctly counted in a twenty feet reflector in both hemispheres, and thinks that the actual number is much greater. His illustrious father estimated on one occasion that one hundred and twenty-five thousand stars passed through the field of his forty feet reflector in a quarter of an hour. This would give twelve millions for the entire circuit of the Heavens in a single telescopic zone; and this estimate was made under the assumption that the nebulæ were masses of luminous matter not yet condensed suns. But with the increase of instrumental power, especially under the mighty grasp of Lord Ross's gigantic reflector and the great reflectors at Pulkova and Cambridge, the most irresolvable of these nebulæ have given away; and the better opinion now is, that everyone of them is a galaxy, like our own milky way, composed of millions of suns.

Population of Russia.

In noticing M. de Tegoborski's work on Russia, on May 12, 1855, we ventured to dissent from his statement of the amount of people in Russia, and hinted that the author's candid impartiality was not quite so great as his translator represented. We detected, we thought, throughout, a Russian inclination to magnify the resources of Russia. Its population he set down at 68,000,000 in 1852, and he estimated the increase at 1 per cent, per annum. It should have been, therefore, in 1856 upwards of 70,000,000. Within a few days the Moniteur de l' Armee has published the following as the result of the census of the Russian empire taken by the order of the Emperor at the time of his accession to the throne:—"The total number of the population amounts to 63,000,000, the principal elements of which give results unknown to the rest of Europe. The clergy of the Russian Church stand for the enormous number of 510,000; that of the tolerated creeds, 35,000; the hereditary nobility, 155,000; the petty bourgeoise, including discharged soldiers, 425,000; foreigners residing temporarily, 40,000; different bodies of Cossacks colonized on the Oural, the Don, the Wolga, the Black Sea, the Baikal, the Baschkirs, and the irregular Kalmucks, 2,000,000; the populations of the towns, the middle and lower classes, 5,000,000; the population of the country parts, 45,000,000; the wandering tribes, 500,000; the kingdom of Poland, 4,200,000 the Grand Duchy of Finland, 1,400,000; and the Russian colonies in America, 71,000. At the accession of the Emperor Nicholas the census then taken only gave a population of 51,000,000." M. Tegoborski's estimate was, therefore, as we stated, much to large, and the Russian empire is all the less strong and terrific than he represented it. The available display made of its resources in the late contest is consistent rather with the smallest than the greatest estimate yet published of its population.—[Economist.

Mormonism in New Jersey.

The following article and letter appeared in the State Gazette, Trenton, Sept. 12, and Oct. 10:

There are a considerable number of Mormons in this State; in Monmouth, Ocean and Burlington Counties. Bill Smith, a brother of the prophet, lived for several years in Monmouth county, where he was an apostle of the new faith and made many converts. He was himself a man of vicious character, and a strong advocate of the spiritual wife system, before the Church had declared in favor of polygamy as one of its doctrines. This part of the creed, however, did not meet with much favor, and his attempts to reduce it to practice finally led to his expulsion. We do not understand that, even now, the New Jersey Mormons accept polygamy as an article of their faith. Of course, a practical application of it would ensure for them the crown of martyrdom, as they would infallibly be made acquainted with the inside of the State Prison. The largest congregation of "Latter Day Saints" now in this State is at Toms River, where they have a Church usually attended by about fifty persons. Their numbers were greater, but some thirty members have emigrated to Utah. A correspondent of the Mount Holly Mirror, writing from Hornerstown, gives some information of this peculiar sect. The shepherd of the flock was one Curtis, known as Elder Curtis—a tailor by trade, but, like may individuals who assume clerical robes, not particularly fond of labor. He appeared to be well posted in the creed of his Church, and professed to be a firm believer in the genuineness of the Prophet Joe Smith. He was one of the large number who left this State for Nauvoo, during the first excitement produced by the advent and preaching of Mormonism. Returning, however, after the destruction of that city, he again settled in Hornerstown—where he continued to practice the duties of his Eldership until November last, when he died suddenly. He had but one wife.

The Saint upon whom the mantle of Elder Curtis seems to have fallen, is an Englishman by birth, named Richard Trecedar, who emigrated to America after his conversion to the faith. He is, seemingly, a man of considerable intelligence—has but one wife—and, though not an old man, has thirteen children.

A Mormon Camp Meeting is to be held near this place, shortly, under the charge of Elder Trecedar. The time is not yet fixed, but it will most likely commence on Thursday, Sept. 12th. A large delegation of Saints is expected from Toms River and vicinity, where they are said to be quite numerous.

The society has embraced a number of respectable and wealthy farmers of this neighborhood; but now new converts are seldom made, and, with emigration and the constant falling from grace, the number is gradually dwindling down, and a few years will witness the entire extinction of Mormonism in that section of Monmouth and Ocean.

Cream Ridge, N. J., Sept., 25, 1856.

In looking over the columns of your very valuable, and popular paper of the 12th inst., I observed an article headed "Mormons in New Jersey,"—the greater portion of the article purporting to be from "a correspondent of the Mount Holly Mirror, writing from Hornerstown."

Being formerly acquainted with the facts which drew forth the remarks by said correspondent, and also familiar with the faith of the "Latter Day Saints" or Mormons, as I have heard them preached, justice to "a number of respectable and wealthy Farmers of this neighborhood," I think, demands of me, the correction of some of the statements, contained in said article; also a brief recapitulation of what the faith and hopes of the Mormons are.

"Bill (William) Smith" the brother of the Prophet, did not "live for several years in Monmouth County" neither in New Jersey, only a few months, and was expelled the Church, by the authorities at Nauvoo, for vicious habits; because the Mormons believe in virtue, and chastity. At the same time, they do not believe the acts of one man, or many, have anything to do with the principles of truth emanating from heaven, or ought to militate against the same. They also believe in Polygamy, or the order of a Celestial marriage, for time, and for all eternity, according to the Patriarchal order of the Priesthood—believing that such is a scripture doctrine, and instituted and upheld by the Almighty and practised by Abraham, "the Father of the Faithful," Isaac, Jacob, David, and many others, men with whom God was well pleased, "men after his own heart" and whose God, he declared himself to be. Jesus said unto the Jews, "If ye were the children of Abraham, ye would do the works of Abraham." The Mormons further believe that those who so much oppose and asperse the practice of the Old Prophets, and Patriarchs, "whom God delighted to honor," will never get into the Kingdom of heaven to enjoy their society, because Abraham and his associates would be ashamed of them, and they will have to go to another place, and take up their abode with monogamists, and those that are "cast out of the Kingdom"—which perhaps will be more congenial to their holy feelings. The Mormons believe that adultery and seduction, wilful prostitution, and libertinism, ought to be punished with death, and if such practices were perpetrated in Utah, as there are in all the cities of the United States (in some instances not twenty steps from the Church spire pointing to heaven) they would certainly insure the perpetrators, "not the inside of a State Prison" but a "martyr's crown" for their heinous sins and abominations.

There are, a great many branches of their Church in this State. They have a Church erected at Toms River, and another at Hornerstown. Elder Curtis, the former Pastor of the Branch here, was a virtuous, industrious and good man. Although almost deprived of the use of his left hand by a stroke of the palsy some years previous to his death, yet, he worked and maintained himself, and family, and was at work when death suddenly laid his cold and icy grasp upon him. To the assertions of the Mirror's correspondent notwithstanding. He was at Nauvoo, but returned here at the request of his friends, long before "the destruction of that city."

It is true "he had but one wife;" and the Mormons say he never indulged in any of the vices which are so popular, at the present day in the christian world.

Elder Trecedar the present Pastor of the Church here, is a good and worthy man, "has but one wife—maintains no concubines, and is beloved of all who know him."

The "Camp Meeeting" alluded to, was a "Woods Meeting," held near Hornerstown; it commenced on Friday Sept. 12th, and continued over Sabbath, on which day not less than six hundred carriages, and over two thousand persons were present, some from thirty to forty miles distant. Good attention was given, and many remarked their "prejudice was gone." The meeting was addressed by Elder Trecedar of Hornerstown, Harrison and Cannon of Philadelphia, and Judge Appleby of Utah, formerly of Burlington County New Jersey, but has resided in Utah for the last seven years.

On last Sabbath, another meeting was held on the same ground, although the weather had been quite wet and rainy, some three hundred persons were present. There is a small branch of the Church here. Some years since they numbered some one hundred and fifty, but the greater portion have moved away. They are "respectable," and many are "wealthy," and formerly belonged to the Presbyterian and other churches. The doctrines promulgated by the Mormons, are believed in and advocated by the greater portion of the community here, (although not embraced) more than any other doctrine. Indeed it is not of much use for any other society to undertake to preach where the Mormon Elders have been, for they certainly dissect every doctrine taught by the religious world at the present day, and the clergymen here are really afraid of them, for in several debates the Mormons have used up their antagonists. Hundreds and thousands are embracing their doctrines, and their elders are in every country and clime. Men of wealth and affluence are joining their ranks in the United States and also in Europe, especially in England. Certainly the Bible is no mystery to their elders. Prophecy appears to start into life and being, to the understanding of all, at their touch, or the spirit which their faithful elders bear.

The Mormons believe in God the Father, (not a God without body, parts or passions) and in his son Jesus Christ, and in the atonement, in baptism by immersion by those holding the Holy Priesthood for the remission of sins, and in the laying on of the hands of those authorised for the gift of the Holy Ghost; in Prophets, apostles, patriarchs, elders, bishops, Priests, teachers, and deacons; in the Aaronic and Melchizedeck Presthood, and in the gifts of the Holy Spirit, such as prophecy, miracles, gifts of healing, speaking in unknown tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, in faith, hope, good works, virtue and charity, in the administering of angels; in revelations, dreams visions; the second coming of Christ, the destruction of the wicked, the first resurrection, the millennial reign of one thousand years on the earth, according to Revelations 20th chapter; also in the second resurrection after the millennium, in baptism for the dead, the literal gathering of the Jews, the building up of Zion; the rebuilding of Jerusalem; in polygamy or celestial marriage, for time and for all eternity, in the restoration of all things, in a New Heaven and a new earth; in the Telestial, Terrestrial and Celestial globes or worlds; in crowns, thrones, principalities, sceptres, exaltations and dominions in the eternal worlds; that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of the Lord, and died a martyr to truth, and that his blood and the blood of the Saints martyred in this last dispensation will be required of this nation; that judgment and overthrow awaits the wicked, &c. Indeed they believe too much for me, for they believe ten times more than all the Christian sects put together, yet they make it all appear perfectly scriptural and plain, and prove the same from the Bible. They are firm believers in the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and in the Book of Mormon, as God's law written to Ephraim on this continent. Wherever the elders preach they are generally listened to with marked attention.

Pardon me for thus intruding upon your columns, as my only wishes are to correct erroneous impressions, that have been sent abroad by the "correspondent of the Mirror," who, by the by, is a gentleman of Mount Holly, and who was stopping, some few weeks since, with a gingerbread merchant of Hornorstown, who is very much prejudiced against the Mormons, and all the information the correspondent had, he derived from said merchant. I am no Mormon—never expect to be—but I like free toleration and fair play. I trust you will make the foregoing public, and gratify a number of your subscribers here.

Hay for Cows in Summer.

An observing, intelligent and successful farmer informs us that he is in the practice of feeding his cows with hay in Summer, particularly if the season is such as to afford flush pastures. His reason is that a full, rapid and vigorous growth of grass gives to cattle that feed upon it a desire for something to absorb the excess of the juice of their food. Dry hay they devour greedily, and though in ever so small quantities, evidently with the most beneficial effects. Every farmer must have observed that in dry seasons, horses, cattle and sheep keep in good condition upon herbage parched and apparently scant, while in wet seasons, in all pastures, though always full, the process of fattening with them was slow. Dry fodder in such cases is required to give substance and tenacity to the green, and can be profitably used by feeding it to cattle.

Great Earthquake.

Russian journals are filled with details of the catastrophe at Schemaka, in the Caucasus. On the morning of the 11th of July the weather was very sultry, and a general feeling of suffocation was felt. At length a heavy rumbling noise was heard, followed by a very violent shock of an earthquake. Although the shock lasted only about thirty seconds, 300 houses and more than 100 shops were completely thrown down, and a great many others seriously damaged. Only one person was killed; five were wounded. The loss is estimated at upwards of 400,000 francs.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 8, 1856.

Conference at New York

IT is now some years since New York had a regularly organized Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. For some time back the principles of the kingdom of God have been steadily making their way among the people here and in the country around, through which a considerable number of persons have been added to the Church: in consequence of this new impetus to the work, and many of the European Saints taking up a temporary residence in this and neighboring States, preparatory to their emigration to Utah, it became necessary to organize them into a Conference. We had the satisfaction on Sunday last of meeting with the Saints in that capacity, and were pleased to see so many of our brethren and sisters from other States, as well as from other counties of New York State, assembled on the occasion. It was cheering to witness the peace and joy that beamed on every countenance. We regretted much that the day was not long enough to enable the delegates to have spoken at greater length: the spirit that they breathed showed they felt that it was good to serve the Lord and to labor in His kingdom.

Since we intimated our intention to hold a Conference in this city and requested the scattered Saints to report themselves, we have received a goodly number of interesting letters, and considering that our notice was only published two weeks previous to the day set apart for this purpose, we anticipate receiving yet many more. By those already received we find Mormons in places where we had no idea of finding them, and breathing a better spirit than we would have been warranted in anticipating. At the Exodus of the Church from Illinois, all who could muster faith, teams, and wagons ventured on to the almost boundless and unknown prairie. The Priesthood thus being taken for a time from the States, and the publication of Mormon papers likewise being discontinued, those who were left behind were deprived of the necessary means of uniting together, or gaining information of the movements of the Church. For those who had not the power to gather with the body of the Saints, and share in the toils, dangers, and privations of wilderness life we have always had a deep sympathy, and believed that the Lord would not withhold the light of His spirit from them till a more favorable day should dawn upon them. The letters that we have recently received show a lively interest in many quarters for the great cause in which we are engaged, and demonstrate that the Eastern mission and its labors, through THE MORMON, have not been in vain. We doubt not that many who could have gathered to the wilderness, and did not, have had their dark and cloudy day, and are now satisfied that it is better to "be partakers of the afflictions of the gospel" than to shun the fight.

The sacred principle—"Sacrifice brings forth the blessings of Heaven," has to be realized by every being who seeks salvation. Those who do it, as have the faithful hardy laborers at home, missionaries abroad, "pioneers" and "battalion boys" know it to be so, and those who have not had their experience cannot fail to perceive the difference between their relative positions—the faithful Utonians are ahead. Let the lost time, therefore, of the past be a sufficient warning for the scattered Saints to avoid in future the Idols of a corrupt world.

As George J. Taylor has been appointed to the Presidency of this Conference by the nomination and unanimous vote of the Council as well as by the assembled Conference, we trust that he will show by his faithfulness and diligence in the discharge of his duties, that he has been worthy of the confidence of his brethren. He has our blessing and charge to do right, and we say to him: Trust in the Lord, and he shall be your best friend and strongest support. Let the Saints listen to him and carry out his counsels, and the Lord shall honor and bless both President and people.

Mormonism is so unlike everything else that is known among men, that we dare say outsiders think we are strange folks. They must have thought our way of doing business on Sunday very different from that manifested at the present time among all classes of Christians and politicians. Instead of meeting in cliques to thrust this or that person upon the people, we meet in peace, do our business in peace, have a hearty Amen to every decision, and after all business is over, and the life that now is requires the Saints to return home, it is pleasant to hear, instead of curses, menaces and deep-toned murmurs—the sweet and soft "Good bye, God bless you."

New Pamphlets.

SOME weeks since we intimated that President Orson Pratt had commenced the publication of a series of pamphlets to carry out his new plan of evangelizing every nook and corner of Great Britain and Ireland. To speak commendatory of the writings of this Apostle is altogether unnecessary to those who have the slightest acquaintance with him, the simple mention of his name will ensure the attention of every reader in search of Truth. We have only received the copies on "The True Faith," "The True Repentance," and "Water Baptism," but anticipate receiving each number as published.

We should be pleased to see President Pratt's pamphlets in active circulation in this country, and as the people are awakening from their slumbers and discovering that they have been deceived by Editors and Priests about the real facts of Mormon history, it will be well for the members of the Priesthood and the Saints to place in the hands of honest upright people such works, that they may learn the ways of life and salvation, rejoice therein, and know that the Mormons have suffered and are maligned because they will honor God by keeping His Holy Laws, instead of feeding on the husks of corrupt modern Christianism.

All orders sent to this office for these pamphlets will be forwarded to President Pratt, and meet prompt attention. Send on your orders.

While writing about pamphlets for distribution we may say that we do not expect that any of the Elders in this country, under our Presidency, will publish anything without making us first acquainted with their intention. This order is necessary to prevent confusion and needless expense.

Col. A. W. Babbitt.

As no doubt the acquaintances, friends and relatives of the Secretary of Utah, or late Secretary as we fear it is, will look to us for information respecting the recent reports from the plains, we publish the following items which leave but little or no room for hope of the Colonel's safety. The N. Y. Herald's Omaha correspondent in his letter dated 9th ult., writing of a German that he had conversed with who was one of a party of Californians that had been attacked by the same Indians, about the same time that Colonel Babbitt is supposed to have been murdered, says:

"He brings news, not only of the confirmation of the report of the attack and almost total massacre of a train bound for Salt Lake, in charge of Col. Babbitt, Secretary of Utah, but later, of the massacre of the next train, in which Col. B. himself travelled, and of the murder of Col. B."

President Erastus Snow, writes us from St. Louis, Oct. 26th from which we make the following extract:

"I have just seen Mr. Jno. M. Hockaday on his return from Washington—who informs me that the contract for carrying the Mail between Independence and Salt Lake City is given Hiram Kimball Esq., of Utah for $23,000. It is uncertain whether any mail will leave Independence the first of December. Mr. H. also informs me that news have been received in Washington from the Commander at Fort Kearney that some Treasury warrants and other papers, belonging to Col. A. W. Babbitt, have been found on the North side of the Platte and brought to the Fort by Mr. Ashumbeaux from Green River, which confirms the previous supposition of the murder of himself and party.

"Elder Geo. A. Smith, and myself expect to start to day up the Mississippi to visit the Saints at Alton and Keokuk. Col Smith is in fine health and spirits."

We have expected to learn something reliable from the plains through the Council Bluffs Bugle, touching the murder of Mr. Babbitt as it is conducted by his relative Mr. Johnston, but have not seen the slightest allusion even to the report, perhaps we have not received a full file of that paper. The above extracts is all we have learned additional to what we have already published.

Respecting the contract for the Utah Mail named in the above extract we consider it by far too small a sum for the work to be done. Magraw's contract was only $6,000 less in the begining but it had to be doubled and then the contract was not half executed. If Mr. Kimball can do the work at the above sum we shall be satisfied and considerably relieved from the obligation of stiring up the Utah mail contractor to diligence. We know Mr. K. to be an energetic man and in what he engages will do his utmost, and while this inspires us with hope that he will fulfil his contract we trust he may be no loser by it.

An Anonymous Letter.

WE have received a letter from Wilmington, N. C., dated Nov. 1st, intended to reach Pres. Brigham Young through our paper. We beg to inform "Esau" that we do not publish anonymous letters, nor letters signed by initials without receiving for our own satisfaction the bona fide name of the writer. The communication above referred to shall be forwarded to President Young but we prefer that future letters from the same quarter be posted direct for Salt Lake City.

Judge W. I. Appleby.

THE Judge left on Thursday morning for Toms River, N. J. He expects to visit several of the churches, and be absent about four or five weeks. His health is not so good as it has been of late, but we trust that his travelling may increase his health. We doubt not that the Saints will rebeive him kindly and listen to his instructions. We purpose being at Philadelphia on Sunday.

Minutes

Of a Council and Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held at Brooklyn and New-York, Nov. 1st and 24, 1856.

According to notice, the members of the Council of the New York Branch, together with delegates from different States, met in Council at the residence of President John Taylor, East Brooklyn, on Saturday Nov. 1st, at 8 P. M.

The Council was opened by singing the hymn "Oh say what is truth." Prayer by Elder Wm. I. Appleby. Elder Wm. J. Silver was appointed Clerk, and Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse, Reporter.

President Taylor addressed the Council on the nature of the business to be presented at the Conference; stated that as the work of the Lord in the Eastern States had changed considerably for the better during the last eighteen months, he thought it necessary to have a Conference organized with head quarters at New York, in order that the Saints scattered in different towns and villages, might be looked after and know that the Priesthood of God was desirous to work for their salvation, and set them in order that they likewise might labor for the upbuilding of the Kingdom. A representation of the condition and numbers of the Saints being called for, President Wm. H. Miles, gave in the statistical report of the New York Branch, and stated that the Saints were progressing in good works, were in good standing, and desirous of carrying out the counsels of the authorities of the Church. He had received several letters from individuals scattered in this State, where there were no organized Branches, who were desirous that they might be recognized by the Conference.

President E. R. Young represented the Saints in Connecticut, gave in a report of members, their contributions and stated that the principles of Salvation were receiving in some places a very favorable hearing and some had lately been baptized. The visits of Presidents Taylor, Geo. A. Smith, Erastus Snow and other brethren had been strengthening to the Saints, and a great assistance to the Priesthood residing in Westport and Norwalk.

President Solomon Mack represented the Saints in New Hampshire, expressed his satisfaction at the prospect of the new organization of a Conference, and was confident that the Saints where he resided would endeavour to discharge their duties and in future labor for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God.

Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse represented by letters that had been received at THE MORMON Office the Saints in Vermont, Massachusetts, North Carolina, and scattered Saints in New York State. All the letters had indicated a strong desire on the part of the Saints represented to be recognized by the Conference; the writers manifesting the highest confidence in the authorities of the Church and a great desire to be visited by President Taylor, or those whom he might appoint.

After some observations and instructions from President Taylor, the Council terminated by singing "Come all ye sons of God"—prayer by Elder Bouton, of Norwalk.

SUNDAY MORNING.

At 9 A. M., Priesthood met in Brookes' Assembly Rooms, Broome street, New York. Meeting opened by singing a hymn. Prayer by President Miles. President Taylor delivered a very excellent address on the obligation of those who bear the name of Saints of God, to be honest, upright and honorable in all their relationships with those out of the Church as well as with their brethren and exposed the folly of persons who thought they could do wrong and hide it from the eyes of the Lord or His servants. The preparatory business of the Conference was attended to.

At half-past 10 o'clock, the appointed hour for the opening of the Conference, the Saints arrived in considerable numbers from different States. After a few minutes' interval the excellent choir of the New York Branch, under the direction of Elder C. R. Savage, sung "The Morning Breaks." Prayer by President Angus M. Cannon, of Pennsylvania Conference.

President Taylor said it was now some time since a Conference had been held in New York. The continual emigration to the West where the body of the Church was located had time and again weakened and broken up previous organizations. Many of the Saints, in the absence of the regularly organized Priesthood, had been faithful to their covenants, but some had fallen into darkness and wickedness, and had consequently been excommunicated from the Church. Some who had been left in charge had been unfaithful, so that when he arrived in New York, with a few other brethren from Utah, there was no organization; the Saints, with few exceptions, were dull and broken down in spirits. Those among them who were honest in heart, and who had kept themselves unspotted from the world, had revived in their spirits. Other members of the Church, having lately arrived from Europe, and located temporarily in this State, the position of things was now such as to warrant a new organization. It was necessary that every man should have his place in the kingdom, do the work assigned to him, and be found in that place when wanted: for this purpose he had informed the scattered Saints through THE MORMON to send in representations of their whereabouts and their feelings toward the great cause of Redemption, and they were now assembled to hear those representations, and to make the Saints acquainted with the financial position of their branches and their obligations to the Church. Much valuable instruction was given by President Taylor, in which he set forth that the work of the Last Days had not been brought to its present position by praying alone, but by uniting to prayer a wise, judicious, and constant application of every talent, energy, and all the substance of those whose hearts were bent on obtaining salvation. He showed the relationship of the authorities of the Church to the great body of the Saints; how that all men were responsible for the faithful discharge of the duties pertaining to their offices, and that inasmuch as the Saints were to be governed by the Elders, it was their privilege to manifest their confidence or want of confidence in them. The presiding authorities of the Church would, therefore, be set before them to be sustained by their united action, or to be rejected by them if they have done any evil.

President Taylor proposed that Elder Appleby preside over the assembled Conference. Unanimously carried.

The following resolutions were moved, put to vote, and unanimously carried:

That this Conference uphold President Brigham Young as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints throughout the earth, with President Heber C. Kimball as his First, and Jedediah M. Grant as his Second Counsellor; John Smith as Patriarch to the whole Church; Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, Geo. A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, C. C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, F. D. Richards, as the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as President; George A. Smith as Historian of the Church; John Taylor as President of the Church in the Eastern States.

Presidents Taylor, George A. Smith, and Dr. Bernhisel, as the Delegation of Utah to Congress, and in such capacity to sustain them by faith, prayer, and firm determination to be guided by their counsels and instructions relative thereto.

Judge W. I. Appleby in the capacity of a Travelling High Priest to the Churches in the Eastern States, whose duties will be to visit the branches, to assist and counsel the officers of the same, in setting them in order wherever he travels, in comforting and teaching the Saints their duties, and especially in instructing them on their responsibilites relative to THE MORMON, and in carrying out the counsels he may receive from time to time from President Taylor; Elders T. B. H. Stenhouse and G. J. Taylor, as Assistants in the publication of THE MORMON; Elders John F. Snediker, Jacob Hofheins, and Alexander Ott, as Travelling Elders on mission to the German population in the Eastern States, and to others as instructed by their respective Presidents; Elder Arthur P. Welchman, as a Travelling Elder.

A statistical report of the Branches and their condition being called for, Presidents Wm. H. Miles, represented, as at council the previous evening, New York; E. R. Young, Connecticut; Solomon Mack, New Hampshire; John Druce, Haverstraw; Francis K. Benedict, of Long Island; and the scattered Saints by letter. The Conference unanimously voted to accept the reports and sustain the Delegates in their Presidency.

Elder Wm. H. Miles was sustained President of the New York Branch; Elders Aaron Smethurst and John B. Archer were sustained as his Counsellors. Elder Wm. J. Silver, Secretary of the Branch and Conference; Elders Miles and Dulin, Treasurers to the Branch. The members of the Council and the President of Quorums were severally sustained in their positions. Elder Alexander Ott was appointed to preside over the Elders' Quorum. Singing. Prayer by President Appleby. Adjourned till 3 P. M.

AFTERNOON.

The meeting was opened by singing.

Prayer by Elder John Druce.

On the motion of Elder Stenhouse, and in accordance with the wish of the Council and delegates assembled, Elder George J. Taylor was appointed to preside over the newly organized Conference, embracing all the Branches and scattered Saints unconnected with the Philadelphia District.

During the administration of the sacrament Elder Miles addressed the Saints, bore his testimony to the divinity of Mormonism, and his determination to consecrate his labors to its upbuilding.

Elder Cannon spoke of the joy and satisfaction which he experienced in the discharge of his duties, and bore a spirited testimony to the Latter-day work.

Elder Young made some excellent remarks on the difference between the position of the Church of Christ in this generation and the same under former Apostles. He did not feel like the moaning Christians, who were always talking about, "had they lived in the days of Peter and Paul;" for he was grateful that he had an existence on this earth in this generation—a generation in which the work of God must prevail. The children of God in former days suffered persecution, and the powers of darkness were triumphant; but though persecution had been the lot of this people, even in America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," the Saints had the assurance of the Lord that the principles of truth will ultimately prevail.

Elder Druce rose to express his gratitude to the Lord and His servants for the opportunity afforded him that day in meeting with the Saints; he was glad to see the Gospel spreading through the nations of the earth, and the Saints laboring to promote the interest of God's kingdom. Though they were few in number in Haverstraw, he was nevertheless happy to say they were rejoicing in the work of the Lord, and looking forward to join at an early day their brethren in Utah.

Elder Mack said he had looked forward to this Conference meeting with satisfaction, in the anticipation of meeting with his brethren, and had indeed been made glad with seeing such a concourse of persons who were rejoicing in the hope of the Gospel that had been revealed in this generation through the ministration of angels. He made some very excellent remarks on the darkness that hindered the establishment of the Gospel in former ages.

Elder Benedict stated he had been a long time in the Church, and had held on to it through dark and cloudy days, and was now glad to see it rising to its true position. The number of persons to speak during the Conference prevented long speeches, for he felt so happy that he could have spoken some time longer to express his joy.

Elder George J. Taylor being introduced to the Conference expressed his gratitude to the Saints for the manifestation of their confidence in the ratification of his appointment to the Presidency of the Conference. He had endeavored to discharge the duties that had been assigned him in times past, and should endeavor to do so in all time to come.

Elder Bouton said it afforded him great pleasure to meet with the Saints on the present occasion. It had been a day calculated to cause the hearts of the Saints to rejoice. He expressed his determination to labor to roll on the work of God.

Elders Hopheins, Welchman, and Ott bore testimony to the work of the Lord, and said the sentiments expressed by those who had already spoken were their sentiments likewise.

President Appleby gave a spirited address which found an echo in the bosoms of the Saints, and produced much good.

Choir sung a Doxology. Prayer by Elder Appleby.

Adjourned till half-past 6.

Evening meeting opened by singing. Prayer by Elder Hopheins. Choir sung.

President John Taylor delivered a very impressive and eloquent discourse, which commanded the best attention of a large and respectable audience.

President Appleby made some remarks, and intimated his intention of visiting at the earliest opportunity, all the Saints throughout the Conference.

The Election.

WE anticipated last week that we should now be able to announce the termination of a struggle that is believed to be without a parallel in the history of elections; but this morning (Thursday) there is no certainty in the columns of the city papers, except the Daily News, which says:

"We feel as if a heavy load were lifted from us—a dread of great but unknown dangers brushed away—until the silent, but all-powerful ballot has pronounced us free and independent.

"The question settled—no more fears, no more doubts—James Buchanan and John C. Breckenridge, President and Vice-President of the United States—Vox populi, vox Dei."

The returns from the other States that reached New York from Tuesday evening till Wednesday morning left no room to doubt of the election of Mr. Buchanan. Pennsylvania and New Jersey, the States closely contested by Mr. Fremont, and on which his friends had big hopes, went for Buchanan. The Southern States, some of which have been considered likely to go for Mr. Fillmore, have not yet, through damage done by a recent storm to the telegraph line, been heard from definitely. Should the Southern States, Tennessee and Kentucky, "go Fillmore," and California "go Fremont," (from the latter of which there can be no news for two weeks to come,) then the election goes into the House.

The Daily News, on the assurance of unofficial reports, still seemingly worthy of credit, announces that these doubtful States have "gone the Democratic ticket," and publishes the following:

If the above statistics be confirmed, in a few hours the campaign is over, and next March Mr. Buchanan vacates the quiet retreat of Wheatland, to be dunned and bored to death by the "interested" till March, 1861.

All parties we presume will be glad that the election is over. Everything in commerce has suffered during the last three months. We should think that editors, above all other men, are thankful for a rest. The labor of manufacturing the wholesale misrepresentation and lying, with which they have charged each other, must have been very fatiguing. If some bought indulgences before they commenced, they have taken the worth of their money We cannot conceive how even the mildest of them could consent to do the dirty work they have done for ten thousand Mariposas.

2 P. M.—Buchanan's election is now sure.

Correspondence of Judge Appleby.

NEW YORK, Oct. 29, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR,—In looking over the columns of the Tribune a few days since, I observed the following paragraph, viz:—

"'REVISION OF THE BIBLE.'—The subject of the revision of the present English Translation of the Bible continues to receive considerable attention in England. The London Times has published two long letters, by the Rev. Dr. Cumming, in the second of which he contrasts by extracts, the authorized translation with the Douai or Rheims versions, the Unitarian Improved Testament and some of the recent issues of the American Bible Union, and concludes by saying, that besides displaying literary inferiority, the Douai or Rheims Translation, is inspired by a Romish bias, the New Version of the American Union by a Baptist and Rationalistic bias, and the 'Improved Version' by a Unitarian bias."

By the foregoing we perceive that the religious world of the present day are not satisfied with the "Good old Bible," for which they have had such pretended reverence and veneration. But each "popular society" must have a special Translation to suit themselves, adapted to their "iron bound and bigoted creeds" and particular doctrines. Thereby "wresting the Scriptures to their own destruction." Thus the Baptists, Unitarians, and Presbyterians, must each have an "Improved Version," each "authorized" with the Romish Translation. One "biased with Romanism," another with the "Baptist bias," another with the "Unitarian bias," &c.

Indeed the religious world at present, and for centuries past might well dispense with three-fourths of the present Bible (King James's Translation) in addition to what they have already discarded, and then have a surplus, more than they believe, or practice. The scriptures of the Old Testament are of no use or benefit to them, believing that they are all fulfilled, that the Prophecies contained therein will never come to pass—that "The Canon of Scripture is full," that God will never again speak from the Heavens to man—that all we want in this enlightened age, is a small morsel of the History of what the ancient Saints received and enjoyed in the "dark ages," and which "now is done away, and no longer needed, in this enlightened age of Gospel liberty."

But it is not so with the Saints of God, they want all the truth that has been revealed, all that is being revealed, and all that the Lord may see proper to reveal, and believe that the Bible does not contain but a small portion of the truths and revelations of God to man. But, as the Prophet Nephi in the Book of Mormon says: "That corrupt and abominable Church, the whore of the whole earth, has caused the most plain and precious things to be taken away."

We are the more astonished at the professing Christian clergy's futile and absurd proceedings, when we reflect that in their endeavors to militate against the Book of Mormon, or of God giving any more revelation, they will refer to the saying of John in the last chapter of Revelations: "If any man shall add unto these things &c., God shall add unto him the plagues" &c. "And if any man shall take away from the words of the Book of this Prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the Book of Life," &c., hereby exposing their consumate ignorance and imbecility. John had reference to the "Book of this Prophecy," or Revelation, and nothing else. He was commanded to write what he saw in a Book: see Rev. Chap. i. 11v. The curse also emphatically relates to "This Prophecy," and does not prevent God from adding, or giving as many more Revelations at any time. Furthermore John wrote his Gospel long after he wrote his Revelations, but that did not "add to it," man was not to add, neither was the Revelation compiled with other Scriptures, until long after it was given.

Here I would inquire in what situation is the religious world, according to the foregoing, have they not added their own notions and interpolations of men to the Scriptures? have they not in their Translations "taken away the most plain and precious things?" surely they have. How ridiculous it appears for uninspired men, by their own wisdom, to presume or undertake to translate, illustrate, or give the meaning of what Prophets, Seers and Apostles saw and wrote when they were endowed by the Spirit of the Almighty, "and spoke as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost," "and the testimony of Jesus, which is the Spirit of Prophecy." But they have undertaken it, without believing the Scripture, which says: "No great or mighty are often called, but that God takes the weak things of the world to confound the wisdom of the wise," and "That no man knows the things of God, except by the Spirit of God." Hence it is not by the wisdom obtained at seminaries or colleges, for that knows not God, neither his Word, or the true translation thereof.

Hence the reference to Books left out, the grammatical errors and contradictions that are to be found in the present translation of the Bible by the numerous Atheists and Infidels, existing by reason thereof, not having the spirit of God that searcheth the deep things of His word, and separates truth from error.

By referring to the scriptures, we find the following Books, quoted in the Old and New Testaments, not to be found in the Bible, viz.:

"Book of Wars of the Lord," Num. xxi. 14.
"Book of Jasher," Josh. x. 13; 2 Sam. i. 17, 18.
"Book of the Acts of Solomon," 1 Kings xi. 41.
"Book of Samuel the Seer, and Nathan the Prophet, and Gad the Seer," 1 Chron. xxix. 29.
"Book of Abijah the Prophet and Vision of Iddo the Seer," 2 Chron. ix. 29.
"Book of Shemeiah the Prophet," 2 Chron. xii. 15.
"Book of the Story of the Prophet Iddo," 2 Chro. xiii. 22.
"Book of Jehu," 2 Chron. xx. 34.
"The Story of the Book of the Kings," 2 Chron. xxiv. 27.
"The Book of the Acts of Uzziah," 2 Chron. xxvi. 22.
"The Acts of Manasseh written among the Sayings of the Seers," 2 Chron. xxxiii. 18, 19.
"The Lamentations of Israel were written, but not to be found," 2 Chron. xxxv. 25.
"The Prophecy of Urijah," Jer. xxvi. 20.
"First Epistle to the Corinthians," 1 Cor. v. 9.
"Epistle Concerning the Common Salvation," Jude 3d verse.
"Prophecy of Enoch," Jude 14 v.
"Many Gospels," Luke i. 1, 2.

Here we have no less than seventeen Books referred to, of the writings of Seers and Prophets, containing Gospels, &c., taken away and left out by a corrupt church and uninspired men. We also find some ridiculous grammatical errors, with all their boasted erudition; a sample I will quote: "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden," &c., Gen. iii. 8. Again: "And the Lord plagued the people because they made the calf, which Aaron made," Ex. xxxii. 35; also: "Set Jesus on a colt and ass" Mat. xxi. 7; likewise, Heb. vii. 3, where some ignorant translator has made Paul to say that Melchizedec "was without father, mother, descent, beginning of days or end of years." Paul had not the least reference to Melchizedec, but the priesthood, which he held; for, in the next verse he says, "Now consider how great this man was," &c. See also Gen. xiv. 18, 19.

Look also at the contradictions. See Gen. xxii. 1: "God did tempt Abraham." See James i. 13: "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." Again, John viii. 14: "Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true." See John v. 31: "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true." Also, Acts ix. 7: "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." See Acts xxii. 9; "But they heard not the voice of him that spoke to him." Likewise, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1: "And he (the Lord) moved David against them, to go and number Israel and Judah." See 1 Chron. xxi. 1: "And Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel," &c., all the fruits of "this world's wisdom."

Here permit me to give a brief history of the translation of the Bible, the compilations, &c.

The Scriptures at first were pure and plain, written in Hebrew, on parchment, as the several Seers, Patriarchs, and Prophets received them from the Almighty; but it was a great elapse of time before any portion of them were compiled. They were handed down from the Fathers from the beginning to Abraham, he being a lawful heir to the priesthood and promises, "the Record fell into his hands," containing an account of the Planet Kolob, the Celestial Residence, the Organization of Intelligences, Election of Great and Noble Spirits in the Eternal Worlds for God's Rulers on the Earth, Fall of Lucifer, and the spirits "which kept not their first estate," Organization of this Globe, Fall of Adam, Plan of Salvation, Promise of the Only Begotten, Order of the Priesthood, Celestial Astronomy, History of Enoch, Noah, and the Flood, the first settlement of the land of Egypt, Cause of Idolatry, Canaanites, &c., &c.

After which it appears the "Records" were taken by the Jews into Egypt, and when they were led out by Moses, they carried what Scriptures they had along with them, and retained them (together with others they received) and carried them to Babylon in their captivity. After their return from the Babylonish captivity, Esdras (about 540 years B. C.) compiled the Scriptures of the Old Testament so far as his day. They were written in Chaldeaic, from the Hebrew, but not in chapter or verse.

The first version of the Septuagint was in Greek, from the Chaldee, under the patronage of Ptolomy Philadelphus. This translation is called "Translation of the Seventy," because seventy men of the most profound erudition were chosen to assist in the translation. They, like Esdras, compiled their translation, without chapter or verse.

The first division of the Scriptures into chapters was made by one Hugo De Sancto, Cairo, A. D. 1240, and author of the First Concordance to the Bible. They were first compiled in verse by Mordecai Nathan, a Jew, in A. D. 1445.

At the celebrated Council of Trent that was held under Paul 3d, (and continued for twenty-sessions,) to take into consideration what books the (uninspired) Council considered "canonical," the following named were rejected, viz: Book of Enoch, 3d and 4th Books of Esdras, Apocraphy, Apocraphal New Testament, Epistle of St. Barnabas, Epistle of Paul to the Laodeceans, Revelation of St. John, only as Apocraphal, Christ's Letter to Agabus, Epistle of Paul to Seneca, &c.

The oldest translation of the Bible is the Samaritan; the author is not known; it only contains the Penteteuch (i. e., the five Books of Moses.) In Anglo-Saxon, 709; First in English, by Wickliffe, in 1360, but was never printed; Arabic Psalter, 1516; Swedish, 1534; Bohemian, 1539; Danish, 1550; Irish, 1550; Crotian, 1562; Icelandic, 1584; Armenian, 1664; Gothic, 1665; Malayan, 1670; Indian, 1685; Malabarian, 1711; Coptic, 1716; Greson, 1720.

The New Testament was first translated by William Tyndall, A. D. 1526, but most of the copies were burned. In 1532, he, with his associates, finished the translating of the whole Bible (Apocraphy excepted); but it did not please Henry VIII., for soon after he had Tyndall arrested and burnt as a heretic at the stake at Flanders.

In 1568, another edition appeared by Archbishop Parker, called the "Bishop's Bible." This translation was used in the churches for forty years; but one called the "Geneva Bible" was used in their houses.

King James bore an inveterate hatred to both translations, also to the Rhemish, or Douay Bible, and appears was determined to have a translation to suit himself; he, therefore, issued orders for a new translation altogether; accordingly fifty-four "learned men" were appointed, but forty-seven did the work seven having died before they commenced, or else declined. In 1613, it was published. After the publication all other translations soon fell into disuse. The same order was observed in compiling it as the Council of Trent; but in deciding what books were canonical, the Revelation of St. John was only retained by one vote. James's Epistle was only retained by one vote also. It was considered by those "learned men" that James's teachings clashed with Paul's, wherein James says: "Ye see, then, how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." Paul says: "it is not by works, but by grace are ye saved;" and, no doubt, a lazy religion, one without works, suited them best, desired to leave out James's teachings, but Providence overruled, and James's Epistle and John's Revelation were compiled.

King James' was a fair specimen of an "Established Church." He, like others of the present day, wanted a Bible to conform to his own views, and leave out that which did not. Yet he was a great man, having married and divorced three different wives during his life; also to be "Head of a Church built up by Henry VIII., a dissenter from the Church of Rome, who had Tyndall burned at the stake—married, divorced and beheaded six different wives during his life, with other deeds I will not insert here, but refer your readers to history.

The Italian translation was made by a Monk, A. D. 1471; Spanish, 1500; Flemish, 1518; Welsh, 1536; Latin Vulgate, 1540; Ethiopic, 1548; Persian Pentateuch, 1557; Slavonic, 1581; Polish, 1599; Turkish, 1721; French, by Peter De Vaux, Chief of the Waldenses, 1160; German—the most ancient in that tongue is that of Uphilta, Bishop of the Goths, A. D. 360. The Bengal translation appeared about 1840; Chinese, about 1843; Gaelic, about the same time, &c.

Now, we have three more new translations of the Scriptures—Baptist, Presbyterian and Unitarian—all "biased," as Dr. Cumming says, to suit their own creeds—translated by the wisdom of this world, without that spirit by which they were written. O, ye Prophets, Patriarchs, and Apostles of old; ye who lived in the "dark ages:" ye who spoke and wrote not by your own wisdom, or the worlds, "but as ye were moved upon by the Holy Ghost:" Why did ye not live in this our day of "Gospel light and intelligence," and receive your wisdom, and write by the precepts of men, instead of the absurd idea of writing, speaking, or translating anything by the gift and power of God! Surely the day has come, as Paul said; "when the people would not endure sound doctrine, but heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they should turn their ears from the truth unto fables;" "always learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." But thanks and praise be given to Him who rules on high and sways the destinies of men; He has spoken from the heavens in these days, raised up a Prophet, Seer and Revelator, who has, by commandment and the aid of the Urim and Thummim, and the power of inspiration, translated and brought back and restored "the most plain and precious things" that have been taken away by uninspired men, under the authority of a corrupt and apostate church, so that the Saints of Latter Days know, understand and comprehend truth from error, and the inspiration of the Almighty from the wisdom of men. W. I. Appleby.

Correspondence from England.

8 Ravensworth St., Bishopwearmouth, Sunderland, Eng., Oct. 16, 1856.

Pres. Taylor—I remember when riding with you in your carriage from Iron County to Salt Lake City, you expressed a wish that I should write to your occasionally when in England, and I believe I promised that I would endeavor to do so, but have failed in doing my duty in this thing. I hope you will pardon my negligence; it is more from the want of ability than want of will on my part.

In the first place I will say I am thankful above all things in the world that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, for I can truly say that I never knew what real joy and happiness were until I became a "Mormon," notwithstanding, I am at the same time persecuted and hated by the whole of my relatives and friends for being a Saint. They have held out, as they think, strong inducements to get me to discard my religion and remain with them, which, were I to comply with, I would not only act against my own conviction and knowledge, but also scripture, reason and true philosophy, and become of all men the most miserable. If I had not a knowledge for myself that the work in which I am engaged is the work of God I certainly could not endure the trials through which the Saints have to pass.

During my seven years experience in this Church (four of which I have spent most agreeably and profitably in Utah) I have had ample opportunities of testing with strict scrutiny the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and his successor President Brigham Young. Never from the first to the present have I had a moment's cause to regret, my joy has been increasing and every day's experience binds me more indissolubly to my religion. Two years this day I landed in Liverpool on my mission "without purse or scrip," to this, my native country, since that time I have been engaged as deputed by those over me in preaching the Gospel and administering in the ordinances thereof. My mission has not been altogether of a local nature, and in my travels I often meet with items which would be interesting to your readers had I time and opportunity to note them. The doings and opperations of the present century will form a very interesting chapter for future historians. To me, my mission is a great school and one of a very interesting and instructive nature, and I thank the Lord and my brethren for it. My varied and numerous associations and duties bring me in contact with every variety of spirits and human beings whose dispositions and characters I can as a general thing easily learn.

The gross darkness spoken of by Isaiah, is much more apparent to me now than when I first entered this Kingdom. The fearful increase of wickedness on the one hand and my own spiritual advancement on the other, no doubt cause me to see more obviously, the religious, political and social deformity and irregularity that every where exists.

I am happy to say the work of the Lord is rolling forth in Old England, and many are being added to the Church, notwithstanding the untireing efforts of hireling priests to put it down, in doing which, they only expose the rottenness of their own man-made systems and enhance the beauty and value of the pure Gospel of Christ as preached by us.

The Saints in this country are increasing in faith and good works, which is plainly manifested through their willingness to pay their tithing, and in their practically endorsing every precept and commandment of the Church given them by the authorities over them.

President Pratt is issuing a series of very interesting and instructive tracts on the principles of the Gospel, which we design distributing on an extensive scale, that men may be more speedily warned of their duties, and the pending judgments that await the nations of the earth for their wickedness.

I am receiving a regular file of your invaluable journal, which posts me up on the political and other movements of the Americans, and the present and future prosperity and prospects of Zion and her choice people.

I occasionally forward you an English paper which I trust you receive.

Please tender my kind regards to Bros. George A. Smith and Erastus Snow, and with these few lines accept as ever my love and esteem, praying that the rich blessings of Heaven may attend you in all your labors. I remain your humble and affectionate brother in Christ. Henry Lunt.

P. S.—Bros. Jacob Gibson, O. G. Workman and A. M. Musser, from Zion are laboring in connection with me. They are well and are magnifying their callings as faithful servants of the Lord. H. L.

Correspondence from Vermont.

North Chester, Vt., Oct. 29, 1856.

To the Editor of The Mormon.

Dear Bro. Taylor: It is with pleasure I take up my pen to write you a line by way of information, hoping the same may find you and your associates in good health and prosperous circumstances. I see by the last number of The Mormon, which I received yesterday, a notice of a Conference in New York city next Sabbath, also for all that can to attend. As it regards myself, I should be highly pleased to be present if it were convenient, but such is impossible at the present time. As it regards the Saints in these parts, I will say there is no organization of the Church, but some scattered members, say ten, twenty or thirty miles apart. There are none in this town but myself and family. So far as we know our feelings and desires, I will say that we have full confidence in the great work of the last days and in the organization of the kingdom of our God, and do know most assuredly, by the powers and revelations of Jesus Christ unto us, that God has restored the holy priesthood and organized his kingdom once more upon the earth. We have also full confidence in the present authorities of the Church, and feel bound to sustain them by our faith and prayers; and we desire to be numbered with the Saints and enjoy their confidence and fellowship. We are striving to do as well as we can, until the Lord opens our way, and then we are bound for the mountains of Israel. We came to this town last spring in consequence of there being employment. We had not been here long before it became known that I was a "Mormon minister." Some wished me to preach, others opposed; finally, they opened the school-house, and I preached to them with, I believe, much liberty and good attention. No one raised his voice against the things I advanced, and most of them appeared satisfied; but it appeared it did not suit the "old gentleman," so he goes to work and gets some of them in a rage. Some threaten one thing, and some another; but all this was nothing new to me, for I had seen and heard of such things before. I am calculating to open my house for meetings on the Sabbath, and give them a faithful testimony, and leave the consequences with my Heavenly Father.

With regard to the scattered members in these parts, I believe most of them are anxious to gather with the Saints, but either lack means or are bound by other ties. I have urged them, when I have seen them, to subscribe for The Mormon. Some have taken it; others have made excuses, or partly promised to take it. I have lent books and pamphlets in this vicinity, which I expect will result in good; but well might the Apostle say, "The whole world lieth in the arms of the wicked one." Believe me, yours with respect in the Gospel James Burgess.

[Let Brother B. get the scattered Saints of his acquaintance on the Mormon list, and let them read it, read it attentively, and light will dawn upon their minds. The Spirit of the Most High will burn in their bosoms, and they will soon put their shoulder to the wheel, and find that the Kingdom of God outshines in beauty the riches of this earth.—Ed.

Quantity of Salt in the Sea.

The amount of common salt in all the oceans is estimated by Schafhautl at 3,051,-342 cubic geographical miles; or about five times more than the mass of the Alps, and only one-third less than that of the Himalaya. The sulphate of soda equals 633,644-36 cubic miles, or is equal to the mass of the Alps. The chloride of magnesium, 441,811-80 cubic miles; the lime salts, 109,339-44 cubic miles. He supposes the mean depth to be about 300 metres, as estimated by Humboldt. Admitting with Laplace that the mean depth is from 4 to 5 miles, which is more probable, the mass of marine salt will more than double the mass of the Himalaya.—[Sillman's Journal, No. 16.

FOR THE MORMON.

Ambition.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

On taking an extensive view of this world and of humanity, as it heaves itself like a gigantic avalanche towards the ocean of eternity, and following that chameleon throng of bustling persons threading the intricate mazes of the vast labyrinth of life, we find, that there are few but what are not more or less ambitious, striving to attain a certain purpose in view, in order to gain wealth, reputation and a prominent place in the museum of earthly greatness. From a critical investigation of the human mind it is evident, that man in proportion to his capacities, is desirous of excelling his fellow-beings, either in the glitter of pompous erudition, or in the accumulation of fortune, or in honor and power. That desire of eminence operates often so powerfully on the intellectual functions, that illegal means are used for the purpose of obtaining the object, and if we balance nicely the distinction of character, we find that Ambition is the moving-cause or impulse of our actions, and that without it, man sinks into lethargy in regard to superiority or improvement. No matter in what avocations of life we are ingaged in, Ambition acts always as a stimulus to overcome obstacles and difficulties, in order to accomplish our designs, showing thus to our fellow-beings, that we are superior to a great many, whose mental lassitude prevented them from exerting themselves in taking the lead in the race of this life.

There is a right and false Ambition, the first one is always guided by a proper sense of duty, by reason and rectitude; the latter is the offspring of high and lofty aspirations, directed by the intellectual faculties merely in so far, as they lead to an attainment of the object, without listening to the voice of virtue and humanity, and thus resorting often to illegal means. In relation to ambition as in regard to every other principle, it is well to be understood that we have not to move in extremes, but to observe a juste milieu, and not allow ourselves to be carried off by its siren visions.

O! false Ambition, thou idol of an infatuated multitude, how often hast thou darkened the clear, azure atmosphere of domestic and social happiness; how often hast thou, by thy treacherous brilliancy, attracted and fascinated the attention of the inexpert; how often hast thou deceived the gathering fancy of man by thy beautiful visions in the mirror of the future; how often has the frail bark of life got wrecked in the whirlpool of thy magic power! Like the mirage of the desert, thou formest a sort of labyrinthian puzzle, representing an endless series of lovely phantasmal pictures, leading the weary pilgrim on to the pinnacles of gorgeous palaces, exhibiting to the enraptured gazer, a panorama in which magnitude, exuberance and splendor like harmonious waves are swimming in an ocean of eternal bliss; it is by displaying thus the imitative poetry of reality and consistency, that thou dost operate upon the imagination, leaving the poor victim to himself and his reflections.

It is a fact, that there is the seed of good and evil propensities in the human mind, that is to say, there is a slumbering disposition in everyone, to do either right or wrong. Of the moral or mental distinctions of human character, there is vanity, the origin of Ambition, more or less in every man by which he is prompted to magnify his own pursuits, his ownself, which has led many from a right developement and just application of sound principles to extravagant provisions or an illegitimate cultivation of natural gifts. From psychological observations, which are so essential to the study of the mind, it is evident, that the more definite, the more likely we are to attain some valuable, good result, but if our ideas concerning certain purposes in view are not clear, and we engage merely in the pursuit of a vague, ill-defined scheme, we are sure to deviate from the right path, because we are grasping after shadows, and lose ourselves in the labyrinth of empty speculations, hence it will be well for us, not to indulge in a contemplation of the chimerical hopes of false Ambition, which will never assume a feasible aspect, without violating the laws of honesty, because the more we confine our ideas to such a channel, the more we become desirous of realizing the delusive visions of a morbid mind.

The results of Ambition are often astonishing, considering the means, and materials which are at the disposal of a man acting under the impulse of that mental stimulus. As an illustration of the above, I refer to the glorious career of Benjamin Franklin and Isaac Milner, both were moving in very humble spheres, the former being the son of a soap-boiler and tallow-chandler, the latter the son of a poor Leeds weaver. Both had to cope with poverty, hardships, envy and a variety of other difficulties arising from the peculiar nature of circumstances in which they were placed; both although engaged in their respective avocations, to which the obscurity of their birth had forced them, were led by so great an Ambition for mental excellence, that they always found time for a gratification of their intellectual pleasures, and thus by a close application to their studies, and struggling heroically with all the annoyances and inconveniences of their precarious stations, they rose from one eminence to another, till the poor printer's apprentice, became a star of the first magnitude in the literary world whose knowledge was encyclopædic, that is to say, it was not confined to one particular department, but it embraced nearly every domain of human experience and intelligence; and Isaac Milner, the poor weaver, took the degree of Doctor of philosophy, became Dean of Carlisle, and Master of Queen's College in Cambridge.

Let us then always possess that Ambition which leads to an accomplishment of honest and noble purposes, whereby we can benefit ourselves and our fellow-beings; let us endeavor to fulfil our mission here below, by a proper improvement of our time, by storing our minds with useful knowledge, by cultivating good and exalting principles, and by taking an active part in everything which is calculated to bring about the restoration of this fallen world, that we may thus carry out the designs of Jehovah; but beware of the delusive phantom of blind Ambition, which has only a tendency to lead us from the path of reason, common sense and true religion to destruction.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Probably many things have transpired during the past week of interest to individuals and localities, but the general excitement of the last days of the election has absorbed everything. Even Mr. Sumner's return to Boston has had scarcely more than a passing notice. Though many of his admirers have kindly wished him dead a thousand times, to entwine around his outraged head a martyr's crown, and have magnified every sigh to some thing like the labor of the mountain, he returns, no doubt welcomed and welcomed o'er again, so quietly and without parade, that the echo of welcome is scarcely heard outside of Modern Athens.

There have been considerable losses on the lakes, several vessels sunk, and many lives lost during the past week—the details of which will be given in our next.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

Naples.—The last mail from Europe brings contradictory reports of the action of the French and English Ambassadors to the Court of Naples. The Moniteur says that when the Congress of Paris broke up the great Powers saw elements fraught with danger to peace in Belgium, Greece, and Naples; that of these states Naples alone refused to accept friendly advice, and that in consequence the Western Powers will cease to hold diplomatic intercourse with her. Some assert that the French Envoy was in two hours to make known his last instructions, namely, to demand his passports if the concessions were not granted; others affirm that the Ambassadors will not leave Naples for some months. The continental papers give credit to Russia for urging Bomba to concede rather than have a rupture with the Western Powers, but he remains firm. The Austrian Gazette says that the Neapolitan Ambassadors to Paris and London will not be recalled, and will only leave if their passports are sent to them. The British fleet is somewhere in the Mediterranean, and the French fleet at Toulon, ready to sail. The demands of the British government are considered to be a change of ministry—abolition of present police system—and a general amnesty. The Grand Duke of Tuscany, taking alarm at the demonstration against Naples, appears disposed to grant some concessions to his people by reviving, with some modifications, the constitution of 1848.

Great Britain.—The Queen has returned from Scotland, and Parliament has been further prorogued till Dec. 16th. The citizens of Dublin gave a banquet, on the 22d ult., to nearly 4,000 troops, who served in the Crimea. The Mayor of Dublin presided, supported by Lord Lieut. Carlisle, Lords Gough, Talbot and many other gentlemen. The city of Edinburgh will give a similar banquet on the 31st ult.

France.—French correspondence gives prominence to accounts of the Imperial gayties at Compagnie, where the Emperor is enjoying hunting by day and fancy balls by night, in the style and costume of Louis XIV. Numerous arrests have recently taken place in the Department of the Deux Zones, where a secret society of a dangerous description has been discovered. The society was organized by tens and hundreds, all trained to obey orders for the destruction of the rich. Sixty persons were apprehended, but the peasants, armed with pitchforks, attacked the escort and rescued the prisoners. New arrests have also been made in the Faubourg St. Antoine within a few days. The report of the Bank of France is rather more favorable.

Spain.—Accounts from Madrid speak of a new ministerial crisis, the object being to throw Narvaez overboard and restore the absolutists. The Marquis of Viluma, the head of the absolutists party, is spoken of as the coming man, but he, in the meantime, declines the responsibility. It is said that O'Donnell is put in command of the household guard, as a check upon Narvaez.

Switzerland.—The Neufchatel prisoners have been dismissed. The federal government is making an effort to be represented in the coming Congress of Paris.

Turkey.—A dispatch from Constantinople says that Gen. Guyon had died of cholera.

Cost of the Contest.

Few people ever think of the expense in cash of a Presidential contest. Yet it is really something enormous. The vast machinery necessary to carry on such a canvass—the number of organizations which it requires—the amount of printing, of writing, of postage, and of labor of every kind which is brought into service, is far beyond any estimate usually formed. Let us state a few facts which may aid in forming an opinion.

There are about 800 counties, and not far from 9,900 towns, in the thirty-one States composing the Union. Every town has one political club of each party,—and many towns have many more. There were undoubtedly during the last canvass over 15,000 organized clubs, belonging to each of the political parties within the United States:—the number of Fremont clubs may have been 5,000 less, since the Republican organization did not extend into the Slave States. Each of these clubs was in active operation for at least three months. Each of them required rooms, printing, postage, more or less traveling of their officers and committees;—and these, with other incidental expenses, could not have amounted, on the average, to less than $100 a month,—or $300 for the canvass. The labors performed by their secretaries, presidents and committees would certainly amount to the steady services of at least three men each, worth not less than $100 each for the whole three months. Not less than 1,000 persons have been actively engaged, for nearly the whole of the canvass, in making speeches and public addresses,—traveling from place to place, and always at an expense which must be met by somebody,—and entitled, of course, to have their own services estimated at a fair price:—probably $500 for each, including their expenses, would not be a low estimate.

Then on election day, there are opened in the United States not less than 50,000 polls, at which each party stations not less than five men, besides the inspectors, policemen and other legal officers, who average, perhaps, five more, making ten in all, whose services are worth at least two dollars each.

Let us sum up the aggregate of all these items:

Incidental expenses of 40,000 clubs at $300 each	$12,000,000
Services of three men each, for three months, at $100	12,000,000
One thousand speakers, three months, at $500	500,000
Officers, challengers, &c., at the polls	1,000,000
Total	$25,500,000

Here is a total of more than twenty-five millions of dollars, expended in the canvass,—all of it the voluntary offering of the people, to secure the choice of such a President as they desire to see elected. The aggregate is much more likely to exceed this estimate than to fall below it—as it does not include the money raised by exactions upon office-holders, or contributed in large sums by candidates, to be used for purposes less legitimate, but more costly, than those we have enumerated. Much of it goes into the hands of working men,—printers, laborers, and others, who fairly earn it. But immense amounts go to fill the pockets of political gamblers and swindlers, who look upon a Presidential election as the harvest of their profession.—[N. Y. Daily Times, Nov. 5.

TELEGRAPHIC.

The Late Disasters on Lake Michigan, &c.

Buffalo, Oct. 31, 1856.

The propeller M. B. Spaulding, with a full cargo of merchandise for Detroit, was destroyed by fire at her dock this morning. She was an old vessel, and was valued at about $8,000. She belonged to the American Transportation Company, and was uninsured. Her cargo is said to be mostly insured in New York.

A Milwaukie paper received here this morning, states that the bodies of thirteen of those who were on board of the ill-fated Toledo had been recovered up to Wednesday. None of them were recognized except that of the second mate. The body of a lady was found, with a steerage ticket upon her representing her to be Mrs. Boughton.

Merchandise to the value of $5,000 has been recovered. Two bodies were washed ashore near Milwaukie—supposed to have been lost from the steamer Niagara. One of the bodies is supposed to be that of Kate T. Haring, as the name appears on a handkerchief found in her pocket. The other body was in a state of nudity, badly mangled and disfigured, and was apparently about forty years of age.

The total loss of the burning of the Spalding, cargo and vessel, is estimated at $40,000.

Loss of the Steamer Lady Franklin.

Chicago, Oct. 31, 1856.

The steamer Lady Franklin on the upper Mississippi, snagged and sunk on the 23d inst., at Warren's Landing, 200 miles below St. Pauls. Three hundred passengers were abroad at the time. It is supposed that six were lost. The boat and cargo were a total loss.

Conviction of a Murderer.

Owego, Oct. 31, 1856.

In the celebrated case of Ruloff, charged with the murder of his wife and child near Ithaca about twelve years since, the prisoner was yesterday found guilty at the Circuit Court before Judge Mason.

Another Duel in Richmond.

Richmond, Nov. 1, 1856.

A duel came off this morning, a mile from this city, between R. A. Pryor and Dr. O. B. Finney, State Senator for Accomac. Dr. Finney was badly wounded, the ball of his antagonist having entered his right hip. The difficulty is said to have originated about the account of a discussion at Accomac, between the Doctor and a person of the name of Curtis, published in the correspondence of the Enquirer, which stated that Finney attempted to reply but did not speak five minutes before he quit the stand. Finney denounced Pryor as a rascal, and said that he would post him as a coward for publishing the account, Pryor met him near the Exchange yesterday, and on the language above given being repeated, he struck Finney in the face. Therefore a challenge was passed and a meeting took place as above stated.

Lake Navigation—The Snow Storm.

Buffalo, Nov. 1, 1856.

The steamers Western World, Plymouth Rock and Mississippi, running between this port and Detroit, on the Michigan Central line, go into Winter quarters to day.

Snow to the depth of an inch and a half fell at Cleaveland, Erie and other places on the Lake Shore Road yesterday.

Chicago papers say that the La Crosse Railroad is nearly completed to Portage City, and that the grading is all done and half the iron laid.

Accident on the Williamsport and Elmira Railroad.

Elmira, Nov. 1, 1856.

The Philadelphia Express train of the Williamsport and Elmira Railroad broke a rail and ran off the track a few miles north of Crescent this morning. The whole train was thrown off the track. The express car caught fire and was burned up. The passenger cars were saved. Thomas Sisk, baggage master, was killed instantly. The mail agent and several passengers are badly but not dangerously hurt.

Novel Baloon Ascension.

Philadelphia, Nov. 3, 1856.

Messrs. Samuel Jacobs, Albert Rogers and Samuel Strober ascended in a baloon with Monsieur Godard, at one o'clock in the afternoon, on a private excursion, designing to reach New York, the wind being favorable.

Rioting at the Polls in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Nov. 4, 1856.

A fierce engagement took place between the Democrats of the Eighth and the Americans of the Sixth and Seventh Wards. Each party were provided with muskets and cannon, and kept up the fight for two hours. About fifty were wounded, many of them seriously.

In the Second Ward the Democrats drove off the Americans, when the Fourth Ward Americans came to the rescue, and, after a prolonged and fierce fight, re-took the polls, driving off the Democrats. The fight lasted over an hour. One man was killed, and thirty wounded—several fatally.

Cincinnati, Nov. 3, 1856.

Crane's extensive flour mill at Marietta, with its contents, including eleven thousand bushels of wheat, was burned on Saturday night. The loss is estimated at $35,000. Insured for $5,000.

Fatal Shooting Case.

Philadelphia, Nov. 5, 1856.

This evening, Isaac C. Sheerlock, a clerk in the employ of Walmer & Clodgers dry goods store, Market street, shot Wm. Clodgers, one of his employers, at the junction of Seventh and Chestnut streets. Three balls took effect and the wounds were mortal. The cause is reported to be an improper connection between the employer and the wife of the clerk. The latter gave himself into custody. Served him right.—Ed.

Hurricane at Montreal.

Montreal, Nov. 5, 1856.

A terrific hurricane passed over this city last night, tearing down chimneys and fences and doing great damage to buildings. The steamer Prince Albert from St. Lambert, was driven on St. Helen's Island by the violence of the wind. The passengers received every hospitality from the garrison stationed there. Much damage has been done in exposed parts of the country.

Fresh Air.

With respect to the vital importance of fresh air for the maintenance of life, it would really seem as if the world were not to be convinced on this head: you may remind them of the black-hole-of-Calcutta story; of the canary-bird that dies in a night hung up under your bed-curtains; or of the 250 Coolies who, in a few hours, were killed a year or so ago in an American vessel, by having been forced under hatches. It is all of no use; the facts are assented to; the necessity of plenty of air is fully admitted; and then, on the very first occasion, the assenters proceed to act as if they had never heard of such a necessity, or did not believe in it if they had. We have long fought for fresh air,—fresh air everywhere.—[Builder.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Farewell Hymn.

BY ELDER JOHN HYDE, JR.

TUNE—"Yes, My Native Land, I Love Thee."

Zion, yes, I truly love thee,
Prophet, Priesthood, great and true;
Friends I've chosen, home I've chosen,
Ties that daily dearer grew;
Though it grieve me,
I must leave thee;
Teach my heart to say adieu.

Who can blame me if I falter,
Or if anguish rends my heart,
As from all I love and cherish,
Heaven calls me to depart?
If distressing,
Greater blessing
To us God will then impart.

I am going now, they tell me,
To a lost and fallen race;
Greater reason we should wander,
Tell them of the Gospel grace;
More like Jesus,
Who, to free us,
Left his high and holy place.

Zion, home, and friends, I leave you,
Saddened feelings in me swell:
But the time is speeding swiftly,
Saints shall soon together dwell,
From each nation,
Find salvation;
Zion, then, I say farewell.

Should the shaft from death's pale quiver,
Strike me ere again we meet,
'Tis not, cannot be for ever,
We again on earth shall greet:
With the "Lion"
Come to Zion,
When her foes are at her feet.

The Open Questions of the World.

The International Difficulties of the Day—What Are They?

When a steamer arrives at Halifax we receive over the wires despatches to the effect that "the Isle of Serpents question has not been satisfactorily adjusted;" that "according to Le Nord, of Brussels, the Russian organ, the King of Prussia is so exasperated at the conduct and languge of the federal government of Switzerland in the Neufchatel affair that he threatens to proceed to the military occupation of the Canton of Neufchatel, in the event of the prosecution of the royalist prisoners not being suspended;" that "the Spanish Disension affirms that if the Mexican government refuses to fulfil the convention with regard to what is due to Spanish subjects, the Spanish government has determined to act with the greatest energy, and to demand the execution of the convention;" that "Neapolitan affairs had assumed no new phase, and were in as unsatisfactory a condition as ever;" that "the Paris correspondent of the London Times says a Congress will be forthwith assembled in Paris to arrange the difficulties touching the Danubian Principalities, and those between the Allies and Russia;" and that "the Fatherland newspaper announces that the question of the Sound dues is settled."

Now, what are all these questions which are alluded to in this unsatisfactory way? Let us see:

THE ISLE OF SERPENTS.

Among the articles contained in the treaty of Paris was one stating "the act of the Congress of Vienna relative to river navigation, is applied to the Danube and its mouths, and its freedom becomes a part of the law of the empire;" and for the purpose of carrying this into effect, France, Austria, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia and Turkey, agreed that a delegate should be appointed by each to put the river in a navigable state from Isatcha to Tza. Each of the contracting Powers is allowed the privilege of stationing two small ships at the mouth of the Danube. The islands which are situated at this part of the river, and which command its navigation, are claimed by Turkey, but during the war were in possession of Russia, which still retains one of them, called the Isle of Serpents, from which it is alleged she refuses to retire. This island or islet is situated twenty-three miles east of the delta of the Danube. It is reported to have possessed in antiquity a temple in honor of Achilles, after whom the island was also named. The temple is gone, but in its stead is a structure of more practical utility in modern days—a light-house; and the island itself has obtained a more wide spread celebrity in these latter times than it ever did from the fabled hero of Homer. The news by the last mail from Europe is to the effect that the pretensions raised by Russia with regard to the Isle of Serpents, have been abandoned. Russia, it is said, has given way, and the island will again become a possession of Turkey.

THE NEAPOLITAN IMBROGLIO.

The execrable tyranny of Ferdinand, King of Naples, or, as he is, perhaps, more generally known by the appropriate title of Bomba, has, for many years past, excited the attention of the world. The cruelties perpetrated by this despot were exposed some three or four years ago by Mr. Gladstone, a member of the British House of Commons, in a pamphlet which was most extensively circulated at the time, and which aroused a bitter feeling of indignation throughout the civilized world. Shortly after the close of the war in the Crimea and the Paris Peace Congress, Louis Napoleon notified Bomba that the oppression of his people had been carried to such an extent as to call for the intervention of France, and that it would be imperatively neccessary for him to make some concessions to popular liberty. In this course he was supported by England, and both nations agreed to send a fleet to the Bay of Naples, for the purpose of enforcing their demands by an armed display. Bomba called a council of the great civil functionaries and the officers of his realm, and after laying the whole subject before them for their consideration, they came to the conclusion that it would be impolitic for him to make any concessions which it might be supposed were wrung from him by intimidation. Under this counsel he rejected the demands of France and England. Russia has also had something to say in the matter, and, as might be expected, takes the side of the Neapoliton monarch. Prince Gortschakoff, in a diplamatic circular protesting against the allied policy, says that "the King of Naples is the object of a pressure, not because his Majesty may have transgressed any one of his engagements imposed on him by treaties with foreign courts, but because, in the exercise of his incontestible rights of sovereignty, he governs his subjects as he thinks proper." The position here assumed by Russia and her protest against interference, naturally call to mind the course she pursued in the Hungarian revolution. If it is wrong, according to the Czar's principles of international policy, for France and England to interfere on behalf of popular liberty, would it be wrong for Russia to aid Bomba in keeping his subjects down? If so, then what has Alexander to say about the armed intervention of his father between the Emperor of Austria and his Hungarian subjects? Was that wrong?

The allied fleets have, it appears, been prevented from making any demonstrations for the present upon Naples, by the request of the Austrian government. Very little doubt is entertained by politicians that Louis Napoleon's motive in this intervention in the internal affairs of Naples is the overthrow of the present Bourbon dynasty and the reinstatement of the Murat family in the person of the son of Napoleon's dashing cavalry general.

An Austrian fleet is ordered to cruise in the Adriatic for exercise, and a Russian fleet is going into the Mediterranean "as a guard of honor to the Empress Mother in her tour in Italy." It is suspected, however, that they have another object—to keep an eye on the movements of the French and English fleets. It is also said that Bomba was willing to make concessions, and that he would lay them before the second Congress of Paris, which according to report is to meet on the 15th of next month. This, however, has been denied by the Neapolitan Embasy at Paris. The last news from Europe states that the French and English governments had sent their ultimatum to the King of Naples. If rejected the fleets were to sail to that kingdom, and the representatives of the allied Powers withdrawn from that Court.

THE BOLGRAD DIFFICULTY.

This difficulty had its origin in the Russo-Turkish war, and like some of the questions which have been unsettled by the Conference of Paris, promises to be a source of considerable trouble in the future. Bolgrad is a town of itself of no importance, but its possession is not without interest for Russia, as it is the chief town of the Bulgarian and Russian settlements, established in part of Bessarabia. It is in fact the commercial centre of those settlements, and a school and a church have been built there by the Russian government, which will hardly consent to resign a position of so much consequence to it as the basis of future operations against the integrity of the Ottoman empire. Bolgrad also furnishes that government with the means of establishing a communication with the Danube, as it is situated on the borders of Lake Yalpuck, which is formed by the expansion of a river of the same name, and which flows into the Danube by several mouths. The lake itself is thirty-six miles long by six wide. The importance of the town of Bolgrad, and the advantage which it would give the Russians in a strategical point of view, will be seen at once from these facts. Bessarabia, in which, as we have said, Bolgrad is situated, is an administrative province of South Russia, and was formerly under the dominion of Turkey. It was, however, ceded to Russia by the treaty of Bucharest, in 1812. The allies seeing the importance of reducing the power of Russia by taking from her a position of so much consequence, have endeavored, through their plenipotentiaries at the Peace Conference of Paris, to include Bolgrad within the new boundaries of Bessarabia. There has been considerable astronomical, political and geographical finessing upon the question of the Bessarabian boundary, the Russians asserting that it should run south of Bolgrad, and the allies contending that it should run north of that town. The boundary starts from the Black Sea, one mile east of Lake Bourna Sola, to the Akermann road, along which it extends to the valley of Trajan, taking in Bolgrad, and re-ascending the river Yalpuck to Savatscka, terminates at Karmari, on the river Pruth. Elsewhere it is unchanged. The territory which is thus marked out by new limits, and a large portion of which is taken from Russia, returns in the possession of the Porte, as it was previous to the treaty of Bucharest. Russia consented to this limitation, but is determined on retaining Bolgrad, and demands that the line of the new boundary shall run south of that town. This is the question in dispute, which is to come up for settlement before the second Congress of Paris. It is somewhat like our boundary dispute with Mexico before the purchase of the Mesilla valley by Gadsden.

THE MONTENEGRO CLASH.

Between the Albanian Mountains and the Adriatic lies a small Christian republic, which for four centuries and a half, has kept up an incessant struggle with the Turkish empire. Hemmed in on all sides, she has maintained her independence, though she received neither aid nor countenance from any of the Christian governments of Europe. This republic of the mountains has been the scene of many fearful encounters with the infidels, and while the neighboring nations succumbed to the Turkish yoke, while Byzantium, Servia, Bulgaria, Bosnia and Epirus became tributary provinces of Turkey, preserved its independence, and stood firm as a breakwater of Christendom. When the Christians waged war against Islamism they sought the assistance of the Montenegrins, and they always hastened to respond to their appeal, as the history of Austria and the ancient republic of Venice records. But though unconquered they were not unscathed, for little by little they lost a portion of their inheritance, and in 1814 the entire coast of Cattaro, on the Adriatic, which they had purchased by a lavish expenditure of blood, was taken from them by the Congress of Vienna, and adjudged to Austria. The Montenegrins withdrew to their mountains, abandoning the coast to that nation, and left thus without access to the commerce of the Mediterranean, their trade languished, and even their internal improvements were suddenly checked. Thoroughly aware of the necessity of possessing a free port, the ruler of Montenegro has addressed a note to the European Powers, requesting a guarantee to the republic the port of Antivari, and an extension of their limits towards the frontiers of Albania and Herzegovina. There is not much probability, however, that the governments of Europe will interest themselves in the matter—those that looked coldly on at the partition of Poland will not feel much sympathy for a republic of 450 square miles. It is reported French agents are at work to induce the Montenegrin government to conclude a Treaty with Turkey, by which Montenegro should be declared a part of the empire, as a separate duchy, without payment or tribute. Nothing could be more distasteful to the chief of the republic and his people than this; but it is said that in proportion as he became aware of the hopelessness of expecting aid from any of the European Powers, his repugnance lessened. And thus the matter stands.

THE SWISS QUESTION.

Until 1848 the Canton of Neufchatel, which forms part of the Swiss Confederation, acknowledged the sovereignty of Prussia, but having successfully asserted its independence in that year, it took its place in the Helvetian Republic as an independent Canton. Prussia now lays claim to her former dependency, and has been endeavoring to regain it through its agent in Switzerland, the Count de Pourtales, chamberlain to the Prussian King, and a man in great favor at the Count of that monarch. The Count excited by means of his money and influence, an insurrection in Neufchatel, the object of which was its re-annexation to the crown of his royal masters; but the insurgents were defeated, and a large number taken prisoners, among whom was a cousin of Pourtales. Taking advantage of the insurrection which broke out on the 2d of September of the same year, fomented by his agent, the King of Prussia renewed his claim to the possession of the Canton, and has now determined to submit it to the consideration of the German Diet of Frankfort. The French Emperor, meanwhile, fearing that the difficulty may involve other European Powers in a conflict endangering the peace of the whole continent, has advised the federal government to release the prisoners, and to extend an amnesty to the offenders. The government has so far complied with the advice as to discharge the greater part of them, holding the rest for trial. It has, however, determined, after consultation with the chief executive authority of Neufchatel, to retain its military occupation of that Canton until the termination of the legal investigation in regard to the origin of the insurrection. The Grand Council of Neufchatel has thanked the soldiers of the republic for their devotion to their country, and presented a sword to their leaders, Colonel Dangler and Major Girard. It now remains to be seen what action will be taken in regard to the claims set up by the Prussian monarch. The Ministers of France, Austria, Russia and Great Britain have recognized the rights of the King of Prussia as established by the treaty of Vienna, which acknowledged her possessory claim to that Canton. The Germanic confederation will soon have the whole subject up for consideration; but it is not certain that their decision will prove final, the difficulty may lead to serious consequences.

THE SOUND DUES.

This question, which has assumed an important aspect, from the position taken by the United States, proved a fertile subject of discussion in times past among European diplomatists. In 1849 the Dutch endeavored to get rid of the vexatious and unjust impost, and Cromwell, a few years later, determined to bring this matter to a satisfactory issue; but in every instance the principle involved was left in abeyance, the right of Denmark was unquestioned, and the arrangements made by the European Powers were merely temoprary expedients, characterized by national selfishness. It remained for the United States to take higher ground, to declare that the ocean highways were free to all, and that the right of Denmark to exclude vessels from the Baltic unless they contributed to swell her exchequer was analogous to the robber's right to extort tribute from travellers on the highway. That it had its origin in the predatory wars of the old Scandanavian Vikings or sea robbers there can be no doubt, and it remains for us to break up an extoration, legalized by prescription, to which we were no party, as we broke up the piracy of the Algerines. The pecuniary loss is the least evil arising from this claim of the Danish government, for persons connected with the shipping interest state that the evil of detention is greater than the evil of payment. The system hitherto pursued has been that the vessel and its cargo paid the Sound dues on passing Elsinore, without reference to their destination, the tariff varying slightly according as the nation the ship belonged to was among the more favored nations or not. The practical result of this has been that the exporter of the goods thus passing through those straits has paid the tolls, whether he ever recovered them from the consumer or not.

The value that Denmark attaches to the Sound dues may be judged from the fact that she gave to Sweden a considerable portion of territory acquired at the peace of Fredericksburg, in 1720, on condition that Sweden should renounce for all its possessions the exemption from the Sound dues acquired by her in the preceding century. Her tact in keeping this question out of sight at the treaty of Paris also proves her anxiety upon the subject and her desire to retain this source of profit. The amount of revenue she derives from the Sound dues exceeds $1,500,000—no inconsiderable sum for so small a kingdom as Denmark. The Danish government is now desirous of settling the matter by capitalizing this amount, which should be raised by the various States in proportion to the extent of their yearly contributions. This, it appears, is fixed at $30,000,000, and our share of the same would be nearly a million. The sum would be of little consequence in itself, and would not amount to more than the United States offered to Denmark as an indemnity for the expense incurred by her in building, lighting and repairing beacons and light-houses along her coast. But there are graver interests involved. If the payment of our alloted share of this capitalization fund would imply a recognition of the right claimed by the Danish government, is is evident that the great principle of free seas and unrestricted commerce, for which we contend, has not been vindicated. We could not desire a more propitious time for the settlement of this question, for Russia, which has always abatted Danish usurpations, looking upon Denmark as a territory which must sooner or later belong to her, has at the present moment no desire to champion that country or embroil herself with the United States. By late news from Europe we learn that Russia, Sweden and Norway have signified their assent to the capitalization project, and that all the difficulties are definitively arranged in consequence of the accord between France and England, so far as Europe is concerned, but not in regard to the United States, with which it is still an open question.

THE SPANISH QUESTION.

In 1854 Espartero, who was then prime minister and head of the liberal party, succeeded in overthrowing the policy of the reactionary party, of which Narvaez was one of the principal leaders. Narvaez was driven into exile, with five bishops, and the property of the Queen Mother, Christina, was sequestered. The liberal party went still further—it determined on the sale of the church property to liquidate the government debts. In this they met, as was to be expected, with strenuous opposition from the clergy, and the court of Rome interfered in the matter. In fact, both that court and the reactionary party had secretly combined for the overthrow of Espartero, and they finally accomplished their purpose. July 14, an insurrection broke out against the reactionary measures of the government, but, after a severe fight of four days, it was suppressed by O'Donnell. The National Guard was dissolved, and Espartero was banished from Madrid. Senor Rios Rosas, the head of the reactionary ministry, not satisfied with the dissolution of the National Guard, resolved on the recall of the bishops, the restoration of the church property, and of that of Queen Christina. The bishops have returned, the law for the sale of the church property has been suspended, the property of Queen Christina has been restored to her, Narvaez has obtained leave to return to Madrid, and we expect to hear that he will soon be at the head of the government, and that O'Donnell, who has been used merely as a tool by the reactionary party, will be thrown overboard. A letter, it is said, has been written by Louis Napoleon to the Queen of Spain, giving her some advice in regard to the course which her government should pursue. It recommends a liberal policy as the most judicious. The latest news gives us an account of another coup d'etat. O'Donnell has resigned, and with him all his colleagues. The Queen had accepted their resignation. Narvaez is appointed President of the Council, and has already provided himself with thirteen associates. He has alloted the principal offices as follows: Pidal, Foreign Affairs; Seife, Finance; Nocedal, Interior; Arzuela, Justice; Urbistondo, War; Larsundi, Marine; Gen. Sanz, Captain General of Madrid, and Gen. Lezuela, Director of the Cavalry; S. Movano, Public Works and Civil Governor of Madrid; S. Zarvano, Colonies.

THE ST. DOMINGO AND SPANISH QUESTION.

The affair with Mexico is not the only one Spain has on hand in the western hemisphere—the Dominican republic is to be again brought under the dominion of the Spanish crown. This is to be effected by the aid of a party of malcontents, whose chief is ex-President Baez. The great mover of the conspiracy, however, the soul and spirit of the whole affair, is the Spanish Charge and Consul General, Segovia, at St. Domingo. Some time since he and the party who act with him, procured the passage of a law in the Dominican Congress, authorizing such Dominicans as valued the privilege, to become Spanish citizens. Individuals who availed themselves of this law were called matriculados, and they formed a party favorable to the designs of Spain; but knowing that the republicans would resist to the death any attempt to bring the island again under the Spanish yoke, and fearing their inability to cope with them single-handed, the matriculados have called upon Concha for assistence. The Captain General of Cuba at once responded to the call, and a Spanish war vessel has been detailed for this welcome service. It carries "material aid" to the amount of 5,000 stand of arms for Segovia and his army of matriculados. In this scheme for overthrowiug an American republic, Spain is backed up by England and France, who give it their hearty concurrence.

THE MEXICO-SPANISH DIFFICULTY.

The difficulty between Spain and her former colony originated in the refusal of the Mexican government to ratify that portion of the treaty of 1853 relative to the claims of Spanish subjects on the Mexican treasury. This treaty was concluded by Santa Anna: but President Comonfort declined to carry it out, on the ground that it covered an immense amount of fraudulent claims. These claims are based upon the possession of bonds held by subjects of Spain against Mexico, and which were issued during the days of national tribulation in that republic. The Spanish government has determined to enforce those claims, and for this purpose despatched Senor Alvarez to Vera Cruz, having placed a formidable naval force at his disposal, in order to intimidate the Mexican authorities. Alvarez, however, contrary, it appears, to the express letter of his instructions, consented to an investigation of the alleged fraudulent claims and withdrew his fleet from Vera Cruz. This plan of settlement was sent to Spain and excited a storm of popular indignation. All parties protested against it as injurious to Spanish honor; the press denounced it as a disgraceful concession to a people who were "the shame of the Spanish American race," and the Spanish Ministry repudiated their envoy. So the matter ended. But it now appears that Spain having been foiled in diplomacy, is resolved to have recourse to war. At the present moment a formidable armament is preparing in Cuba, with all convenient speed, to sail for Vera Cruz, and General Urbistondo, late Captain General of the Philippines, a modern Bobadil, is expected to take command of the land forces. This is the moment chosen by England to press some trifling claims that British merchants—Messrs. Barron & Forbes—have against Mexico, and it would seem from the simultaneous movement on her part and that of Spain, that there is an understanding between the two nations. The position which England has taken in this matter reminds us of the charge which she has made against the United States in regard to the Crampton difficulty—that our government took advantage of her being engaged in a war to force her into compliance with our demands. What has she to say in extenuation of her conduct in the Mexican affair? Does it not look as if she had taken advantage of the difficulty between that country and Spain to enforce her claims upon the already impoverished republic? Shuld she, however, or Spain, or both of them combined, attempt to invade Mexico, they are not aware, perhaps, that they will come in contact with the Monroe doctrine, and that the United States will have something to say in the matter.

THE PERSIAN OCCUPATION OF HERAT.

Herat is the name of an independent chiefship, 360 miles west of Cabool. In 1838 its capital city, which bears its name, was besieged by the Persians, but they were forced to retire, and since then they appear to have had a longing desire to add it to the empire of the Shah. It has, however, managed to maintain its independence. England fearing that it would eventually fall into the hands of Russia, entered into a treaty with the Shah in 1853, by which Persia was bound not to enter upon any measures that might have the acquisition of Herat, either by Persia, Russia or any other Power, in contemplation. Russia has coveted the possession of Herat for many years as a point d'appui for future operations in the East. The Persians are well known to be favorable to the Czar, and during the last war it required all the diplomacy of England to keep them in a neutral position. Advices from Bombay, under date of September 12, are filled with accounts of the preparations made by the Indian and British governments to invade Persia. The reason of this invasion is the reported occupation of Herat by the Persian troops. A fleet is to be sent to the Persian Gulf, with certain demands which it is not expected the Shah will accede to; whereupon, an invading force is to be sent to take possession of Kuvrack and Bushire, as a basis of operations against Teheran. Six regiments of infantry and three of cavalry, with field and siege trains, are already detailed for land service.

THE DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.

The Danubian Principalities, Moldavia and Wallachia, previous to the Russo-Turkish war, were under the suzerainty of Turkey, without, however, being absolutely dependencies of that Power. They have paid tribute to the Porte, but have always claimed separate governments, made their own laws and have been ruled by their Hospodars. The Czar claiming the protectorate over the Greek subjects of the Ottoman empire, and the Sultan refusing to recognize the claim, a Russian army was sent against Constantinople, through the Principalities. They were opposed with determined bravery by a Turkish army under Omer Pacha, and after the celebrated siege of Silistria withdrew across the Danube. Their withdrawal, however, was caused by the landing of the Allied forces at Varna and the fear that their retreat would be thus cut off. The Russians accordingly retired into Bessarabia, and soon after the war was transferred to the Crimea. During the siege of Sebastopol, Russia offered to give up her claims in regard to the Principalities, and as a sort of guarantee of her good faith in the matter, she testified her willingness that Austria should enter upon a military occupation. The Austrians entered the Principalities, and have now signified their intention to remain there till the boundary question of Bessarabia is definitely settled. A commission appointed by the Peace Congress was directed to meet at Bucharest, for the purpose of reorganizing the government of the Principalities, in accordance with the treaty of Paris, and the action of this commission is to be submitted to the second Congress, which is to meet at Paris, for final determination.

THE JAPANESE QUESTION.

A solemn assembly of the principal lords and most influential personages of the empire of Japan was convened by the Emperor on the 22d of June, at Jeddo, for the purpose of adjusting the various questions connected with the recent treaties he has concluded with the governments of Christendom. It was decided at the meeting that two ports of the empire—those of Nangasaki and Hakodadi—should be open to the vessels of all nations, and that the other ports of the empire are to be accessible to vessels in distress, which may take refuge in them, but which will have to put to sea when the danger is over. The right of trading with Japan is, however, exclusively in favor of the Dutch and Chinese

THE PERUVIAN PRESIDENCY.

The republic of Peru, like almost all of the Spanish American governments, has ever, since its separation from the dominion of Spain, been subject to revolutions, or, we should say, a change of military dictatorship. In 1854 an insurrection, headed by General Castilla, broke out, and after some hard fighting, President Echenique was compelled to resign and seek safety beyond the boundaries of the republic. General Castilla was assisted by about seventy Americans who came from Australia to Peru for the purpose of working in the gold mines, and who, it would appear from this, were equal to any enterprise, from digging for the precious metal to throwing down and building up governments. After his defeat, Echinique came to New York city, from which he kept a watchful eye on the progress of events in Peru. Learning from his friends that the people were becoming tired of the government, and that they would gladly welcome him back, he started from this city several months ago and the next we hear of him he is in Valparaizo, with three vessels and plenty of the munitions of war, ready to take possession of the government. One of his adherents, Colonel Castillo, made an attack upon the government, having previously bribed the soldiers of Castilla, but he was defeated after a short contest, and forced to retreat. He is not utterly routed, however, and when joined by Echenique, if joined at all, it is probable there will be another fight for the presidency.

THE MONTEVIDEAN AFFAIR.

The Dictator Rosas, of Buenos Ayres, was expelled from that republic in February, 1852, in consequence of his tyranny, and fled to England, where he still lives. During his administration he was secretly engaged in fomenting insurrections in Urugua, of which Montevideo is the capital. For nine years his particular friend Oribe held Montevideo in a state of blockade, but abondoned it a short time previous to the expulsion of Rosas. The party which favored the designs of Rosas was put down after his overthrow. In the war which ended in the defeat and exile of the Dictator, Brazil and Uruguay joined with the liberals of Buenos Ayres. After this, the government of Uruguay, beset by internal dissensions, asked the assistance of the English to enable them to maintain their stability. The British government sent a considerable force to Montevideo in compliance with a request of the government; but, soon becoming tired of the charge, they withdrew their troops. The French were next appealed to, and they also gave them assistance in both men and money. The result, however, was the same in this case as in that of the English—the French also became tired and withdrew their forces. As a last resort, the Uraguayan government applied to Brazil for a loan of $60,000 per month for one year. The Brazillian government lent the money for the required time, but at the expiration of the twelve months they asked for another loan of the same amount for six months. This was also given, when another demand was made and refused. Flores at this time was President of Uruguay. Thrown upon his own resources, and without an exchequer for the support of his government, a so-called revolution broke out in Montevideo, excited partly by the press which he had attempted to put down, and partly it is thought by Brazil, whose minister he had dismissed for his interference between him and the press. This revolution ended in the abdication of Flores, who was compelled to resign in favor of Bustamente. An attempt was subsequently made to overthrow Bustamente, but it was promptly defeated. It is also said that Flores is secretly leagued with Oribe against Bustamente, and that both are plotting for the destruction of the government; but this suspicion is considered by some entirely unwarranted. Meantime, the republic is bankrupt, owes one hundred and twenty millions of dollars, and according to the last accounts was in a deplorable condition. Whether it will fall into the power of Brazil, under seizure for debt, or into the possession of Buenos Ayres, time alone can determine. Meantime, Rosas a la Santa Anna, is watching with anxiety an opportunity to return to her former dictatorship.

THE NICARAGUAN QUESTION.

Our readers are so familiar with the details of this question that it is unnecessary to go into the particulars. They are aware of the circumstances under which General Walker entered Nicaragua at the invitation of the liberal party, how that party, under his leadership and the assistance it received in the shape of men, money, arms and ammunition from the United States, have succeeded, up to the present time, in upholding the only truly Republican government Nicaragua has ever had, and how they have so far maintained their position against the hostile attacks of Costa Rica and the other Central American States. The republic of Nicaragua, they are also aware, has been recognized by our government; and should he be successful in the present war, it is believed that England will follow the example. But Walker was in a critical position at the last accounts—the 30th inst.

KANSAS.

The still unsettled question of the future condition of Kansas as a State entitles it to be considered one of the open questions of the world. Every one knows how it originated in the repeal of the Misiouri compromise, and how the free and slave State men came in conflict. The admission of Kansas into the Union as a free or slave State, will settle this open question.

These are the open questions of the world They are not perhaps of much importance in themselves, and in the present condition of the leading European Powers, financially exhausted by a two years' war, it is not presumed that they will lead to any serious results; but as questions in dispute they are probably worth the space we have devoted to their explanation and elucidation.—[N. THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 15, 1856.

Utah.

We have just received the Deseret News for the month of September and the first of October, together with a considerable number of letters from Utah and from the plains, to which we devote a large space of THE MORMON, believing our readers will be interested by the selections we have laid before them. As the scattered sons and daughters of ancient Israel looked with the liveliest feelings of interest towards Jerusalem, the city of their kings, and felt their hearts warm with emotion when, to the God of their fathers, they prayed for blessings to descend upon the head of him who sat in the seat of Moses, so feel now the scattered Saints towards Utah and him whom the Lord has placed at the head of His people. If their souls are true to the Kingdom of the Eternal, the finest chords of their hearts are touched when Utah and Brigham are the theme of conversation. News from that distant Territory is like dew to the tender herb or streams of water in the desert to the parched lips of the exhausted traveller. In Utah dwells the prophet of the living God, from whose lips flow the principles of life; whose counsels are salvation. There is the abode of thousands of tried, faithful and upright men and women, who seek no higher enjoyment than that which springs from the practice of pure and undefiled religion. There is hid the nucleus of the mightiest nation that has ever played or shall play its part on this terrestrial ball. There is the kingdom that was to come, amassing strength like the little stone, to become a mountain and fill the whole earth. Whatever, therefore, affects Utah, her institutions, her progress, her weals and her woes—if she ever should have any, but that is very doubtful—affects the scattered Saints. When the hills and valleys resound with joy, the echo speeds its way over mountains, deserts, prairies, the trackless deep, and onward to the uttermost parts of the earth; and wherever a true Mormon heart graces a manly bosom, that joy is enkindled afresh, and lips of gratitude praise her God. When the rude hand of adversity and trial pressed heavily upon her lately—when the husbandman toiled, and grasshoppers and crickets destroyed in one night the labor of months, and the ungodly rejoiced in the seeming affliction of the Saints—the faithful in distant lands were undaunted and felt as closely and deeply attached to Utah, or more so than before. Instead of wavering in faith and turning their faces from Zion, they have braved the dangers of the sea, marched by thousands across prairies and mountains, dragging and pushing their hand carts, and in spite of the predictions of the wicked, have at length reached their home, strong, healthy, independent, and free. The Utonians, ever grateful to the Dispenser of every good gift, and mindful of their own wearisome journey, came out with music and the bounties of the earth to greet the weary pilgrims welcome. By our private correspondence we learn that the scarcity from the unpropitious and nearly consumed harvest of '55 is in a measure forgotten, and the hand cart companies—the avant courier of this year's emigration—have been welcomed in their poverty, without fear of scarcity, and with an enthusiasm that the Gentile world never knew.

The New York Press on Utah.

THE last mail from Utah has been, as the Gentiles say, a perfect "God-send" for some of our cotemporaries. The Herald of Wednesday published three of President Young's discourses from the Deseret News of the 10th and 17th of September and 1st of October. The Tribune and the Express confine themselves to spicy extracts about "the peculiar institution." President Young delivered the discourses for the public's information—the News published them with the same intention; and inasmuch as the gentlemen conducting those immaculate sheets have carried the information to tens of thousands who might never otherwise have learned much more than from rumor about the peculiar people and the "peculiar institution," we think it becoming to doff our hat and thank them politely for the service they have rendered us. Of course such a large space devoted to Mormonism called for abusive editorials, lest their friends of the other sex might construe their silence to a leaning towards "the peculiar." The Herald tries to hit hard, writing with "would if he could," but feels tied up with squatter sovereignty, and grumbles out a wishy-washy affair—superlative twaddle. We never saw the Herald so hard up: Buchanan's election seems to have knocked the wind out of "cannie Jamie," and "John Stewart" appears to have deserted him, left Utah for the diggings, or been "too late" for last month's mail. The auld chap, in the absence of such well-timed assistance, has been forced to gull his readers with a quotation from that "Black Republican" handbill published in another column, as an evidence of Mormon politics and Mormon hopes for union with the States. We have heretofore over-rated the talents of the inspiring spirit of the Herald; we thought him much smarter than to be deceived with the authorship of such mummery, for we, of course, would never suppose him guilty of wilful misrepresentation; of course not—he could not condescend to belie such men as polygamists, who are so far beneath his contempt, by quoting what he knew to be imposition. We hope the Herald may recover, get fresh strength and be ready for the battle at the coming Congress.

The Tribune's editorial partakes more the spirit and language of its French Socialist Philosopher than the Twaddler. Convinced that the Government has no business with Utah's religion, he is in hopes that the "peculiar institution" will work its own destruction. Dana thinks it is no simple matter to create heavens on earth for so many, as it is "a difficult enough thing to do for one woman, let alone doing it for ten, twenty, or a hundred." There is particular notice taken of the liberty to be proclaimed on the 6th October, from which we should think that some of the Philosopher's monogamic friends may soon start for the frontiers to meet the expected liberated troop of Amazons to nourish their "peculiar institutions." Go-a-head slow. The Express, being more religious than his friends Bennett, Greeley, Dana & Co., is, of course, more bitter, talks quite big about "barbarism," "corruption," "imbecility," and asks: "Is Utah to be brought into a family of Christian States?" "Are we to take to our bosoms this moral monster (as it were)—the 'institution' of polygamy?" &c. Poor "Dog Noble!" it becomes you to bark, for that is your place; poor silly animal, you may well bark, for you never can, in spite of your rabidism, be in a position to bite. It is amusing to read the ravings of those bigoted, blind ignoramuses. Who would condescend the most and make the greatest sacrifice in such a union—the Mormons, with their institution, and Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, at their head, or the monogamists, with their institutions? Who make the sacrifice? The Mormons, for be their difficulties what they may, the low, deep sunk degradation, the foul disease, the thieving, drinking, damning corruption and murder that follow in the wake of monogamy is sickening to the soul of every man whose eyes have not been feasted upon these plague spots, till they have become used to them, and pass them by with indifference. Talk of Utah, hypocrites, walk through your own streets, look at the painted and silked corruption that meets you at every step in your most public thoroughfares, quit the pavement, wend your steps to the Five Points, and see the fate of those butterflies in a few short years; there they are, loathsome, moving, or rather crippling masses of corruption. Oh ancient Israel, were thy daughters more sunken in iniquity, more hardened in crime than the daughters of monogamic Christians? One wish for Utah. If she ever become the scene of pollution like anything approaching New York, may she be swallowed up in the bowels of the earth.

California, Oregon, China.

THE mail steamship George Law arrived here on the 13th inst., with news from California via Panama. Since the disbandment of the Vigilance Committee the excitement in San Francisco has subsided; still, robberies and murders in the State are frequent, and occasionally some one hung by the populace. The Vigilance Committee had sold off at auction the fixtures and furniture of their rooms. The Jews started, on the 9th ult., a weekly paper—"The Voice of Israel."

The news from Oregon is unfavorable to peace. The Indian troubles have been renewed. Gov. Stevens had gone to the Walla-walla country to negotiate a general peace, but had to return. The entire country to the north and east of John Day's river is in possession of the Indians, numbering about 3,000, many of whom are well armed. Col. Steptoe had abandoned the country to the Indians and come into the Dalles. Gov. Stevens's proclamation to the people of Portland talks of a full surrender or war—of course the latter is the choice of the Indians and the wish of the whites, so say some knowing ones who gain nothing by an Indian war.

The Celestial soldiers claim the honor of making great havoc lately among the rebels. The failure of an American firm is reported: liabilities, $320,000.

The clipper ship Challenger went ashore at Woosung river, and on the 1st of August she was hard and fast on her side. She had the most valuable cargo that ever left Shanghae. It consisted of tea and silks, and was valued at over $2,000,000.

A fearful tragedy happened on board a coolie ship at Macao, which resulted in the death of several Europeans, and over two hundred of the coolies themselves.

Addresses of the Elders

WE purpose publishing the addresses of the Elders on mission throughout the world as far as we can obtain them. If the Elders on mission in this country will send us their present addresses we shall publish them with the others.

An Artful Dodge.

"THE end justifies the means," is an old, corrupt maxim of the Mother of Harlots, but repudiated and contemned by every sober thinking, rational being, as it lays the foundation for every plot, however mean and contemptable, sanctifies the most wanton cruelty and barbarism, and fosters unbridled and unmeasured fanaticism. Politicians in the late Presidential election have disgraced their cause, we think, by the means they have not scrupled to use in order to secure its triumph. We name no parties—the guilty will alone think that they are alluded to. We have had our share of their attention, and many times been amused with the silly nonsense that has been published as emenating from us. Elder S. Harrison, President of the Philadelphia branch of the Church, forwarded to us, on the 3d inst., a handbill, of which the following is a fac simile, and states in his letter that one of the brethren received it at a Fremont meeting in that city the Saturday previous to the election, and that copies were extensively posted up over the city:

TO THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

THE ELDERS AND RULERS OF

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST

OF LATTER DAY SAINTS,

To the Saints in the United States of America.

Dear Brethren, Faithful Followers of the Lord, and Recipients of His Grace:

We call upon you to stand firm to the principles of our religion in the coming contest for President of the country. Our duty is plain. There are two principal parties in the country, one is for us and the other against us.

The Democratic Convention in Cincinnati, which nominated James Buchanan for President, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Congress has no power under the Constitution to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of the several States, and that all such States are the sole and proper judges of everything appertaining to their own affairs not prohibited by the Constitution."

This is a principle of the Democratic Party, which they have extended to Territories, as well as States, and the doctrine of Squatter Sovereignty applies to us in Deseret, as well as to the settlers in Kansas and Nebraska.

The Democratic Party is the instrument in God's hand, by which is to be effected our recognition as a sovereign State, with the domestic institutions of slavery and polygamy, as established by the patriarchs and prophets of old, under divine authority, and renewed to the saints of Latter-days, through God's chosen rulers and prophets.

Resolved, That the Constitution confers upon Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government, and that in the exercise of this power, it is both the right and imperative duty of Congress to prohibit in the Territories, those twin relics of barbarism, polygamy and slavery."

This is a blow aimed directly at our rights as citizens of one of the territories, at our sacred institutions and our holy religion.

Saints of the Latter-days, to whom God reveals his will through his chosen prophets, stand steadfast in your faith; for the time is at hand which was foretold by the prophet of old, and recorded in the Ancient Scriptures: "And in that day shall seven women lay hold of one man, and they will say, 'let us eat of our own bread and wear our own apparel: only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach."

Given by order of the President and Rulers, at Great Salt Lake, on the Fourteenth Day of August, 1856.

While we abstain from condemning any party for the acts of individuals, we nevertheless deem it our duty to protest against such practices. Corrupt must be the heart that would try to stir up the bigoted religious enmity of the unthinking against any portion of the community because they honestly differed from them in their faith—a matter between man and God alone. We cannot but remark how careful the Herald is to reserve such pieces for his Sunday readers. He surely thinks that grandmother's groans are feeble of late, and in want of a little stimulus.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The last mail from Europe brings indications of unfriendly feelings between France and England. The Moniteur complains of the liberty of the English press, and intimates that it is likely to "destroy confidence" and endanger the cordiality between the two governments, a fact so essential to the peace of Europe. The London Times, though a well known help to governments, can never submit to an attempt threatening its own liberty, and comes out upon Louis sans ceremonie, and styles his meddling "an audacious attack" made upon the rights of the press. The most respectable and talented journals of the British empire join in the chorus to the no small annoyance of despotism. The Times' Paris correspondent says that a despatch had been received from an official quarter in London stating the feeling that the article in the Moniteur had created, and intimating that explanations would be demanded on the hint about breaking up the alliance.

NAPLES.—Baron Brenier, the French Ambassador, left Naples on the 27th ult. According to the instructions given to the Baron before he left, the French squadron was to remain at Toulon ready if wanted to protect French citizens in Bomba's dominions. A small steamer is to enter the Bay of Naples occasionally, and learn if service is wanted or likely to be, and report to the Admiral commanding. The British fleet is to remain ready at Malta. Though these measures have been announced to Bomba by the English and French ambassadors he is unmoved. On the night of the 16th ult. another shock of earthquake was felt at Sessa, near Naples. The recent earthquake had created quite a panic. At Brindisi the people were so alarmed that numbers put to sea in boats, and others remained for days encamped in the open fields.

SPAIN.—This unfortunate country is by no means at rest. Who should be President of the Council is not the question, but who can rule. Narvaez is likely to have a short reign. Intrigue is strong at work. Russia is sneaking for influence. There is in the court a murmurring about abdication, to which it is alleged the Queen would have little objection, provided she could find means as readily to carry out the game of degradation in which she and her mother, old Christinia, have long and successfully played. These old thrones want burning up sadly.

TURKEY.—"The Sick Man," as Nicholas called the Sultan, is seemingly destined to be worried to death by his crown-headed friends and their ambassadors—if spared by the seeds of dissolution in his own frame. The war in the Crimea has only terminated to afford a rest to the sons of Mars, for in spite of Peace Congresses and the renewed expressions of kingly brotherhood, the anointed are squabbling their best at Constantinople. Austria holds on to the Danubian Principalities, and two Russian war frigates are reported on their way to the Black Sea, determined to have admission as long as France and England remain there.

PIEDMONT.—On the 23d ult. King Victor Emanuel left Turin for Genoa to meet the Empress Dowager of Russia, and accompany her on the Sardinian steamer to Nice, where she spends the winter. Everything about this business is well got up, and will probably soften young Alexander down a little. The journals of that country have lately published some Austrian private documents, by which it is seen that the subjects of that power in Lombardy rejoice on giving days by official direction—happy machines.

THE EAST.—There has been a severe earthquake throughout the whole of Egypt. At Cairo two hundred houses were thrown down. Most of the inhabitants were encamped outside the walls. There had been little loss of life. Shocks had been felt at Smyrna and in the Archipelago. Rhodes is entirely devastated.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THOUGH we announced at the moment of going to press last week, that Mr. Buchanan's election to the office of chief magistrate was certain, telegraphic despatches were subsequently received that shook considerably the confidence of many in his success in Tennessee, Alabama and Illinois. It was thought at one time more likely than otherwise that the election of President would ultimately be carried to the House; but other and later despatches have been received, and the assurance given that the Democracy is truly triumphant, without being obliged to wait for the favorable decision of California. The electoral votes at present are as follows:

Fremont	114
Fillmore	8-122
Buchanan's majority	52

The dailies are getting sober again, and really promise to be useful: their columns are gradually being well filled with more useful instruction than that derived from the violent abuse and personalities in which they have so liberally indulged for the last three months. Though there is much improvement in this particular, there is still a large margin reserved for the discussion of who will be cabinet ministers, senators, &c., and who is and who is not entitled to the largest shares of the spoils. The monotony of winter nights is likely to be occasionally disturbed by the sentinels over uncle's long stocking.

The Hon. R. Barnwell Rhett writes a long letter to Gov. Adams of South Carolina on the state of public affairs, in which he complains bitterly of Northern politicians, and in no mean manner cracks up the superiority of the South to the North in morality and religion, in spite of their constant cry of Southern degradation and misery. Mr. Rhett's patience has been completely used up by the North, and he wants a Southern Confederacy, and nothing less, if his demands are not listened to.

The Hon. John M. Clayton died at Dover, Del., on Sunday evening last.

Epistle of President Angus M. Cannon

To the Presidents of the various Branches of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, scattered throughout the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware—

GREETING:—

DEAR BRETHREN,—Having deemed it wisdom to arrange a Conference Book—a Record of the various Branches scattered throughout the above States, I adopt this means of notifying you, that I would be pleased to receive a report of the Branches over which you severally preside; when organized, by whom, names of the presiding officers with those of all holding the Priesthood at the present time, together with the names of members, including dates of baptism and ordination. This being done, you will please to attach to each name the amounts contributed for various purposes from the 6th of April to the 5th of October,—the report of the Branches at the latter date being the one I wish at present. It being requisite to attend to the above straight away, it is to be hoped you will lose no time in responding to the call. It would be pleasing to me likewise, to learn the prospects for spreading the work in your vicinity, as there will be more Elders in from Utah before long, and we do not want to see their time go to waste for want of a knowledge of plenty of places, where people would readily open their doors for them, and know that they were blest in entertaining the servants of God. If there is employment to be had for different kinds of tradesmen and laborers you will oblige me by informing me of such, as there is quite a number of our brethren expected in from the old countries shortly, and will want employment; besides this, I am very frequently interrogated by brethren thrown out of employment through various causes, when, if I had a knowledge of the openings there is in different parts I might be enabled to do them good in that respect.

It is our duty, Brethren, in being placed as shepherds of Israel, to look after the interests of the flock, and know that each individual is guarded against the influences of the world, which oft have a tendency to weaken the faith of those who are unthinking, young in the cause, and can only be guarded against evil by being taught continually their duties towards God and his cause, where by faithfulness in the discharge of the same, and continued faithfulness in prayer they may have the Spirit of God as their guide, and will be able to endure the trials of every day, which is for the perfection of the faithful.

Begin, then, Brethren, and look up all that are scattered in the neighborhood of your branches, learn their standing, and if they will not live as Saints deal with them accordingly, and thus rid Israel of a reproach.

The cause of truth is sacred, and we, as citizens of Zion, are called upon to exert all our energies to roll forth the great and glorious work in which we are engaged, as our all for time and eternity is associated and bound up with it; but how very few there are of those who seek to hide themselves from the Almighty with their help, when he has called upon them to assist in bringing about the reign of righteousness and peace, do now, or will ever realize it, until too late to retrace their steps, and all in consequence of not being diligent in waiting upon Him in the place appointed to meet and obtain a knowledge of what his mind and will is concerning us, his children upon the earth, together with a neglect in reading and treasuring up the instructions as given through the columns of THE MORMON, which has caused so much unwearied exertion on the part of our Brethren for our benefit.

If we look upon the situation of those who have proved faithless in this most glorious cause, and witness their present position, contrasting their circumstances with those who have been faithful, we most certainly should be guarded against that evil. Let us, then, show by our works, that we are desirous of carrying out all of our Father's instructions; then shall peace, love and joy fill our bosoms, and we shall know that—though all men oppose us—God is yet our faithful, true and eternal friend. I expect to visit most of the Branches, accompanied by Judge Appleby, who has been appointed as a Traveling High Priest to visit all the eastern Branches of the Church to the intent that he may learn how things are, when I hope to find all in the line of their duty.

I should say to all saints scattered at a distance from any Branch: Wake up to a sense of your duties, and let us at least know your position, and if we cannot visit you, it may be in our power to send you some one else that may. May Grace, Mercy and Peace be multiplied unto you, my brethren, of God the Father through the Lord Jesus Christ, till you have finished your work upon the earth, even so, Amen. ANGUS M. CANNON,

President of Philadelphia Conference.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 8, 1856.

Interesting from our Missionaries on the Plains.

THROUGH the politeness of President Erastus Snow, we are able to place before our readers the following communication from Elder Thomas Bullock:

OCTOBER 17, 1856—10 A. M.

DEAR BRO. SNOW:—We are in good health and are now at Fort Kearney, having travelled a few miles every day; we have been troubled the past four days with cold south winds; many of the animals are very weakly, we intend to cross the Platte at this place, proceed to winter quarters, from where your humble servant intends to make the best of his way, and pay you a visit in Saint Louis and tell you many things that I cannot write at this time.

Not having yet had breakfast, and the teams waiting to move away, I now conclude my hasty sketch. Your brother in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, THOMAS BULLOCK, Missionary.

JOURNAL OF TRAVEL.

The following persons were called of the Lord, through the voice of His servants, the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, on the 10th day of August 1856, to go on a mission to England, namely Thomas Bullock, Bernard Snow, Charles Hubbard, Thomas Pierce, John H. Tippitts, Wm. Brown, Ezra T. Clark, James C. Browning, George Gales and Samuel F. Neslin, and were directed to start by the middle of September.

On the 17th, Daniel Page, Samuel Koskelly George Taylor, Henry Harris, James W. Stevens, Andrew H. Shumway, and William Bevans, were called to go to England; and Isaiah M. Coombs and Orrin Lewis to the United States. And on Sunday the 24th, Elder Parley P. Pratt, and Thomas Terry were also called to go to the United States.

On the 6th of September the above named missionaries, in company with several others, received their blessings and were set apart to their respective missions.

On the 10th of September, your obedient servant, in company with Bernard Snow and George Yates started, (being the day appointed by the Presidency for us to leave,) and continued our pilgrimage slowly until the 15th, when our camp organized in Echo Kanyon, by electing Ezra T. Clark, Captain of the company; Charles Hubbard, Sergeant of the guard; James G. Browning, Chaplain; and Thomas Bullock, Clerk. Same day, William S. Godbe, with his train of merchandize for G. S. L. City passed us.

September 14th, we met east of Cache Cave, 13 wagons with a company of Saints under Captain Henry Boley: also Elder Benj. S Clapp with 14 wagons of Saints from Texas; and a train of 24 wagons loaded with merchandize for Messrs. Gilbert & Gerrish, of G. S. L. City; and on the 15th we met near Bear River 28 wagons of merchandize for Gilbert & Gerrish: and 23 wagons with over 250 Danish Saints, and 14 wagons with English Saints.

On the 17th met Major Stephen B. Rose with a train of merchandize, and the advance company of the Saint Louis Saints, near Black's Fork.

September 18th, while we were descending the hill to Green River, we very suddenly met Elder Edmond Ellsworth with the advance company of English Saints, over 300, with their hand-carts, trudging cheerfully up the hill; as we neared each other, the heavens and the hills resounded with the loud Hosannahs of the Saints, while the waving of hats, bonnets and handkerchiefs was a lively scene that a daguerrean artist might covet. On our asking why we had not heard from them until we saw them, we were answered, "We have out travelled every other company, not one has passed us, not a horse company, or even a solitary horseman, so we have to carry our own report; and we should have been here sooner, if our ox teams which carry the heavy dunnage, could have travelled any faster." They were very cheerful and happy. But we missed what was called "The Crack Company" of hand-carts, led by Elder D. McArthur, which we heard spoken very highly of, also the company of Saint Louis Saints led by Elder John Banks; we saw the smoke from their camp fires, but they were too far away for us to visit.

20th. We camped with Captain Bunker's company of hand-carts with over 650 Saints from England and Wales, on Pacific Creek.

22d. Camped with a company of brethren from the Southern States, many of whom had left Lyman Wight, and had been re-baptised by Elder Preston Thomas, also a large company of Saints with Captain Croft, near the Warm Spring.

Sept. 24. When we had been camped near Independence Rock a short time, we were gladdened by the arrival of Elder Franklin D. Richards, accompanied by the following returning missionaries: D. Spencer, C. H. Wheelock, G. D. Grant, W. H. Kimball, J. Ferguson, J. A. Young, J. D. T. McAllister, J. Van Cott, C. G. Webb, W. C. Dunbar, N. H. Felt, and J. McGaw, who were in excellent spirits at the speedy prospect of their return to fair Deseret, the loved home of the Saints; they blest and comforted us, to prepare our minds for the trials that await us in a wicked and perverse generation. They also reported to us the disturbances, by the United States Soldiers, near Fort Kearney, shooting a number of Shyan Indians while eating corn, and the Shyan retaliation, by shooting A. W. Babbitt, Thos. Margetts and his wife, Cowdy* and wife, four of Babbitt's teamsters, and several California emigrants.

29. We met O. P. Rockwell with four of Mr. Babbitt's wagons, and three other wagons, on the south side of the Platte; shortly afterwards we met Elder A. O. Smoot, accompanied by Elders Ira Eldredge and Brigham H. Young. Elder Smoot had in charge the Church train of 42 wagons, the Steam Boiler and machinery for Prest. B. Young, and other goods. We forded to the north side of the Platte.

30. Met Mr. Cauyer's train of 16 wagons of merchandize for G. S. L. City. We afterwards recrossed to the south side of the Platte.

Oct. 2. We passed over 450 Saints encamped (being part of the hand cart train) in charge of Elders Atwood and Wylie, 10 miles west of Fort Laramie. We waded the Laramie River, the gate at the end of the bridge being secured. If it were open, it would be a blessing to the hand cart companies, but I suppose the government is too poor, or they feel Independent of the prayers and blessings of the poor widows and orphans.

3. We pass by 18 Lodges of the Shyan Indians, who had killed the whites, encamped at the Indian Agents, 16 miles east of Laramie, who were desirous of making peace, and were waiting to make an exchange of prisoners, five days being allowed for that purpose.

Several persons join our company for protection, who are afraid to cross the plains by themselves.

4. We learn by tracks that Elder Edward Martin with over 700 Saints with hand carts, also Captain Hawkins wagon company had gone up the river road, whom we also missed seeing.

5. We lay by, in order for T. B. to send letters to Elder Martin and others, by James Gammell and Thomas Pierce, who return without seeing them. We resume our journey and pass Capt. Hunt's company with 50 wagons, who were tarrying to bury a small child, a few miles west of Chinney Rock, or about 580 miles from G. S. L. City.

9. We take a southerly course from Ash Hollow to the South Fork of the Platte, and cross over: we see the first Buffalo, kill and divide it; after which we see many thousands, on the four following days, which are on the move south. We had heavy rain through the 12th, but the weather cleared up on the 13th P. M. and we had a fair view of the partial eclipse of the moon as it rose that evening, since which we have had cold southerly winds.

* In Elder Felt's letter the person alluded to is called James Cowdan, but we have reasons for believing that Elder Bullock is correct in giving the name James Cowdy.—[ED.

Elders and Missions.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY.—On the 2d inst., Elder Amasa Lyman started for San Bernardino; and on the 10th and 11th, Elders Parley P. Pratt, Thomas Bullock, Bernard Snow, Dustin Amy and others started for the States and Europe, some on missions and others on business.

Elders Feramorz Little and Orson Miles started for the States, on the 29th inst.; the former on business, and the latter on a mission to Europe.

ELDER PRESTON THOMAS, from his mission in Texas, arrived late on the 12th inst., and started early on the following morning for his home in Lehi, too hurriedly to allow him time to report. We are informed that he will probably be in the city again soon, to superintend the arrival and disposal of his company.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Elders Geo. S. Clark and A. J. Stewart, missionaries from Utah, sailed from this port on Tuesday, the 7th inst., on the bark Federia Arca, for Australia, the field of their future labors; they left in the enjoyment of good health and spirits.

Elders Thomas Clayton and William Naylor, missionaries from Utah to the Sandwich Islands, sailed for Honolulu on the clipper ship John Gilpin, on the 8th inst. These brethren were also enjoying good health, and rejoiced in the prospect of soon reaching the portion of the Lord's vineyard in which they have been called to labor. All the missionaries appointed to Australia and the Sandwich Islands have now sailed.—[Western Standard, Oct. 11.

FOR THE MORMON.

"Mormon Wives!"

"A Narrative of Facts Stranger than Fiction!"

THE above is the title of one of the many books that have recently been published in the East, all boasting a title page on which the most conspicuous word is "Mormon;" all purporting to be facts, and nearly all leaving the facts when they leave the title page. Each author, from purely disinterested motives, magnanimously devoting his time, his talents, and hard-earned pennies, to the glorious cause of imparting to his fellow-man a knowledge of the dreadful evils that he has witnessed, and the horrible practises of the people called Mormons. This book is not an exception to the foregoing observations. Metta Victoria Fuller, the author, doubtless perceiving the necessity of assigning some reason for the publication of such a work, writes an introduction or explanatory note, which is more remarkable for brevity and diversity of subject than for particular allusion to the work following it. He commences by stating that the population of Utah is now upwards of 77,000; refers to the probable application for its admission into the Union as a State; and—

"Conjures every man to pause over this little record of one history, and then multiplying it by tens of thousands, say whether he can find it in his heart to have fellowship with such a moral monster as Deseret now is, and will continue to be under the laws and constitution which she has prescribed for herself."

He next alludes to the hatred existing between the North and South. (What particular bearing this may have upon the subject of Mormon wives, I leave to the consideration of his readers—if such a patient, persevering class of individuals exist—for I confess it is something too profound for my limited understanding.) He then calls upon Americans to "pause before that rising storm, and to see if there be not oil for the troubled waters," after which he pitches into the Kansas-Nebraska Act—talks incoherently about "degenerate sons of noble sires," "darkness of African servitude overshadowing the land"—repeats the old song of polygamy being a relic of barbarism—and winds up with an appeal to the citizens of this country to—

"Sternly oppose slavery in all its forms—intemperance and its hideous deformities—polygamy with its train of evils which no man can truly conceive, and which will end in animalizing man, and finally in barbarism."

He does not say in what monogamy will end—pity he quenched the spirit when he was in such a prophetic mood! He now thinks he may be permitted to quote from an old Philadelphia friend, the North American and United States Gazette. The article quoted is one which was noticed in THE MORMON some weeks ago, the principal arguments of which are such expressions as the following: "fraternity of licentious and debauched rogues," "demagogues," "fanatics," "knaves," "fools," "lechers," "wretches," "modern vermin," "loathsome creatures," "Pariah race," etc; and wherein the writer states that "he has no sympathy with Mormons, or their sympathizers"—an expression which, in my opinion, was quite superfluous after what he had already said upon the subject. Immediately following the foregoing ebullition of holy indignation, comes "Chapter I." which, as the author so truly remarks, "tells it own sad tale." It commences with a selection from Mrs. Hemans, and as this is the best thing there is in the book, I quote it, to relieve the dismal obscurity in which the whole is enveloped:

They were born to blush in her shining hair.
She is leaving the home of her childhood's mirth!
She hath bid farewell to her father's hearth;
Her place is now by another's side—
Bring flowers for the locks of the fair young bride."

The author then observes that: "It was the first day of June, and Margaret Fletcher's wedding day"—that she was sitting in her chamber alone—describes the chamber—the house—the ocean—the furniture—the weather—time of day (forgets to mention the year)—and states, as a fact worthy of observation, that the windows "looked across the road."

The one hundred and sixteen succeeding pages contain a description of Margaret's marriage, with, of course, the usual proportion of sighs, delicate slippers, love, ringlets, soft hands, lovely women, God-like men, &c., common in such literature—relate how her husband—till then a paragon of perfection—became a Mormon from motives of ambition, together with a variety of every-day occurrences of too trifling a nature to interest the readers of THE MORMON: the whole having about as much relation to Mormon wives as that renowned work of ancient literature entitled "Jack the Giant Killer." After a great deal of sobbing and crying, she consents to accompany her husband to the Territory of Utah. They accordingly come to New York and go thence to Council Bluffs, where they remain all winter, and push on in the spring to the "Great City of the Saints." In describing their journey across the plains the author is extremely brief, devoting but two leaves to its description, two pages of which is a quotation from "Alton Locke's Wonderful Fever Vision," which he observes "is an altogether more true and sublime history of her journeying than he can give"—doubtless as truthful a paragraph as any in the book.

He then describes the valley and city as being almost a paradise on earth, were it not for the inhabitants; but—

"Bitter drops began to distil into her (Margaret's) cup of sweets. Her day-dreams were broken in upon constantly by uncongenial companions. The women of Utah were talkative and inquisitive—more than women usually are, for the simple reason that their homes were not happy."

Some of the women wanted her husband Richard, and the Elders advised him to take another wife, to which he finally consented, with a determination to conform to all the Mormon usages, that he might eventually realize his lofty aspirations and be ordained an Elder! or, perhaps, at some time not far distant, occupy the position which Brigham Young now does, and then the people might see fit to have a king throned in all the magnificence of Solomon! That was the position he would strive for.

On informing Margaret of his second marriage, she immediately uttered "a sharp, low scream," and "dropped at his feet like a stone." She never recovered; but her brother Harry came back that way from the gold regions, and learning the state of affairs, shot at Richard with a revolver, breaking the arm of his second wife, who shielded him with her body. Hearing of this, a furious mob gathered around, and when Margaret's brother confronted them "with a revolver in each hand," daring them to come on, "a murmur of indignant admiration arose at the bravery they hated," they withdrew, but told him "if he showed his face out of doors while in that place he should rue it." But "paying no attention to these threats," he went where he pleased, and there was not one man among the many thousands in that city who dared molest him, knowing that he went thoroughly armed! Only think of one individual defying 25,000 inhabitants, what sublime courage! He should have had that jaw-bone of an ass placed in his hands that did such execution among the Philistines; it would become him so well. What a good thing it was that the people feared him, otherwise some of the "Danites" might have attempted to "whistle him out of town," and then think of the consequences! He would undoubtedly have fallen upon them in the intensity of his indignation and blotted them out of existence—"with a revolver in each hand." But the "Danites" didn't whistle, and the Territory was saved! Harry (not "the old Harry") came to the States, bringing Richard's second wife along, who became dissatisfied upon learning that he had a still younger wife than herself, and resolved to "leave Utah for ever," all her hopes being "to find some peace in works of good to others, and especially to her own sex."

The foregoing, with a miracle or two in a Temple which has yet to be erected, and two or three more quotations from "our reporters" and "Utah correspondence," concludes the doleful ditty. As for these last, if Mr. Metta Victoria Fuller had evinced sufficient generosity to have expended a glass or two of lager on some of "our" "John Stewarts," he could have procured a much more spicy bundle of Utah correspondence; but perhaps he couldn't afford the outlay! Why is it that Government does not do something for the amelioration of men of such brilliant genius and unknown talent.

To be sure, he has not many ideas embodied in his last work; but then he displays such a peculiar tact in his manner of spinning them out, and making a little go a great way. A man of such unprecedented ability deserves something more than the pecuniary profits likely to accrue from the sale of such a book. I propose that Mr. Fuller be placed in some office of public trust, where he can shine out and let the world behold his greatness; and, as he may wish to touch upon this subject again, I suggest the office of Deputy-Post-Master's-Assistant in some of our Western offices, where he could gratify his literary proclivities by the perusal of Utah mail matter that is now at the mercy of others. In case this suggestion should not be acted upon, the following, from the Buffalo Express, may serve as a good foundation for further "facts," only the scene of operations must be changed to Utah to give it effect:

"A Bundle of Elopements.—Mrs. King, near Kingston, was recently taken sick, and her husband seized the opportunity to elope with a handsome servant girl named Martin. On their arrival in Albany, Miss Martin eloped with a young man named Cornelius, taking Mr. King's money. King, being penitent, returned home and found that his wife had eloped with a drygoods clerk named Jeffers, with all the movable articles in the house. Whereupon King started off in pursuit, considering himself a deeply injured man."

Taking a general view of "Mormon Wives," reminds me very forcibly of the definition once given of a lobster, viz: "A small red fish that walks backwards." This was acknowledged to be very correct, with two or three exceptions. In the first place it was not red; secondly, it was not a fish; and lastly, it didn't walk backwards! It is much the same with "Mormon Wives." Firstly, it is not "facts;" secondly, it is not "stranger than fiction;" and lastly, it is a lie from beginning to end. However, for the encouragement of Mr. Fuller, I will state as my candid conviction that "Mormon Wives" will be read with intense satisfaction by an intelligent public when the celebrated "Adventures of Baron Munchausen" and similar productions are forgotten—but not till then.

FOR THE MORMON.

Mormonism.

BY ELDER JOEL M. BERRY.

Mormonism, presents a wide field for reflection and contemplation, an extensive surface upon which the mind may roam, affording a variety of objects for us to converse upon, but it is necessary at the same time that our minds should be led in that channel which is according to the mind and will of the Lord. I have had sufficient experience in this kingdom to know that the hand of God is in it, and that it is governed controled and guided by the spirit of the Almighty and the revelations of Heaven and to know that from the commencement it has been the design of the God of Jacob to establish his kingdom upon the earth. I rejoice that this kingdom is blessed with leaders who are not ashamed or afraid to watch over the interests of the same, and at all times to seek diligently the welfare of the children of Israel, who will point out the path for this people to walk in, whether that path may be popular or unpopular: leaders who will not hesitate to rebuke sin and wickedness whether committed in high or low places. Those who were acquainted with Joseph Smith the founder of this church, knows that he began entirely alone, as far as the influences of the children of men were concerned, to endeavor to establish a religion and an order of things diverse from anything then existing among men, a religion that was unpopular and contrary to the feelings, views and traditions of the whole human family. Every man who is acquainted with the history of the nations of the world at the present time, must know that religion is something very popular, having many followers, and they must also know that the religions of the day are very diversified and that they are in a great measure framed to meet the conveniences, traditions and situations of the children of men, with but little regard to the declarations of the Bible or the revelations of Jesus Christ. Every man that will read the Scriptures of the New Testament will see that there was an organization in the days of Jesus Christ, a system for the salvation of the children of men, laid down plainly for the inhabitants of the earth to follow.

Many of the prophets have prophesied that such an order of things as that which Christ and his Apostles established, should after ages of apostacy and darkness, again be established in the last days. When the Jews fell, through unbelief, as the Apostle says, the Gospel was taken from them and given to the Gentiles. Ask any portion of Christendom why the ancient order of the Church of Christ is not among them? Why Apostles, prophets, revelations and other gifts, are not in the Church now, and they will inform you that they were only needed in the dark ages of the world to establish the kingdom of God; but in this enlightened age are not necessary. Those who have been taught after the traditions of their fathers, have been taught that the Bible should be spiritualized—that it does not mean what it says, nor say, what it means. They have been taught to believe that where the Lord says Israel shall be gathered it means a spiritual gathering. When they read any portion of Scripture which does not agree with their traditions every man has his own system of spiritualizing to make it bend to his own views. Instead of this, we have now learned that God means what he says, and says what he means. Why does it require an angel to bring the Gospel from Heaven in these last days—when the earth is deluged with religion, with different systems and plans of salvation? Because none of them are according to the order or organization that God has given to govern and control the human family. If there had been a true organization of the Kingdom of God upon the earth in these latter days, there would have been no need of an angel to visit the earth, to teach men the first principles of the gospel of Christ, and administer its ordinances to them. In conclusion, let me say, that Joseph Smith, preached the gospel of the Kingdom of God in its purity and fullness as the Apostles of old preached it, and that it is now being preached in the United States, in Europe, in the Islands of the Sea, and will be preached in every nation and to every kindred, tongue and people under the whole Heavens and the same fruits, the same blessings, the same light and glory will be manifested as anciently.

Latest News from the Plains.

The Murder of Col. Babbitt Confirmed.

The arrival on Sunday eve of a train from Salt Lake under command of Capt. W. J. Hawley places beyond question the fact of the murder of Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Secretary of Utah Territory. From Mr. Hawley we obtain the following information:

Near the 'Sweet Water,' he met Messrs. Kimball and Ferguson. This is about 200 miles West of Fort Laramie, and 300 East of Salt Lake. He heard from them the rumor, and in order to get at the facts he remained with Mr. Trist, the Indian Agent, for several days. The Indians had come into the Fort and reported that 12 of them had attacked Col. Babbitt while one of his men was away, and after the Col. had fired his double-barrelled gun and his two revolvers, one of the Indians crept behind the wagon and tomahawked the Col. Frank Rowland and Sutherland were also killed.

The Indians said the Col. fought like a grizzly bear.

When at Fort Kearney Capt. Hawley learned that Maj. Wharton had in his possession the papers (including a draft of $8,000) and some of his hair. His watch was obtained by a Frenchman from the Indians. Altogether about 18 whites have been killed.

The Capt. reports the crops in Utah as good. Wheat was selling at $1,00, oats and corn 75, potatoes 50, flour 3,50 per hund. He met the several Mormon hand-cart trains at Green river 170 miles East of Salt Lake City, at Big Sandy, at Pacific Springs, another 5 miles East of Fort Laramie, and one at Chimney Rock 76 miles East of Laramie, a wagon train at Scotts Bluffs, and several others. All and every one in good health and spirits.

Next week we shall have more space for particulars.

Col. Babbitt was well known in our community, was on his return from Washington to resume his duties as Secretary, had with him a valuable collection of books, astronomical and other instruments, and was supposed to have a large amount of money.

His loss is irreparable, and the Government should send at once a sufficient force to punish, yes, to exterminate this tribe who for the last three months have been murdering and plundering her emigrants.

Mr. Jno. Campbell, Dustin Amy, and about twenty others came in train with Capt. Hawley.—[Council Bluffs Bugle.

Correspondence from Bishop N. H. Felt.

Fort Laramie, Sept. 19, 1856.

Dear Prest. Taylor: Thinking it would be interesting to you, to learn of our whereabouts at this time, I take the liberty of sending you a few lines to inform you of our good health, and prosperity. We have passed through a dangerous country where many deeds of horror have been perpetrated this season, but we have been greatly favored, not even having, scarcely met an Indian, since leaving Fort Kearney to this place, though no doubt they watched us closely. Twelve miles west of North Bluff Fork, Bro. Babbitt's train was attacked by the Cheyennes, two men killed, also, Mrs. Wilson's child and herself probably taken prisoner, and worse than death; this was below Kearney. While at Kearney we learned by a soldier from Laramie that Thos. Margetts and family and Jas. Cowden and family had been killed; the soldier had been in company with them a day or two, but had left them a short time in pursuit of a Buffalo, and on his return found the Indians robbing and burning the wagons, and saw the bodies of Margetts and Cowden and one of the woman,—the child still crying at the side of the wagon.

Col. A. W. Babbitt, after leaving his wagons, which had been recovered from the Cheyennes, by the Omaha's and placed them in charge of O. P. Rockwell, started ahead with two men, since which no trace of him has been found, he should have been here eight or ten days ago. No doubt, he and his companions have met with the same fate. He would listen to no counsel, but would go on with so small a party. There has been several other murders of single men, travelling the road, the particulars of which we could not gather.

The brethren send their best respects. Accept my own also, with the same to all the brethren in the office and the Saints in New York.

Excuse the haste necessary in writing this, and believe me, yours in the Gospel,

N. H. Felt.

P. S.—We have passed Capt. Martin's, Hodgett's, Willey's, Smoot's, and Rockwell's, trains, all in good spirits and health, and rapidly pushing their way to the valley.

Several returning Mormons are here, quite disheartened from proceeding on, hearing of the dangers of the road. We met some also who where turning back to Laramie with O. P. Rockwell's train.

N. H. F.

[According to the date of this letter it should have arrived here by the preceding mail. Though the information it contains relative to Col. Babbitt has been anticipated and already published, we give the letter entire, as, no doubt, many of Elder Felt's friends will be pleased to hear from him and of his passing through the Indian ground that far safe.—Ed.]

Corespondence of Hon. Geo. A. Smith.

St. Louis, Nov. 6, 1856.

Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse—Dear Brother: Your letter of October 27th has just been received, and I hasten to continue our correspondence.

My health is good, I have just returned from a visit to the Saints in Quincy and Keokuk, whither I accompanied Elder Erastus Snow. We were gladly received, listened to and hospitably entertained by our friends in those places. Elder Snow preached in the Danish language to the Saints in Keokuk, a considerable number from that county having located in that place until the return of spring.

We also made a flying visit to Nauvoo or the city of Joseph. I should judge that about three fourths of the Mormon buildings had been torn down, removed, or destroyed. Many of the best buildings remaining, show clearly the effects of ten years neglect. Although most of them are inhabited, few appear to be kept in repair. The Mansion is kept by Louis Bideman, who married the widow of the late President Joseph Smith; the building appears not to have been renovated since it was built, and its buisness as a public house is too small to justify its being kept in its original style. A part of the stone wall of the west front of the Temple is still standing, the residue of the materials having been used by the Icarians, who have built an establishment on the Temple Block. Several large stacks of hay were standing against the dilapidated wall.

Mr. Bideman informed us that the Temple was set on fire, by a man named Joseph Agnoe, at the instigation of certain mobocrats of Warsaw and other parts of the country, and it was a serious drawback to his business as hotel-keeper, as great numbers visited Nauvoo to see the Temple. My mind imperceptibly drew a contrast between Nauvoo in its glory and Salt Lake City, and from looking at the Masonic Hall, Seventies and Concert Halls, and Arsenal, my conclusion was that Salt Lake City is so far ahead of Nauvoo, that the latter could be better compared with Provo, more properly in its public buidings, machinery &c; but not in population. The site of Nauvoo is by nature the most beautiful in position on the Western Rivers. Several gentlemen with whom I conversed in relation to it, said that had the Mormons been left alone it would have been the largest City in the Western States, and the great mart of trade and railway Terminus.

The people of Hancock "cut off their nose to spite their face," they now see that had they been quiet and left there neighbors alone, they would now have been rich, but alas! it is now too late. By comparison it will be seen that the footing of the Temple wall in Salt Lake City, contains as many yards of masonary as the entire Temple in Nauvoo. The rock for the Nauvoo Temple was hauled from a limestone quarry about two miles distant while that in Great Salt Lake, is hauled about six miles: nine feet of sand-stone foundation being already laid, the residue of the Temple to be granite, from the Cotton Wood Quarry.

To look upon the delapidated ruins in Nauvoo and contrast it with its brilliant position in the days of the Prophet, it was enough to make any heart sad that was not insensible. Ten years ago last winter my children were driven from a comfortable habitation in this city, and I have wandered with them, until overcome by exposure and suffering I was called to deposit some of their mortal remains upon the desolate prairie, and my tale, were I to relate it, would be only the reiteration of what might be told by thousands who had been occupying happy homes of their own in republican Illinois. Those reflections and instead of the Prophet and his noble brothers in brilliant array at the head of the Legion, or in the Congregation surrounded by thousands of anxious listeners, it was to visit a cold, silent and mournful burying place, where lay the dust of the first Patriarch over the Church, Joseph Smith sen., Lucy his wife and four sons who by the hand of cruel persecution and exposure have met an untimely fate. Not a stone to mark the spot, no weeping willow, or fragrant balm of Gilead, no poplar to shade the sacred resting place of Prophets, Presidents, Patriarchs, Councillors, and Generals in Israel: here we could drop a silent tear, if grief did not suppress it, and here we offered a silent prayer to Heaven's King, that we might fulfill our destiny as well as they had done, that when we find our last earthly abode, that we like them might be prepared for exaltation and celestial lives. Elder Snow and myself left the desolate City with hearts filled with sadness.

On our arrival at Montrose we incidentally learned that a Pennsylvania Mormon kept a Hotel who was very kind to us, but the word Mormon must not be pronounced above a whisper. We visited the grave of Levi Snow Esq, Elder E. Snow's father whose funeral I attended fifteen years ago. My kind remembrance to sister Stenhouse and all friends in which I am joined by Elder Snow.

Yours &c., Geo. A. Smith.

Correspondence from Utah.

G. S. L. City, Sept. 30, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir: The hand-cart companies of the Saints under Elders Ed. Ellsworth and D. D. McArthur, arrived here on the evening of Friday, Sept. 26th inst., having been absent about nine weeks en route from Florence to this point; their progress being considerably retarded, by the few ox-teams and waggons they had along, not being able to keep up with them.

Prests. B. Young and H. C. Kimball, with a detachment of Lancers, the brass band, and many citizens went up into the Kanyon to meet them. The feelings which the Brethren had on meeting these companies, I will not attempt to portray. To behold a company of men, women and children, amounting to nearly 500 souls, drawing 486 hand-carts entering into the city of Great Salt Lake, dancing with joy as they passed along, only complaining that they had been encumbered with a few ox-teams for which they had to wait several hours almost daily, otherwise they would have been with us ten days sooner, and then to realize that this company had walked some 1400 miles, drawing their hand-carts the whole distance, these facts and our reflections upon the future results, filled our hearts with joy unspeakable, and caused our bosoms to swell with thanksgiving to God: we felt that the flood-gate of deliverance was hoisted to the oppressed millions, and we could say in confidence to the poor and honest in heart, "come home to Zion," for the way is opened up. Prest. Kimball said his heart felt as big as a two-bushel basket, yes our hearts were so swollen that we were speechless, not with sorrow, but with joy. Elders Ellsworth and McArthur, have earned honor and glory to themselves in the leading of these companies, they have, like the people, walked all the way, and assisted in drawing the hand-carts. Bro. Ellsworth went through the city covered with dust at the head of his brave company, drawing a hand-cart, under the close scrutiny of the thousands who crowded the streets with weeping eyes to gaze upon the scene; as he passed by his own lovely home and saw his wives and children standing in his door, he made no halt, only gave a passing salute, continuing with his company until he reached the public square and saw them all comfortably encamped and fed. I felt that his position was far more honorable and lovely in the eyes of God and Angels and good men, than it would have been, had he been mounted upon the best steed that ever trod the earth, clothed with ermine and gold. Prest. Young has declared from the beginning that it was a practical safe operation, his sayings in this, as in all other cases have proven true. Bro. Ellsworth lost but seven out of his company, a smaller loss than that of almost any company containing as many souls, that have arrived here; many were aged and infirm, yet they out-pulled any ox-teams that could be started on the road; never has a company been so highly honored, so numerously escourted, or so kindly dealt with, since Israel has arrived in these mountains, as the Pioneer hand-cart companies.

The Deseret State Fair is opened for the reception of articles for exhibition, and from the universal spirit of encouragement to domestic manufactures, we anticipate our Fair will be an emporium of Utah's true wealth, which will astonish her citizens. Further particulars by next mail.

There is a reformation commenced here among this people by the authorities of the Church, such a one as we trust will be permanent. The preaching of the First Presidency has been soul-stirring indeed. We may safely say in a measure that such sermons were never heard before, as have been delivered unto us of late by the prophet of God; and they are weighing the people, and the people feel that they are dealing with the quickening spirit and power of God, which discerns and knows their hearts; and they feel the importance of repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and leading holy lives before God, that we may be prepared for the events which await the whole earth. In some of the settlements in Davis county everyone has gone forward and been re-baptized, and we anticipate the same results will follow in G. S. L. county.

Sept. 20. Elder Peterson's company of Danes arrived.

Elder S. M. Blair and company returned from exploring a route to Carson Valley; report no feasible route westward. Hon. E. Reese arrived from Carson with the same report.

The weather has continued fine, and much of the corn not injured by early frosts will have time to mature.

On the 10th inst. we moved into our new office, opposite President Young's buildings, and have much cause to be thankful for the superior accommodations we enjoy.

Yours truly, W. Woodruff.

Several gentlemen connected with the insurance companies of Milwaukie visited Fort Washington to examine the wreck of the ill-fated propeller Toledo. They described the scene as an awful one. For two miles, or more, the lake shore is lined with fragments of the wreck, piled up, in many places, several feet high. The propeller foundered at her anchors, about 200 yards outside of the piers, and the tremendous violence of the sea completed the work of destruction in a very few hours. The heavier portions of the hull have come ashore in innumerable fragments. All the dry goods and furniture boxes have been rent asunder by the force of the waves, and their contents riddled by the sand-like sieves, and scattered far and wide along the coast. Some of the hardware, such as cases of axes, &c., came ashore whole, and were washed by the sea far up the beach. Sundry barrels of liquor also came ashore, but it is thought $5,000 will cover the value of all that has thus been saved.

Of the forty or fifty persons on board the propeller when she went down, only three, two deck hands and a steerage passenger, were saved. One of these deck hands, Aquilla Gifford, was on board the steamer Niagara when she took fire and burned to the water's edge, off Port Washington, on the 24th of Sep. He is not over twenty-one years of age, and this was his first trip. His second was on the Toledo, which foundered very near the spot where the Niagara was burnt. When the propeller settled, Gifford sprang into the sea and struck out for shore. Presently he felt a hand cluthing at his neckcloth, and, to save himself, slipped his head out of the neckcloth, and saw it go down with the poor fellow who caught it in his agony. With the help of a plank, Gifford managed to get to the side of the pier; but he had not strength enough left to climb. He, therefore, commenced hallooing for help at the top of his voice, and presently heard answering shouts from the shore. Before help reached him, however, a combining wave threw him upon the pier, and he lost no time in making tracks for terra firma. It is his impression that he will stay ashore awhile this time.

We learn that, down to Thursday morning, seventeen bodies had been recovered of those who perished by this awful calamity. The bodies were picked up along the shore, south of Port Washington.

The crew numbered about twenty-five persons, including Capt. Deusham, of Buffalo, who leaves a wife and child; Geo. Hill, first mate, who leaves a wife and family near Cleaveland; David Vance, second mate, brother of Mrs. Deusham, unmarried; Edward McManman, first engineer, family near Cleveland, and B. F. Stratton, second engineer, unmarried.

Mrs. Harriet Frazee, of Milwaukie—formerly the wife of Lucius Wadsworth, deceased, of Buffalo—was among the passengers, together with three of her children. All were lost.

The Recent Storm on Lake Erie.

Buffalo, Nov. 6, 1856.

Our papers this afternoon are filled with accounts of disasters to lake craft in the late gale. Some twenty schooners and barks are reported ashore or badly damaged. The brig Cumberland is reported to have been lost, with all on board. Capt. Chapney, of the schooner Vermont, arrived this afternoon, says, on the afternoon of the 4th he saw a large steamer or propellor lying in the trough of the sea wholly unmanageable. Her smoke pipes were overboard, and a crowd of people standing on the hurricane deck. He thinks she must have swamped before the storm was over. Owing to the severity of the storm, he was unable to render assistance or ascertain her name.

Tornado at Norfolk.

Baltimore, Nov. 6.

A violent tornado was experienced at Norfolk and Portsmouth on Tuesday, and occasioned considerable damage. Several houses were unroofed, and the new car house of the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad in Portsmouth was reduced to ruins. Eight or ten persons are known to have been seriously injured, and it is feared that others are under the ruins.

Ruatan.

New Orleans papers of Friday are at hand. They contain advices from Ruatan to the 18th ult., which states that the treaty between England and Honduras had excited great commotion there, the people of Ruatan being opposed to the recognition of the sovereignty of Honduras.

Terrific Gale at Buffalo.

Buffalo, Nov. 10.

The severe gale of Saturday morning caused considerable damage to the city. The roof of the freight depot of the State Line Railroad was blown off and carried some distance; a brick dwelling on Clinton street was blown down; a portion of the roof of the warehouse of William Tanner & Co., on Michigan street, was blown off; also the tower and part of the roof of Fisher's elevator, and the roof of the Central Railroad freight depot sustained slight damage.

The freight house, woodshed and a large quantity of wood, belonging to the State Line Railroad, at Westfield, was burned on Friday night.

The propeller Wisconsin, from Ogdensburgh to Chicago, with a full load of merchandise and sixty passengers, burst her steam chimney yesterday, off Grand River, Canada, scalding a deck hand fatally. She was towed back to Port Colborne, from whence the passengers were forwarded by the propeller Tonawanda.

Slavery in England.

"A Black Boy, of about 15 years of age, named John Black, ran away from Colonel Kirke, the 15th instant; he has a silver collar about his neck, upon which is the Colonel's Coat of Arms Cipher; he has upon his throat a great scar, bare in habit. Whosoever brings the aforesaid boy to Colonel Kirke's House near the Privy Garden will be well rewarded."—[London Gazette, March, 1685.

"To be sold a Negro Boy about 14 years old, warranted free from any distemper, and has had those fatal to that colour; has been used two years to all kinds of Household work, and to wait at Table; his price is £25, and would not be sold but the person he belongs to is leaving off business. Apply to the Bar of the George Coffee-House in Chancery Lane, over against the Gate."—[London Advertiser, 1754.

"Mathew Dyier, working goldsmith, at the Crown in Duck Lane, Orchard-street, Westminster, apprentice and successor to Mr. John Redman, corkscrew maker, deceased, continues the business of his late master, in making all sorts of gold and silver corkscrews, tobacco stoppers, silver padlocks for Blacks or dogs, collars, silver clasp knives, &c. Where merchants and shopkeepers may be supplied with any quantity on the least notice, and the lowest prices. An apartment of the above work kept by him."—[Ibid.

By the decision of the Court of King's Bench in 1772, the sale of a negro in this country was rendered illegal; and every black, male or female, was free from the moment of landing on British ground.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours! Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

What is Noble.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

What is noble? To inherit
Wealth, estate, and proud degree?
There must be some other merit
Higher yet than that for me!
Something greater far must enter
Into life's majestic span;
Fitted to create and centre
True nobility in man!

What is noble? 'Tis the finer
Portion of our mind and heart;
Link'd to something still diviner
Than mere language can impart:
Ever prompting—ever seeing
Some improvement yet to plan;
To uplift our fellow being,
And, like man, to feel for Man!

What is noble? Is the sabre
Nobler than the humble spade?
There's a dignity in labor
Truer than e'er pomp arrayed!
He who seeks the Min'l's improvement
Aids the world in aiding Mind;
Every great commanding movement
Serves not one—but all mankind.

O'er the forge's heat and ashes,
O'er the engine's iron head,
Where the rapid shuttle flashes
And the spindle whirls its thread;
There is labor lowly tending
Each requirement of the hour,
There is genius still extending
Science—and its world of power!

'Mid the dust, and speed, and clamor
Of the loom-shed and the mill;
'Midst the clink of wheel and hammer
Great results are growing still!
Though too oft by Fashion's creatures,
Work and workers may be blam'd,
Commerce need not hide its features!
Industry is not asham'd.

What is noble? That which places
Truth in its enfranchis'd will;
Leaving steps, like angel traces,
That mankind may follow still!
E'en though Scorn's malignant glances
Prove him poorest of his clan,
He's the Noble—who advances
Freedom, and the cause of man!

The Submarine Nautilus.

Its operation at Glen Cove—Three Hundred of the Leading Scientific Men of the States Present—Endorsement of Politicians, Sea Captains, Engineers and Editors.

Thursday was an exciting day amongst the scientific of our State. The submarine Nautilus was put through its operations at Glen Cove, and submitted to the rigid scrutiny of men whose verdict, either of approval or otherwise, must be final. The company formed to work this invention had chartered the steamship Champion, and invited the press and many of the leading celebrities of our State to a grand excursion, for the purpose of bringing the machine before the public. Amongst those on board, we noticed D. C. McCallum, Superintendent of the Erie Railroad; S. S. Post, Chief Engineer; Allan Campbell; Jesse Gay, Chief Engineer United States Navy; Jno. McL. Murphy, of the Brooklyn Navy Yard; B. F. Delano, Naval Constructor; Capt. Comstock, of the Baltic; T. C. Ruggles, Civil Engineer; Julius Krohel, Submarine Engineer, and many other scientific gentlemen. We also saw Lieutenant Gov. Patterson, Harbor Commissioner; Hon. Mr. Jackson, member of Congress from Connecticut, Senator Hale, Augustus Whitlock, Christopher Heiser, Hon S. C. Hawley, Robt. J Rankin, and a number of our leading merchants, bankers and professional men. A party of scientific Europeans were also on board, and appesred enthusiastic with the day's success.

Starting from Peck slip ferry at 10 A. M., Glen Cove was reached, after a beautiful sail about noon. In mid stream we found a large schooner lying at anchor, with steam engine on deck, and on mooring near her we learnt this apparatus was used for forcing compressed air into the receiver which supplies the Nautilus. At a few yards from the schooner we observed floating, like a huge porpoise in the water,

THE NAUTILUS.

The Nautilus in external form is almost round, or, as Senator Hale aptly termed it, "a water baloon." It is about ten feet in diameter, by seven feet deep, and weighs ten tons. A peculiarity, as compared with the old fashioned diving bell, is that it enters from the top, a species of iron trap door screws down when all are in, and when the machine is at the bottom, another and larger door opens in the base, so as to proceed with the works required. Condensed air is produced on board a vessel or on land, and is communicated to the Nautilus by an immensely powerful hose formed of thick India rubber, strong enough to withstand a pressure of 200 lbs. to the square inch; this is affixed to the top of the machine, and communicated by valves inside to the working and water chambers. After entering and closing the top of the machine, water valves are opened, which cause the Nautilus to sink; air is taken into the working chamber until its density is equal to that of the water without; the door of the bottom is then raised in order to move upon the ground. The operators step upon the bottom and carry the machine with them, or in current way cables passing from windlasses inside, effect the desired movement. To lift stone, a hook placed on the bottom is affixed to the stone, condensed air is then thrown into the water chambers, and the water is expelled until the weight of the stone is overcome. It is then moved in any direction, and, by the re-admission of water, is again deposited. In one of the experiments we saw performed, a stone weighing five tons was lifted, moved horizontally between twenty and thirty feet, and then deposited. The time occupied in going under water, bringing the stone to the surface (22 feet,) then moving, going down and depositing returning again to the surface, was only nine and half minutes. The Nautilus will lay 3,500 cubic feet of stone per diem, at a cost of $35, being less, according to the opinion of engineers, than the cost of the same work on terra firma. The average cost of sub-marine constructions is 16 1-2 cents the cubic foot, whilst with the Nautilus, as demonstrated yesterday, it is but one cent. All other works are in like proportion; the blasting of rocks may be done by it as cheaply as in a quarry. Its adaptability to the examination of ships' bottoms, to determine the necessity of docking according to the opinion of Captain Comstock of the Baltic will effect the saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. Its utility in pearl, coral and sponge fishing was remarkably demonstrated. A gentleman largely engaged in pearl operations in the Pacific observed that there was no limit to its value for that purpose. Pearl shells may be gathered by it at the rate of from two to three tons per day to each machine; this has been proved by actual experiment in Panama and California. Shells, according to prices current, are worth from $156 to $600 a ton.

With regard to lifting submerged vessels, the capacity of the pump demonstrates that the largest class of ships may be raised within three hours after attachment is made.

In order to test the "feeling" in the Nautilus, 160 persons went down yesterday, of whom forty were ladies. We ourselves entered the trap set for us with feelings of misgiving, and soon found ourselves one of twelve individuals—two being ladies. The iron door was screwed down, and immediately on descending a noise like the near letting off of steam dinned our ears; but this very unpleasant sensation was relieved by going through the operation of swallowing. We got down before we knew it, and the engineer lifted the door of the bottom and disclosed to us about six inches of muddy water. When we had gratified our curiosity during some five minutes, and obtained a number of shells as relics, the door was replaced and we shot up to the surface, the observation being made by one of the ladies that she could stay down all day. Everybody was more than satisfied, though few understood the rationale of the invention or the peculiarities of its construction as compared with the diving bell.

The Champion left Glen Cove on her return about five o'clock, and on getting under way, a meeting was organized on deck, with the following officers:

Chairman—Lieut. Gov. Patterson.

Secretary—Hon. S. C. Hawley,

Committee on Resolutions—D. C. McCallum, S. S. Post, Allan Campbell, Capt. Comstock, Jesse Gay, Jno. McL. Murphy, B. F. Delano, Julius Krohel, T. C. Ruggles and Capt. Mejia.

After a few words from the Chairman, loud calls were made for the inventor of the Nautilus, Major Sears, formerly of the U. S. Army.

Major Sears advanced through the crowd, and having ascended the ladder to the upper deck, made a short explanatory speech of about fifteen minutes duration. He said that it was only politicians now-a-days who made speeches; but he could not help saying a few words to them in reference to the Nautilus, on which they had been experimenting, favored, as they were, by so beautiful a day—an omen of their future success. The Nautilus is not made or got up for a stock company to speculate on, but for practical purposes. It is made to travel on the bottom of the waters, to gather pearls, to collect gold from the beds of rivers, to gather the untold wealth of old ocean. The inventors had expended much time and large sums of money in bringing this machine to its present perfection. Immense and unknown difficulties were met with at every step. The first apparatus that we constructed could move up and down in the water, but that was all; we could not get it to lift weights; for as soon as we got any heavy body to the surface, down it went from us. These difficulties were also attended with danger, the Nautilus having been shut up out of the water, at the outset, four feet from the surface, and all thought that those inside the machine were done for, except the inventor, who knew they were safe, if they only had the proper amount of compressed air with them. The properties of air and water were not in the slightest degree understood when we set out; we had, therefore, everything to learn—to construct a science, in fact. We had to rid ourselves of the various difficulties incidental to the condensation of air, and more than this, the latent heat of the air. Our pumps could not stand the pressure we put upon them, for iron melted and leather burnt up. We sent to Europe to obtain pumps which would compress air to the extent of 44 lbs. to the square inch, but the philosophical men of that continent sent us for answer that our request was an impossibility. But we have a pump now—you saw it working to-day—which, instead of 44 lbs., compresses air 200 lbs. to the square inch, and that pump is also our invention.

Water and air are the principles of the Nautilus. Water causes the machine to descend, whilst it rises under the force of compressed air. The applicability of the machine is most shown at the bottom of rivers. In California, South America, and other auriferous regions, it will move from side to side of the gold streams, bailing up the dust at every step. Condensed air will move every object to the surface, no matter how weighty. We know, at this present precise locality, within a mile or two, of valuable shipwrecked vessels, whose united value will foot up to $100,000,000. The Nautilus can cruise about the spot until it comes to the ship, and then raising the treasure is but a question of time.

A great feature in the machine is that it is independent of all outside influence or assistance, for it is managed from the inside alone, as many before me will have already observed. I did not mean to make a speech, but if the machine did not convince you of its workings, it would be useless for me to attempt any explanation. Major Sears stept down the ladder amidst heartily given cheers for the inventor.

After some brief remarks from Mr. Rankin, Captain Comstock, of the Baltic, Captain Howard, and one or two other gentlemen, the meeting was adjourned to the ladies' saloon, when a series of resolutions were passed, bearing testimony to the merits of the machine, and expressing the high gratification of the persons present at its performance.

Some prominent politicians present then favored the company with their views; after which the meeting re-adjourned to the deck in a state of the highest enthusiasm.

The culinary and vinery arrangements of the day reflected great credit on the directors, and they deserve for them that success which the Nautilus is certain to obtain, not merely in this country, but throughout the civilized world.

We feel a national pride in the success of this great work. Heretofore the palm of superiority in mere mechanical invention has been universally conceded to our countrymen by other nations, but we have been denied a a claim to discovery in works demanding a knowledge of the hidden and mysterious laws of nature's arcana. We challenge the world to produce more astounding results than those embodied in the electric telegraph, and this new invention of the Nautilus. It is not merely the machine itself, but the acquired knowledge in relation to the before unknown properties and laws of air and water, now for the first time developed, and which hereafter will be the basis for still further discovery; but in a commercial point of view alone the invention is one of the most important of the century, and the name of Major Sears will reflect glory on his country and be classed with those of Franklin, Morse and others, as a benefactor of his race.—[N. Y. Herald, Nov. 15.

Obituary.

MURDERED by the Indians, 120 miles west of Fort Kearney on the Platte river, about the 10th of September last, Col. Almon W. Babbitt, Secretary of Utah, in the 43d year of his age.

Mr. Babbitt was born in one of the Eastern States, and whilst still in his boyhood removed with his father's family westward to the wilds of Ohio, where in 1833 he joined his destinies with the Church of Latter Day Saints or Mormons. Having a very limited education, it was left for his determined energy to become more acquainted with books, and carve out for himself his future course and his fortune. The study and practice of law was adopted, and the deceased for years engaged in a successful pratice. The Col. represented a portion of the citizens of Illinois in the State Legislature, and for two terms represented the people of the new Territory of Utah in Congress. In 1852 when Western Iowa was enthralled with political fanaticism, Mr. Babbitt established the Bugle Office and raised the standard of Democracy whose flag still waves triumphantly. Soon after, Mr. Babbitt received from President Pierce the appointment of Secretary of Utah, in which capacity he served up to the time of his melancholy decease.

Mr. B. made the first trip across the mountains with the mail, and has altogether made nearly twenty trips across the Plains to or from either Utah or California, sometimes alone and unprotected, escaping the dangers of this long and tedious journey by his energy and watchfulness and quick perception of danger. His character was marked with an energy and determined perseverance rarely found His towering ambition was softened with unbounded generosity and a firmness for the right that nothing could move. He has ever been an unflinching friend to the cause of his oppressed brethren and has manfully battled for their rights.

He left his family last spring, to visit Washington upon official business, visiting this place both upon going and returning. With a number of friends, we accompanied him to Florence, N. T., on the last of August from whence he started out to Utah, with only one attendant. Upon arriving at Fort Kearney, he found that the Cheyennes had attacked his freight train of Government Property and killed four of the party, and taken the stock and every other valuable they desired.

Here Mr. B. stopped a week to gather up what could be found of the scattered property purchase other teams, obtain drivers and start the train again, himself starting forward, with two attendants, viz: Frank Roland and a Mr. Sunderland. They stopped at 2 o'clock when 28 hours out, and having travelled 120 miles, a band of 12 mounted Cheyennes, whose hands and arms were yet reeking with the blood of the murdered, bore down upon them with a wild shout and a hideous yell. Mr. S. was away from the wagon a short distance. Mr. R. stood near by apparently petrified, and was shot down by a score of well aimed arrows. Mr. B. after hailing the Indians, fired, first his rifle, then his revolving pistols at them, but being still hard pressed, clubbed his rifle and backing toward his carriage fought desperately and effectually, and single handed and alone as he was, would have stood a chance to have come off victorious over more than half a score of savage warriors, had not a blood thirsty wretch come up behind him into the uncovered wagon and with his tomahawk felled him to the earth. Mr. S. endeavored to save himself by flight but was also overtaken and killed. * * * Thus has fallen a noble brave, a true and good man whose loss will be severely felt by his family and numerous friends.

After braving every danger by sea and land and having traversed the American continent over many a time, the steel of the savage has laid him low upon the desert heather, a prey to wild beasts, where even a resting place for his bones cannot be found. Will our brave countrymen avenge his death upon the worthless barbarians who have spilt his priceless blood?

Fare thee well, noble, brave, generous and good A. W. Babbitt. Thy work on earth is accomplished. May we emulate thy virtues. —[Council Bluffs Bugle, Nov. 4.

Another Awful Calamity.

Loss of the French Steamer Le Lyonnais.

THE iron screw steamship Le Lyonnais, Captain De Vaix, sailed from this port on Saturday, Nov. 1, with thirty-nine cabin passengers—and there were on board, including officers, crew, engineers, firemen and steerage passengers, near 150 souls. She also had $20,000 in specie on freight.

On the night of Sunday, the 2d inst., while in a dense fog, Nantucket light-ship bearing N. N. W., and distant 60 miles, the ship was run into by an unknown vessel and her stern cut clean off. Nothing more was seen of the unknown vessel, and it is probable that she went down immediately.

Not so with Le Lyonnais, she remained with her afterpart full of water and her bow high out of the water. All hands stayed by the wreck until the next day, when it was abandoned. The ship was provided with six boats, only one of which was a life boat. That boat only has been heard from.

On the morning of Monday, after it was resolved to abandon the wreck, a raft was constructed, and about 40 persons, including passengers, (probably the steerage passengers) took refuge upon it. It is the opinion of the second officer that this raft could not have lived through the rough weather that succeeded this day—that it must have been broken to pieces, and that all the persons on board were lost. There is room for hope that some friendly sail might have rescued them.

In another boat was the commander with some of the passengers. This boat was well provided with provisions, compasses, &c. It was the intention of the captain to pull for Montauk Point. This boat has not yet been heard from.

Another boat contained the second mate, Laynire, the second engineer, Desfour, several of the crew and passengers. This is the only boat heard from so far.

The list, then, is, saved 16; missing and probably lost 130.

We have no account of the other five boats, and the raft, save that which is given above.

The following details in relation to the saved are gathered from the second mate.

The boat left the ship on the morning of Monday, the second. There was a heavy gale blowing, and the Captain resolved to abandon the ship. She was then, and when Mr. Laynire last saw her, with her stern sunk below water's edge, and her bow out of water. On Tuesday he lost sight of the other boats. The second mate's boat contained 18 persons. The weather was very rough, and the hapless voyagers suffered terribly. They encountered several severe snow storms and were short of water. They had claret wine, bread, and preserved meats. They were beaten about six days, until the afternoon of the ninth, (Sunday,) and two of their number (passengers) died during this terrible interval. On Sunday their eyes were gladdened by the sight of a friendly sail, which proved to be the Bremen bark Elise, Capt. Nordenbolott, on board of which vessel they were immediately taken and made as comfortable as possible. Their limbs were frozen, and altogether they were in a terrible condition.

On the next day, in latitude 40 deg. 51 min. N., longitude 65 deg. 40 min., the Elise spoke the Hamburg bark Elise, Capt. Neilson, bound for New York. The Bremen bark was short of water, and Capt. Neilson immediately consented to give those saved from the boat a passage to New York. They all availed themselves of this offer except two of the passengers, Mr. Shaler and wife, who remained on board the Bremen bark, intending to go to Bremen. The Hamburg bark arrived below last evening, having on board 14 of the ship's company of the Lyonnais.

Two of this boat's crew died in the boat, which reduced their number to 16, all of whom are thus accounted for.

The sufferings of these unfortunates may be imagined. At present they are likely to recover, but their limbs are frozen and swollen. The ladies suffered terribly, but bore up with the fortitude for which the sex is so eminently distinguished in the presence of real danger.

The fate of both the vessels is at present uncertain, and the course of the captain of the Le Lyonnais seems to have been injudicious. Her position, when abandoned, would seem to indicate that she was tight forward, and under such circumstances was safer than boats in a heavy sea.

The Lyonnais was built at Southampton, England, and intended for the South American trade. She was temporarily placed on the new French line from this port to Havre, of which Edward and Edmund Poirrier are the agents.

We have thus stated the simple facts of this terrible calamity. As the record stands, the narrative is heart-rending. We have hopes, however, that as the boats were directly in the track of hundreds of vessels inward and outward bound, more of the passengers may have been rescued. We have no heart for further comment this morning.

Creation of Man.

THE study of life, palæontologically regarded, necessarily involves the creation and first appearance of Man on the globe; and on this subject much discussion has taken place, unprofitable alike to science and to the cause of Christian theology. So far as geological evidence goes, we have no trace of man or of his works till we arrive at the Superficial Accumulations—the coral conglomerates, the bone-breccias, the cave-deposits and the peat-mosses—of the current epoch. It is true, that so far as the earlier formation are concerned, the evidence is purely negative; but taking into account all that palæontology has revealed touching the other families of animated nature, the fair presumption is that Man was not called into being till the commencement of a current geological era, and about the time when in the northern hemisphere the sea and land received their present configuration and were peopled by those genera and species which (with a few local removals and still fewer extinctions) yet adorn their forests and inhabit their land and waters. —[Advance Text-Book of Geology, by DAVID PAGE, F. The Highest Mountain in the World.

AT the meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal on the 6th of August, Major Thuiller announced that Colonel Waugh, Surveyor General of India, had completed his computations of the positions and elevations of the peaks of the Himalayas. The result was to depose the mountain Kanchinjinga from its throne as the highest point on the earth's surface. That distinction belongs for the present to a peak 100 miles from Kanchinjinga, and between that mountain and Katmandoo. This peak is ascertained to be 29,002 feet above the sea level; Kanchinjinga is 28,156 feet, and Dewalagiri, the mountain which "school geographies" persist in calling the "highest in the known world," is only 26,826 feet. The mountain has no name intelligible to civilized men, and Colonel Waugh has therefore ventured to denominate it "Mount Everest."

Water-Proof Clothing.

TWENTY thousand tunics, now being prepared for the French army, are, according to a recent statement of M. Payen, a chemist of some note, rendered water-proof by the aid of alum and sugar of lead without the aid of India-rubber or gutta-percha, or any other gums or oils. The process given is very simple, and is claimed to render any species of tissue water-proof. Dissolve two pounds and a-half of alum in four gallons of water; dissolve also, in a separate vessel, the same weight of acetate of lead in the same quantity of water. When both are thoroughly dissolved mix the solutions together, and when the sulphate of lead resulting from this mixture has been precipitated to the bottom of the vessel in the form of a powder, pour off the solution, and plunge into it the tissue to be rendered water-proof. Wash and rub it well during a few minutes, and hang it in the air to dry.

Decidedly Cool.

THE editor of the Pottsville, (Pa.) Miners' Journal recently visited Philadelphia, and while there his room at the hotel was entered one night by a light fingered rascal, who stole from his clothing a valuable watch and some money. The editor subsequently received a communication from the "chevalier," together with a locket which was attached to the watch. He said he returned the locket, "thinking it might probably be valued on account of associations," and would have returned the watch, but there was such a small amount of capital in the purse that it would not pay for the trouble he took, so the watch had to be sold to "pay expenses." He says he likes editors, and if he gets any money soon, will buy the watch back and return it, and winds up by advising the knight of the quill not to sleep so sound the next time he visits the Quaker city—all of which must be very consoling to that gentleman.

Use of Lime in Planting Trees.

IN soils deficient of lime, in any considerable degree, the use of about four bushels to the acre, applied by being incorporated thoroughly in the soil into which the roots of the tree are to be placed, has proved to hasten the forming of new rootlets, increases the vigor of the tree, and thus aids in securing success to the planter. Ground bones have a like effect as an immediate stimulus and supplying ingredients required by nature.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 22, 1856.

The World and its Rulers

THE nations of the old world, with one or two exceptions, are writhing under the galling chains of bondage. Nations in the foremost rank of modern civilization, favored with statesmen of high intellectual ability, warriors renowned for bravery and deeds of arms, poets and writers of the brightest genius and talent, and multitudes of artizans skilled in avocations of usefulness and refinement—are tied up, hedged round, and ruled over by despots of both sexes, the most despicable that ever sat on thrones. Ignorance and lack of virtue in the people maintain them there. Revolution after revolution has burst upon the eastern world, carrying devastation to the palaces of royalty, and spending its fury upon the head of an offending monarch; but in the hour of popular success, of triumph, the absence of oneness of object and purpose to form a compact—with one spirit—a unity that could govern—the ruled that had become the rulers of the moment had to follow in the wake of their royal predecessors, and republic after republic has thus passed from the stage of action, till corruption in high places, and superstitious reverence with the masses for high-sounding names, have brought back to the throne the sons, grandsons, nephews and nieces of the very monarchs whose blood had stained the guillotine of the populace, whose lips had drank the poisoned cup from the hand of the courtier or fallen by the stilletto of the hired assassin. Over and over again have these games been played: alternately despotism and freedom, freedom and despotism, till hope of successful deliverance from the thraldom of kings, by the strong arm of the people, is dying away in the bosoms of the most sanguine.

The last mail from Europe brought little else of interest than the gradual nearing of France and Russia to friendship and alliance, and a movement to the same end on the part of England and Austria. Anticipating, as we do, the breaking-up of kingdoms and empires, without building hopes of the speedy establishment of liberty by the triumph of one alliance or another, or being in our anticipations disappointed by a speedy return to royal cordiality or kingly brotherhood by a patching-up of difficulties, the present unsettled state of affairs, linked to the past few years history of Europe, is not uninteresting. The game of to-day is no longer between the rulers and the ruled; it lies between the rulers themselves. The subjects of discord are abundant; the ambition for supremacy never greater; the elements of disorganization and destruction are on hand; and the will to "let loose the dogs of war" is as great on the one side as on the other, and is now only restrained by the greatest wisdom, prudence and tact.

The frequent changes of ministry in the nations show the intricacy of the business ministers have to manage and the delicacy of the relations between governments. What is right is never difficult to understand, but for one government to assert its own or another's rights without giving offence to another government who may have interests at stake in the change is no easy matter: hence the circumlocution in diplomacy—the wish to obtain and the desire to avoid humbling a ruler, particularly if that ruler has the power as well as the will to resent. Last week we noticed that the Moniteur, the organ of the French government, had lectured the English press for the liberty they took in speaking of the French government: so tied up is journalism in France that such sentiments were not once laid to the editor, but charged home to the Emperor as an indication of his feelings towards England. What may have directly passed between the two governments, before or since, has not yet got to the public; but the movements of ambassadors, the coldness where cordiality reigned, the studied efforts of France and Russia to please, favor, and honor each other, and the same between England and Austria, together with other moving straws, all indicate that the "Western Alliance" is not only likely to be of short duration, but that rulers are not yet to be called members of the happy family. The treaty of peace, terminating the late war, has not been carried into execution, and each power throws the blame upon the other. When and how they may settle their difficulties is of little consequence, but the present state of things show how little peace in the nations can be depended on. Governments have all acted upon the assumption of might makes right, added land to land, and increased their dominions, so that now in our day, when the first governments of the world are nearly balanced in strength, the facts of their history furnish the one and the other with opportunity of recriminating, while their readiness for the tug of war keeps each other for the moment at bay; but an unfortunate speech, an unlucky step, like a bone thrown between two angry dogs, may lead them again to the tented field. That it may come now is, we thought of saying, improbable; but the history of the last few years makes one sparing of the use of improbabilities—however, come it will.

Believing in the overruling power of the Most High for the accomplishment of His own purposes, the Latter Day Saints are, probably more than any other people, more indifferent and yet interested in the present movements of the rulers of the nations. It is in reality of little moment to them who are Emperors, Kings, Queens, and Presidents, for all mortals in authority are alike instruments in the hands of God in bringing about certain purposes, or are made subservient to His will in scourging the nations for their iniquity; still, as they look forward to the consummation of a great purpose, it is interesting to see the means at work. So far as the kingdom of God is concerned nothing can militate against its interests. A Pharoah, such as he who favored Israel, may sit enthroned in the majesty of his power, yet made to feel his need of wisdom, and through circumstances the most unlikely be led to find it in the despised and persecuted Joseph, and in return for his inspirations protect in the exercise of their rights the people with whom he is identified; or another Pharoah may be raised to the same dignity with hostility burning in his bosom against Israel; notwithstanding this the decrees of Jehovah will be carried into execution and a Moses equal to the emergency be found to redeem the covenant people according to the will of Him who saith, "I am that I am."

With such views and unmeasured confidence in the wonder-working power of the God whom they serve, the Saints can afford to look calmly on the changes of rulers, the movements of the crowned heads, and the uprisings of the people, for all things are certain to work together for good to those who love the Father and the Son and keep their commandments.

Emigration to Utah.

ELSEWHERE we have alluded to the early emigration from England next spring: for those who purpose leaving the States for Utah next emigration, we think it opportune to say—"Be ye also ready." The emigration to Utah of late years has been continued till the summer was far advanced, and at risk and inconvenience which could be altogether prevented, if the Saints would take time by the forelock and carry out the counsels they receive from those who are placed to counsel them.

By last mail from Utah, we were advised of the arrival of the first hand-cart companies at Salt Lake City, on the 26th of Sept., early enough; but by reference to the journal of the missionaries on the plains, it will be seen that the last company, under the direction of Elder Edward Martin, was, about the 4th of Oct., probably 20 miles East of Fort Laramie, about 500 miles from G. S. L. City. Allowing that company to travel from 15 to 20 miles per day, they would, in resting on Sundays, be about a month more en route. If favored with a long summer and a favorable "Indian summer," after it, they may all arrive before the snow begins to fall on the mountains, otherwise they may have cold fingers and other inconveniences.

In by-gone years it was the practice of the Presidency of the Church in Zion to appoint missionaries to the States and to Europe at the April and October conferences, but latterly, the Autumn appointments have been made in September, and this year, some have been appointed in August for the purpose of affording opportunities to the missionaries to set in order their households and cross the mountains before the approach of winter. These commendable precautions should not be overlooked by those who go to Utah no more than by those who come from it. It is the duty of all men to make use of the best information they possess, or experience they may have gained for the preservation of their lives, and though we will ever do well to trust in the Lord, it is written, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." When the Lord inspires his servants with wisdom to cry unto His people: "prepare ye, prepare ye," none can be justified in turning a deaf ear to the call. The emigration from Europe and from the States, has been prudently conducted by the authorities of the Church to whom the business has been confided; but by dilatoriness on the part of some Saints; the former have labored frequently under disadvantages in making the most suitable arrangements, and at the most convenient time for the journeying of the latter by sea and by land, and not unfrequently those who were dilatory in sending their names and their money, were the first and the loudest in grumbling about the inconveniences which their own backwardness had entailed upon themselves and others.

President Orson Pratt on the other side of the water, has given timely notice of his intentions to push on early the through emigra- to Utah. If the Saints there listen to his instructions, he purposes that the last company shall leave "no later than the 25th of March, in order that they may reach the place of outfitting for the plains early in May." This notice will serve equally the Saints in the Eastern States to prepare themselves in time. Though on this subject we shall give direct instructions between this and the emigration season; this hint will recall to their minds that—Procrastination is the thief of time.

Emigration from Europe.

As some of the European Saints temporarily located in the United States may be expected to assist their relations and friends in the coming spring emigration from the old countries, we take this early opportunity of notifying them that the Presidency of the Church in England purposes to commence the emigration earlier, and to terminate earlier than in previous years.

All who purpose emigrating from England to Utah next year by hand-cart companies or otherwise, are requested to send their deposits to Orson Pratt, at Liverpool, before the 1st of Jan. next. Those who mean to send assistance to their friends should do it early.

To Friends.

WE frequently receive articles on doctrine and pieces of poetry for THE MORMON, the non-appearance of which may cause us to be mis-judged and the authors to become discouraged. We believe in progress and are not over nice about attaining perfection in a great hurry; we feel, therefore, more to encourage and stimulate a laudable ambition than to condemn. One great reason why many interesting items in letters, correct principle in articles and "soul stirring" sentiments in poetry never see daylight is because the writers impose upon us labor which they could perform themselves, labor for which we have seldom time, and, not unfrequently, as little inclination. Brethren, and sisters likewise, stir up the gifts that God has conferred upon you, cultivate your talents and when the necessary duties of life have been discharged, write for the information of the world, for the comfort of the Church or for the advancement of Truth what you will, but read it carefully after you have written it: try if you cannot make it more simple and clear by a few corrections; look at it again—improve it if possible a second time, never mind trouble; read it again and again, and correct again and again till you cannot improve it, than send it here, and if we can aid we will do so with much pleasure, and give your labors to the world whatever they may be, if they aim at elevating the mind to what is pure, just, honest and good. Send on—short and pithy articles.

Death of M. Cabet, the Communist

THIS distinguished leader of the Icarian school of French socialists, who has, with a considerable number of his disciples, been living at Nauvoo some years past, died at St. Louis on the 8th inst, of apoplexy. The Herald of Saturday publishes his obituary, whether original or extracted from the St. Louis Republican we don't know, but it reminds us of: "success makes the man, the want of it the fellow." With M. Cabet's views we have no sympathy, but, to the contrary, have opposed them time and again on the continent of Europe, where they were advocated by his cleverest and best friends—this, however, does not prevent us from doing the deceased justice. The notice we allude to says:

"Loud complaints were made against Cabet; and many who had gone with him to Texas, on their return to France brought actions against him for swindling, as they allege, and was condemned as a swindler by the courts, par contumace—that is, in his absence, he of course not appearing to meet the charges."

It is very true that Cabet's scheme failed, that many of his disciples were bitterly disappointed, lost and suffered much, that some of his disciples returned to France, preferred charges against him, that he failed to appear before the court and was condemned; but it would have cost the writer little trouble to have added that M. Cabet was in America when the charges were preferred and when the court condemned; but that he immediately arranged his affairs to permit of his absence, returned to Paris in spite of the pleadings of his friends who had no faith in his receiving justice, presented himself before the court, walked into prison, demanded trial—was tried and acquitted, remained in Paris, published at his own expense the whole trial, and edited his paper the Populaire, till the coup d'etat of the 2d of December. These are facts. How difficult it is for some men to do justice to the unpopular.

M. Cabet's death is supposed to have been hastened by the dissensions and acrimony among his followers, and the bitter enmity of some who had once been friends.

Nicaragua and Mexico.

THE last steamship from San Juan del Norte, brings full accounts of Walker's triumphs at Massaya and Granada. He seems now to consider himself safe from the further attentions of the allied forces of the neighboring States. He was preparing to march for Leon, where the Rivas alliance had gathered in strength, to offer them battle before they left the country.

The Allies at Granada, during Walker's absence at Massaya, committed fiendish and brutal murders of unoffending American citizens, which have yet to be atoned for.

By the Texas, a number of officers have arrived here on leave of absence. Don Fermin Ferrer, formerly Provisional President of that Republic, has arrived on his way to Washington as Minister Plenipotentary. Walker's star is up.

The last news from Mexico represents things more favorable for the present government. The revolutionists have been vanquished at Puebla. For some time back there has been considerable talk of Spain preparing at Havana for a descent upon Vera Cruz, and a cotemporary is very strong in faith and assertions, denials to the contrary notwithstanding, that the exiled Mexicans, present located in New York are busy preparing for an invasion upon Cuba.

Epistle of President G. J. Taylor,

To the Priesthood and Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints composing the New York Conference, and to all Saints throughout the Eastern States who are at present unconnected with any Conference of this Church—GREETING:

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:

Having been called to the Presidency of the New York Conference at its late session, in this city, I improve the present opportunity of addressing you a few words through the columns of THE MORMON.

Many of you are doubtless aware of our proceedings in the East for some time past, and of the present position of affairs relative to the promulgation of the Work in this portion of the vineyard. You know what has been required of the Saints thus far, and many of you are doing duty as it should be done by servants of the living God; such persons need no exhortation from me to stimulate them to further exertion; those who live their religion in this kingdom have an incentive to perseverance stronger than any I could urge; but "the net has been cast into the sea, and has gathered of every kind." All are not "living their religion," and until we can do that, we are not entitled to the name of Saints. God will have a people who will hearken to His voice and obey His commandments, and if we are unwilling to abide His law, we must give room for those who will. We wish to know who are desirous of retaining a name and place in this kingdom. If there are any in this land who have not reported themselves to the authorities here, or elsewhere, let them do so immediately, that we may know who they are, and what they are doing. It is necessary that every man and every woman professing to be a member of this Church, should be included in some Branch or Conference, that their standing may be known by all, and that a correct report may be forwarded to the Presidency in Zion.

Many of you, who have recently arrived in this country, have borrowed means and incurred obligations. If you are able to do so, meet your engagements; otherwise you are unworthy the name of Saints. I would say to all, cultivate a spirit of honesty and integrity with all men, in and out of the Church. Defraud no man, but strive to win the approbation of God and your brethren. Be upright and truthful in all your dealings. Cleanse yourselves from all impurity, both of mind and person. Educate your children, and teach them to observe the word of wisdom and the laws of God. Respect yourselves and you will command respect. Honor God and His kingdom by obedience to His mandates. Remember the position you occupy, and act worthy of your vocation. Let your course be Zionward; never lose sight of that Standard on the mountains, but wherever you may be, endeavor by every means in your power, to diffuse truth and spread intelligence, that the Work may not lack your assistance; strengthen the hands of your brethren, and labor in unison, "Union is strength." If we wish to be accounted Saints, we must live as such. Put away from among you all bickerings and strife, and cultivate a spirit of love one to another. Jesus said "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

This portion of the vineyard has been, in a measure, forsaken by the Elders for years, and rank weeds have been permitted to spring up, until the once flourishing branches have withered for lack of nourishment. Great changes have taken place. The Saints have been driven from State to State, and from City to City until finally they were thrust forth, by hands still reeking with the blood of Martyrs, and during the piercing frosts and cutting blasts of mid-winter, into the untrodden, trackless wastes of a howling wilderness—destitute, homeless and friendless—but not despairing.

Many thought, and some hoped and predicted they would perish on the plains, by starvation or the hands of ruthless savages, but the God of Moses was with them and raised up a Joshua for their deliverance. He led them forth from the pious threatnings, and holy hatred of immaculate Christendom into the midst of savages and barbarians, that among the uncultivated children of nature they might find that liberty of conscience and religious freedom, denied them by the "highly civilized and enlightened" population of Illinois.

They found a refuge in the almost inaccessible recesses of the Rocky Mountains; as it were, "In a land of deserts and of pits; a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt." They ploughed and planted what they were told would nor produce; but they had faith and energy—they were industrious and persevering, and success crowned their efforts. The seed grew; the earth brought forth in abundance, and the Saints rejoiced—They returned thanks to the God of Israel and were glad.

During all the time that the Body of the Church was wandering in the wilderness, and for some time after, the Branches in the East were neglected, and many became disheartened, and disgusted with the principles, because of the proceedings of apostates, who returned to this country with an assumed authority to counsel and direct the Saints, but whose sole object was to wring from them a few dollars and then desert them. Other impostors also came on a more extensive scale to establish Churches of their own; each asserting that Brigham was wrong, the Twelve were wrong, that Joseph was then a fallen Prophet, and that he was his rightful successor. They had followers, and all succeeded in their impositions for a time; some of them flourished like a green bay-tree. But the Elders of Israel were again sent forth, clothed with the authority and power of the priesthood they again raised their voices in proclamation of truth; the axe was laid at the root of the evil trees and they withered; the honest in heart forsook them and they faded away; even Rigdon who some have said, was the founder of "Mormonism," tried in vain to establish a Church by his own wisdom. The Communists, a society headed by Mr. Cabet, endeavored to establish themselves in the City we were driven from; and although they had every facility for the accomplishment of their designs, money, friends and influence, they failed. Many other societies have gone down in like manner. The wisdom of the wise men perisheth and the understanding of the prudent is hid." But while the systems of men are tottering and crumbling on the right hand and on the left—while infidelity and contention are rife in the land, the cause of truth moves steadily on. Thousands are flocking to Zion, shoulder to shoulder they press onward breasting the stream of iniquity, and cleaving firmly to that "Hope" which, "like an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, reaches to within the veil." The light has again burst forth in this land, and will shine with redoubled brilliancy if we keep our lamps trimmed. Others are fighting valiantly in the great cause—let us not falter. Let us stand to our posts, while here, and when the way opens, be ready to wend our way to Zion; "that we may learn of God's ways and walk in His paths that we may become wise unto salvation."

Social Party at St Louis

THE following minutes of a social party, held at St. Louis at the close of the October Conference, did not reach us till copy for last week's MORMON was "set up."—[ED.

COMMITTEE.

Charles Edwards,	John Gordon,
John Dudson,	William Turner,
Andrew Sprowle,	William Lowe.

At six o'clock, P. M., the assembly was called to order by Elder James H. Hart. A hymn was then sung by the congregation. Prayer by Elder Benjamin Berry.

Songs, recitations, addresses, anthems, toasts, &c., were then executed in the following order:

Song—"Israel is Free," by Thos. Bottrall.

Recitation—"Assassination of Joseph and Hyrum," by Fanny McLean.

It having been announced by President E. Snow that the Hon. George A. Smith would fill up considerable of the programme, he was called upon at this stage of the entertainment to deliver an address. He was greeted by the audience with the warmest tokens of respect, and was listened to with the greatest interest. The discourse was characteristic of the speaker, and may not be inaptly described as a humorous epitome of useful knowledge.

Next in order was a—

Song—"I'm a Saint," by J. H. Hart.

Song and Chorus—"Ellen Bayne," by A. Sprowle and company.

Music—By the Band.

Song—"Beautiful Zion," by Thos. Bottrall.

Recitation—"Downfall of Babylon," by Jas. Stevenson.

Dialogue—"Cassius and Brutus," by Messrs. Weston and Sprowle.

A number of toasts were then read, from which we extract the following.

Brigham Young, the Lion of the Lord—His friends love him, his enemies fear him, and the hosts of Heaven rejoice over him; his Councillors, too, good men and true—find a better trio if you can.—EDWARD L. PAGE.

Brother George A. Smith—A sample of the right kind of stock; they don't grow on every tree—"cause why"—they ain't able to bear them. I know him of old; he is one of those men that once seen is never forgotten. If you don't believe it, look at him. May his shadow never grow less.—Idem.

The Colonel here arose, and, in response to the above, said: "Ladies and gentlemen, the tree that bore me is "Mormonism," and is able to bare millions more of the same sort."

The "Snow" from the Mountains—Always refreshing, let the temperature around be what it may; don't lose a bit of it. Though the Sun of Righteousness pours its rays upon it, its volume is not lessened—Idem.

The Daughters of Zion—Their gentle ministrations of kindness, self-sacrificing devotion, and patient endurance are no where more highly appreciated than in the Kingdom of God—may the Lord bless them, and the brethren cherish them, and do the will of the Father concerning them.—Idem.

Duett—"My Mother's Magpie," by Mr. and Mrs. Field.

Recitation—"Cathleen O'More," by Thos. Bradshaw.

Song—"The Indian's Complaint," by Elder Palmer.

President Snow, being indisposed, briefly congratulated the audience upon the enjoyment of the evening, and the tokens of happiness everywhere visible around him; and concluded by wishing a continuation of peace and prosperity in the name of the Lord.

Song and Chorus—"Zion For Ever," by A. Sprowle and company.

St. Louis Stake of Zion—A crown of pearls surrounding a great heart—may Israel's God protect them.—Idem.

Anthem—"The Earth is the Lord's and the Fullness Thereof," by the choir.

Elder George A. Smith then delivered a short and appropriate address, in which several amusing anecdotes were interspersed, which convulsed the assembly with successive bursts of laughter, in which the speaker heartily participated.

The hymn, "When Shall We All Meet Again," was then sung by the congregation, which was dismissed at eleven o'clock, P. M., by Elder George A. Smith, and the assembly quietly retired.

Correspondence of Col Thomas Bullock.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 11, 1856.

Dear Bro. Taylor: Excuse me taking the earliest opportunity of writing to you, but I supposed you would be made glad in knowing that Elders Thomas Bullock, Bernard Snow, George Gates, Samuel F. Neslen, John H. Tippits, George Taylor, Samuel Roskelley, Henry Harris, Andrew P. Shumway, Daniel Page, Jr., James W. Stevens and William Bevans, arrived here about 11 o'clock last night on their way to Europe: also Elders Thomas Terry, Isaiah M. Combs, David O. Ridout, William G. Saunders and Orin Lewis to labor under the direction of the Apostles in the United States.

Elder Parley P. Pratt crossed the Missouri River, at Kanesville, on the 31st of Oct., intending to go to Iowa City; he was in good health and spirits, and at the time of our separation at Florence, he blessed the Missionaries for their unremitting attention to him while crossing the plains. I am informed by Elder G. A. Smith that the sketch of our travels was sent to you, so therefore the Saints will have a knowledge of the whereabouts of their friends as we came along from the valley.

Several of the Missionaries intend to visit their friends in the States and rendezvouz in New York the latter part of this month, preparatory to crossing the Ocean.

Sister Taylor was in good health and spirits on the morning of the 10th of Sept., the day I left the blessed city of peace, and I am sorry to say that I have heard the name of the Deity taken in vain, and more swearing, and heard more lascivious talk on the steam boat on the Missouri River the past week, than I have heard in Great Salt Lake county for the past eight years; and I do thank God that the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints make Utah Territory too hot a place for a lewd man or woman to dwell many days, too many of whom, alas! are living in this city. If you would like me to write more full, I will do so. In haste, your brother in the Gospel of Jesus Christ,

THOMAS BULLOCK.

P. S.—Elders Geo. A. Smith and Erastus Snow are well. Elder Smith proposes to preach at the groves to-morrow.

We shall certainly be very much pleased to hear from Elder Bullock at his leisure, and likewise from all the missionaries.—ED.

Arrivals from Utah.

ELDERS NESLEN, TAYLOR AND ROSKELLEY, missionaries from Great Salt Lake City to Europe, arrived in our midst on Wednesday morning, in good health and in buoyant spirits. They purpose leaving for England by the first vessel to Liverpool. They have handed us the following letter:

NEW YORK, Nov. 19, 1856.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.:—Having this morning arrived in New York from Great Salt Lake City, we take the opportunity to address you a few lines. We learn by THE MORMON of last week that Elder Thomas Bullock has posted you on our travels over the Plains, and we believe to St. Louis also. We left St. Louis on the 14th inst., in company with Elders George Gates, Andrew P. Shumway, W. Bevins, and Thomas Terry; the three first named are on missions to Europe; the last was appointed by President E. Snow to labor in the Philadelphia Conference; consequently we left him at Crestline, Ohio, as there he took the Philadelphia route. We left Elders George Gates, A. P. Shumway, and W. Bevins at Springfield, Ohio, to visit the friends of Elder Gates. We have had a long and tedious journey from St. Louis to to this place, via Terra Haute Railroad. In consequence of a break down about fifteen miles from Illinoistown, we were detained considerably longer on the road than we should otherwise have been. Some of the European missionaries were appointed by President E. Snow to labor at St. Louis and the branches around that Stake, among whom are Elders John Tibbetts, Daniel Page, Jun., J. W. Stephens, B. Snow, Thomas Bullock, and others whose names I presently forget, to gather means to proceed on their journey.

We feel well pleased at being so far on our journey, and are glad to meet with a few friends to cheer our hearts, while on our way to preach the Gospel of Salvation to the nations that sit in darkness. There is a vast difference between the political atmosphere of Utah and that of the States; the former takes the side of Peace and Equal Rights, the other goes for Death and Destruction.

With sentiments of great respect we are you brethren in the Covenent of Peace.

SAMUEL ROSKELLEY,
GEORGE TAYLOR,
SAMUEL F. NESLEN.

Loss of the Steamer Superior and Thirty-five Lives.

DETROIT, Nov. 14, 1856.

THE steamer Superior was lost in a storm on Lake Superior on the 29th ult., near Grand Island. Her rudder was carried away, and becoming unmanageable she fell in the trough of the sea, when the water commenced breaking over her, despite the efforts made to prevent it, and extinguishing the fires. She struck on the rocks and went to pieces. Thirty-five persons were lost and sixteen saved.

Correspondence of President P. P. Pratt.

NEAR OSKALOOSA, Iowa, Nov. 10, 1856.

DEAR BRO. TAYLOR: You will doubtless ere this have heard of our arrival on the frontiers of the States, and the particulars of our journey from Salt Lake. I am resting in this place a day or two, and expect to go on to St Louis and perhaps to the eastern cities, being on a short mission to the United States. Of this I will report more particularly at a future time.

The first thing which caught my attention on my arrival here was an editorial in the Brother Jonathan, dated New York, Oct. 25, 1856, headed, "The Mormon Question;" by the reading of which I learned the astounding news, to the effect that the United States, or at least the Brother Jonathan, was in imminent danger of an entire overthrow by the Mormons and Indians of Utah. All would be "robbed," "plundered," and their throats cut, and the United States Government be usurped by that almighty people. Whether the kingdoms of Europe are considered in danger from the same source, their thrones tottering and knees trembling for fear of the Mormons of Utah, Brother Jonathan, either through excitement or neglect, failed to inform us.

Having made the announcement, Brother Jonathan remarks: "It is therefore of the utmost importance that it should be distinctly ascertained in what manner we are going to to treat them, and they are going to treat us, and what will be the best method of befriending them if peaceable citizens, or destroying their power of harming us in case of war."

Perhaps I may be allowed, through your columns, to soothe and calm the nerves of Brother Jonathan a little, by offering my opinion on that "important" subject, and some advice as to how the Utonians intend to treat other citizens of the United States. I they come to Utah as peaceable, law-abiding citizens, they will doubtless be treated well If they commit murder or treason, they will be hung or shot if caught. If they steal, or commit violence or adultery, they will be fined or imprisoned according to law. If the United States, or any of her citizens, make war on Utah, she will consider them as traitors to their country and its institutions, and will defend the Constitution as in duty bound, by shooting or hanging them as far as possible. This answer doubtless solves the one problem which seems to trouble Brother Jonathan.

The next opposes Polygamy on the ground of its being an unnatural State, and remarks, "That if one man is allowed to have twenty wives, one woman will in many cases have twenty husbands; in fact all virtue will be lost, all family ties and training will be set aside, children will not be educated or provided for by their parents, and society in Utah must relapse into a kind of barbarous monarchy subsisting chiefly upon depredations."

Here again we would gladly calm the fears of poor "Brother Jonathan," by informing him that the people of Utah have Laws, and abide by them. If either sex should break the Laws of virtue on the marriage ties they will render themselves liable to the penalty of the Laws of both God and man, and will have to abide the consequences. And as to "depredations," we have Laws, Courts, and prisons sufficient for the few who chose to try this manner of obtaining a living.

After almost dispairing, "Br. Jonathan" finally gathers some hope in regard to the dangers to be anticipated from the "Mormons." He thinks that a Railroad would facilitate the introduction of troops and munitions of war into Utah, and would also be the means of introducing "Civilization," and the intercourse of wiser and better men on a safe and independent footing.

We say success to the Railroad, and would respectfully suggest that one hundred millions of dollars, the probable cost of the road, would be a philanthropic, a liberal, and benevolent expenditure, wisely applied when we consider the great and benevolent object in view, namely, the introduction of "Civilization," etc., into Utah. In the meantime, while the Railroad question is pending, we would recommend "Brother Jonathan" to the attention and kindness of some benevolent institution, and suggest that some impregnable asylum be erected for him, where he may consider himself safe in case the Mormons of Utah should happen to overthrow the poor, unprepared people of the United States, who, as represented by him, have no efficient means of defence. Yours truly, P. P. PRATT.

We have only space left to permit us to say President Pratt's communications to THE MORMON will be warmly received.—[ED.

COMMUNICATED.

YES, Utah! Utah and the Mormons—there is news from Deseret! "Our Correspondent" has written—we have news—yes, "The Deseret News" "has come to hand, from which we extract the following"—of course we do, Greeley extracts—Bennett extracts—the Express extracts, all print news from Utah—why shouldn't they? Everybody reads news from Utah—why not print it?

There is a war in Nicaragua!—who cares—there is a horrible earthquake in Russia!—what of it—there is talk of war between France and England!—bosh! Our papers are filled with bloodshed and prostitution—fires, tempests, wrecks, collisions, robberies, seductions, murders, perjuries, broken banks, broken merchants, and broken heads, shootings, counterfeits, cheats, thefts and debaucheries. Never mind all that—what about "Bro. Brigham" and "the Mormons!" The people must hear what the Mormons are doing—they must know what "Bro. Brigham" said; they must comment on it.

They must hear about polygamy and "ninety wives"—and the papers must print it. Greeley must philosophize—Bennett must twaddle—and the little "dog Noble" must bark. For a moment the country is forsaken and the United States—this glorious Repub-

QUINCY, Adam's Co., Ill., Oct. 31, 1856.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE:—Beloved Brother,—Not forgetting our past pleasant associations in the ministry in England, and latterly on the briny deep, and thinking you might be pleased to learn of my whereabouts, I feel to write to you at this time.

For some time after I arrived here I had a struggle to get along on account of the severe cold weather. I was six weeks before I could find employment, but being determined to make head way I worked away at one thing and another till I worked myself into a comfortable situation as house carpenter in Barnum's Hotel, for good wages and board. I had successively worked as a woodsawer, millwright, getting machinery out of a sunken steamboat, horsecollar stuffer, morning news carrier, candy stall keeper, lamplighter, evening news carrier, soda water bottle washer, wheelbarrow maker, and signboard painter. The jobs did not last long, and I was one or two weeks out of work between them. However, as I had long learnt to shift about, I felt equal to the emergency—and felt no way daunted. At last I was in excellent work for the winter, and began to calculate great things; but before I had been there two weeks, I was called upon to drop tools, and go forth and build up the Saints in their most holy faith, and, if possible, to scrap the incrustation of Gentilism of some Mormon "fossils," and direct them Zionward. At the St. Louis October Conference I was appointed a travelling Elder in that Stake, and in that capacity am here at the present moment.

I still feel deeply interested in this Latter-Day Work, for I know there are associated with it the principles, ordinances, and covenants of eternal lives and dominions. As a man, I feel that I would rather labor with my hands for the support of my family and help to sustain the Church, but as an Elder in Israel, when the interests of the Church require me to lay aside my private interests, and go forth to travel among my brethren and sisters, to give them comfort, and instruct them as far as my experience and ability may qualify me, I am on hand to do so.

Elder Samuel Smith, son of Samuel H. Smith, who is brother to the Prophet Joseph Smith, accompanies me in my travels. He is a good young man, and an excellent and an agreeable companion.

We have a small Branch of the Church in Quincy. President Erastus Snow and the Hon. George A. Smith favored this Branch with a visit on the 29th ult. There was a general assembly of the Saints at the Two Mile House, kept by Elder Edward L. Page, to enjoy a social recreation and pic-nic. As the omnibus, containing the illustrious visitors and Saints, was seen nearing the house, Elder Page ran up a white flag, bearing a star and the words "L'Etoile Du Deseret." We found a table tastefully spread with every variety of viands, provided by the sisters with an eye single to the comfort and delight of the inner man. The instructions of Brothers George A. Smith and Erastus Snow were certainly apropos, and must exert a most beneficial effect. It was a refreshing season and one long to be remembered.

There are a great number of "fossil Mormons" in this part of the country, who have been undergoing more or less another formation, through the action of elements around, for the last fifteen or twenty years. They generally receive us kindly and administer to our wants. They speak of happy days that have been, but their long catalogue of official weaknesses, the revelations, dreams and visions they have received in the way of appointments, and the dreary account of ups and downs, makes the heart grow sick and long to breathe a purer atmosphere.

Sister Spiller is at St. Louis, and by her letter just received I learn that she is doing first-rate as a miliner, dressmaker and embroiderer. I find an excellent wife no barrier to executing any duty the Church requires of me. I will not further trespass upon your time. I am well in health. Elder Samuel Smith joins with me in love to you and Sister Stenhouse and your interesting family, together with the brethren in the office.

Affectionately yours,

GEORGE F. A. SPILLER.

[Elder Spiller had often heard in England of doing anything and everything in the States in order to get the "almighty" dollar and go further west. His short sojourn at St. Louis was certainly well marked with that variety, and speaks well for perseverance. If outsiders want to know the secret of Mormon success, whether in preaching or working, we may tell them that the Elders never say, "can't do it."—ED.]

DIVINITY, GEOMETRY, AND LANGUAGE.—At the scientific meeting at Albany, Prof. Gibson remarked upon a curious connection of geometry and language. They are a line, an angle and a circle—thus: I, A, O. In almost all languages these letters are used in the word expressing Divinity. In Hebrew IOA is a name of Divinity. Greek AIO, the root of aionis, "the eternal." In Hindoo, Japanese, and other Asiatic tongues, the same letters occur in Manitou, the word for Spirit. These letters in the old Greek or Phœnician alphabet, are the first, last, and middle letters, signifying the beginning, middle, and end—Alpha, Iota, and Omega.

FOR THE MORMON.

Obedience and Union.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

How often is the most important truth, though worthy to be received through the medium of our intellect, and be engraved on the tablets of our most retentive memory, rejected by the transient flow of passion and narrow-contractedness, leaving no other trace on our unsettled minds than that of an arrow penetrating the air! How little do we give heed to those lessons contained in the great book of Nature, which is unfolded unto us like an emblematic picture, wherein everything is sealed with the signet of invisible Fate.

Two of the most momentous principles by which the great machinery of the Universe is kept in eternal order and harmony, are Obedience and Union. On contemplating the all-surrounding Heaven, with its millions of brilliant luminaries, all revolving in silent majesty in elliptical spheres, the great Elohiem, who, although not seen himself, clothes everything in beautiful colors, whose rays of intelligence, if not seen by the eye, are felt by the heart, seems to me to reverberate through the immeasurable amplitudes of the Universe, saying, "Ye creations of my hand, be obedient and united, and I will lead you to the acme of celestial happiness." I do not want to trace those principles in the transcendent, in that which is beyond my grasp; I can realize them in proportion to my capacities through the phenomenal or outward world, and connect them with the consciousness of my existence. I have been ushered into this existence for the purpose of performing certain duties, of improving my mind, and preparing myself for a future life. On examining my position, I feel I can only by Obedience to my parents and guardians, become a connecting link in the endless chain of intelligence. Yes! Obedience and Union are the necessary requisites of every well-regulated family-compact.

When two beings are united by the ties of true affection based on the beauty of the mind, so that there is a congeniality of sentiments, and their virtue calls forth a mutual esteem and admiration, then the wife will be obedient to her husband, the tender offspring will follow the example of his parents. They will feel one and be happy, because where there is Obedience, there is Union, and where there is Union, there is order, peace and happiness. But those principles will only be practised, if we try to realize our position, and say to ourselves, we are here for a certain purpose, we have to be the necessary links of that great chain, that commences from the intellectual developement of the first man, and leads into all eternity.

Is every man aware of his being a person that is to say, does he know that he is an intelligent agent, free and independent of the mechanism of nature, but at the same time a being, who is subject to laws peculiar to its intellectual and physical esse (esse, a philosophical technical term, is derived from the Latin, signifying the being, nature of a thing.) No! if he did, he would understand that Obedience and Union are the fundamental laws of the great, invisible, generalizing powers; that Obedience is the origin of Union; that order is the natural consequence; and that by such means we learn to discharge our duties before God and man. Obedience and Union are not only the necessary requisites of a family compact, but also of society at large. Rulers and governors may introduce systems for an improvement and prosperity of the human family; they will, however, never accomplish their object without Obedience and Union. It is actually necessary that every individual should know the sphere of his operations, that he understand his position in life and the duties connected with the same, and then he will feel the importance of being obedient to the counsels of wise, inspired mentors.

It is in the fields of Obedience and Union, that discipline and order can find a congenial soil, wherein to sow the sacred institutions emanating from the fountain of eternal truth, and thus bring forth the beautiful fruits of personal and social virtues, by which the young ideas like rising shoots are made to spread under the watchful care of strict morals, and are confined to the harmonious channel of generous, exalting sentiments. Wayward passions will be under subjection; order and happiness will display their graces, breathing their sweets and expanding their blossoms; the heart will be enlarged, inasmuch as the tender regards of man will no longer be confined to a single object, but extend themselves into a generous interest for mankind, viz., philantrophy; and thus life will become honorable, useful and endearing.

But without Obedience, disorder and confusion grow like thorns and thistles; the ties of relationship and society become dissolved; the gates to the fields of intelligence are closed, and man is left to the propensities of his will; unruly appetites will bring forth all manner of revolting irregularities; unbridled lusts, like swarms of loathsome vermin, will infect every rising thought, and make the imagination foul.

May Obedience and Union diffuse their gentle and penetrating rays through all our intellectual powers, that our minds be under the constant tutelage of holy discipline, and thereby realize the blessings of peace, order and happiness.

NOW.—"Now" is the constant syllable ticking from the clock of Time. "Now" is the watchword of the wise. "Now" is on the banner of the prudent. Let us keep this little word always in our mind; and whenever anything presents itself to us in the shape of work, whether mental or physichal, we should do it with all our might, remembering that "Now" is the only time for us. It is indeed a sorry way to get through the world, by putting off till to-morrow, saying, "Then" I will do it. No! this will never answer. "Now" is ours; "then" may never be.

THERE is a man out west so dirty that the assessors put him down as real estate.

Complimentary to Russia.

From the London Morning Post, Nov. 3.

ONE could have hoped that, with a new Czar and the return of peace, a change would have come over the spirit of Russian diplomacy, and that, taught by disaster, the Emperor Alexander would have appeared a sadder and a wiser sovereign. But adversity, it appears, is without its "sweet uses" for kingly or imperial heads. The elder Bourbons, we know, "learned nothing and forgot nothing;" and it may be said of the House of Romanoff, that the son, with the benefit of increased experience, is no wiser as a sovereign, if he be any better as a man, than his imperial father, Nicholas.

A check, however, was given to the aggressions of Russia by the treaty signed between England and France in 1854, and now that, owing to the effect of that treaty, the schemes of Peter and his successors, for the possession and capture of Constantinople, are thwarted, the tactics of the Russian Cabnet have completely changed. Well aware that it was only by the union of England and France Constantinople was saved, the chief object of Russia now is to sow distrust between the two great Western Powers, and so to sever an alliance which stands in the way of future aggression. To achieve this grand object no expenditure of fraud, of treachery, of lying, of cajolery, of money, or of Michiavelism, will be spared. Millions and millions of silver roubles have been, and will be, expended in every quarter of Europe, and in some quarters out of Europe—to wit, America and Africa; nor will a first or a second failure deter a cabinet which speculates so largely on the credulity and sordidness of mankind. There have been for months, and are now, scores of secret Russian agents at work in all the courts of Germany, in Spain, at Naples, in Sardinia in Turkey, in the Danubian Principalties, in Greece, in America; and in Egypt, announcing that the alliance between France and England in dissolving, if not actually dissolved; and obscurely hinting that the unnatural union must give place to a more perfect understanding between France and Russia.

In Paris, and throughout France, Russian agents, male and female, from Madame de Lieven downwards, pursue a different species of tactics. There they are instructed to insinuate doubts of the fidelity and loyalty of England—to preach against English cupidity and sordidness, and that restless mercantile spirit so near akin to revolution. In England, on the contrary, Russian agents—and there are many in London, Manchester, and Ireland—declaim against the fickleness and perfidy of France, endeavor to revive the ancient anti-Gallican mania, and seek to rekindle the ancient rivalry and the extinct old anti-Gallican spirit. There are three or four sections of secret agents, spies, and mouchards at work, apparently with views altogether different; but yet the object of each section, or of the heads that guide each section, is only to cause first distrust and jealousy, and ultimately a coolness between two powers now happily in firm alliance—England and France. To persons who have not studied Russian history, or watched the secret diplomacy of Russia, the thing we allude to may seem incredible, or even impossible; but to those who are aware that Russia forced an ultra monarchic interference in Spain at the very moment she was openly exciting a democratic revolt in Greece, the policy now pursued will appear in accordance with the traditions and events from 1823 to 1827–8.

Though defeated in three battles, Russia still declares she is not vanquished, and still adheres to her traditional system of future aggrandisement. To the success of this system, however, disunion between France and England is an indispensable preliminary. No effort then, we repeat, will be left untried to sever a union which is an impediment to Russian success. Russia, to achieve her ends, will not scruple to create confusion or discontent either in France or in England. In France she will unhesitatingly make use of Carlists, Olreanists, republicans, socialists, or even communists, to subserve her purposes; and in England or in Ireland she will address herself with equal readiness to chartists or to repealers.

Failing in domestic intrigues in either of these civilized countries, there remains on the cards the game of exciting discontent in the British colonies in India, in Persia, or in Egypt, where the interests of France and England are supposed to be at variance, and the still more desperate remedy of exciting democratic revolution in Central and Northern Italy simultaneously with absolutism in the kingdom of the Two Sicilies and Spain. Any one of these objects may be attempted separately, or all of them conjointly, if the scheme of disuniting the Western Powers cannot be otherwise accomplished. Probaby certain preparatory measures also have been previously arranged. For instance, M. Boutenieff and his agents at the Porte have been doubtless instructed to sow dissension between the English and French Ambassadors, whilst General Stackelberg, at Turin, M. Kokoschine, at Naples, and M. Benkendorf, at Madrid, have pursued a like course of unworthy chicany. Amidst so many incentives to quarrel, so many provocations to a misunderstanding and a rupture, it would be astonishing, almost miraculous, looking at the weakness and infallibility and self-love of men, if Russia was not in some one instance successful; but we have firm faith in the wisdom of the people of England and France, whose instructed classes see through the Machiavedan policy of the Czar and his Cabinet, and, discerning the dishonest devices, are aware of their dangers.

By some it may be thought that we have dealt rather hardly with the Czar and his Cabinet. But the conduct of Russia in reference to the Isle of Serpents, to Kilta, to Ismail, to Kars, and to the frontier of Bessarabia, has been so discreditable, and in reference to the Bessarabian frontier, so dishonest, that one is entitled to presume any knavery or wickedness of a Power capable of so acting. Russia has not only refused to perform some of the articles of the Treaty of Paris, the ink of which is scarcely yet dry, but has evasively attempted to wriggle out of others of them. But this crafty and unscrupulous Power will fail to profit by her own wrong, and may find to her cost that all attempts to sow disunion between England and France will only serve the more firmly to unite civilized nations against falsehood, fraud and diplomatic trickery.

MAN, though born to a lowly estate, has it in his power to raise himself above the adverses of fortune, he may go forth into the great battle of life and wage successfully the contest against wealth and power, if he is possessed of industry and character; but how different is it with woman, inured to poverty and trial from her earliest years, she cannot go forth into the great world and make her position in society. She is almost wholly dependent upon the circumstances by which she is surrounded. Home is the grand center around which revolves woman's hopes and aspirations, and from which she derives those sentiments and inclinations which give a color to her whole life.

If the scenes of home have been fraught with nothing but misery, she learns to look upon life as a wearisome burden, when her spirits should take their reflex from all that is ennobling and beautiful; and we can readily imagine how one of her pliant, loving, yielding disposition can, under such circumstances, be seduced from the paths of virtue, to follow the seductive beckonings of vice, that lure her from the slough of despond into which she falls in her moments of bitter reflection. If she perchance be beautiful, how much greater the peril; she is continually subjected to the assaults of a world which makes that angelic attribute but an instrument to insure her destruction; it makes her but the more open to "the sneers which partial virtue from the unworthy takes."

Saddening as the reflection is, yet it is nevertheless true that these "painted shames, walking beneath the stars," which we nightly meet in the thoroughfares of this city, are the daughters of the poor; they have toiled on unceasingly for a better day, hoping against hope, until anything that offered a release from the privations to which they have been subjected, has been embraced with a desperation reckless of consequences. The avarice, selfishness, we may say, meanness of man, has crushed out all chance of earning an honest livelihood by her needle, even though she wears herself to a skeleton in her earnest endeavors. Many may think our picture too highly colored, but it is not so; all they have to do is to visit the abodes of the poor, and they will be sadly convinced of its stern reality.

We have no disposition to say a word against the noble efforts of those who use their names and exertions for the temporal and spiritual wants of those who are suffering for both in foreign lands, but it strikes us that the true humanitarian has at home a field for his labors which bears with it a more exceeding weight of glory. If we would talk less of our charity and do more toward the amelioration of the poor and destitute around us, who have not the wherewithal to make home comfortable, how changed would be the condition of the daughters of the poor.—[N. Y. Daily News, Nov. 17.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

The steamship "City of Washington" arrived at Philadelphia on Tuesday afternoon, with advices from England up to the 5th instant. The news by this steamer confirms the reports of previous mails touching the uncertainty of the "entente cordiale" between England and France. The London Morning Post, reputedly Palmerston's mouth-piece, of the 3d instant, handles Russia unsparingly, and charges the young Emperor, his cabinet, ambassadors at foreign courts, and their host of male and female agents, "spies and mouchards" scattered through the nations, with "falsehood, fraud and diplomatic trickery" in corrupting by "millions and millions of silver roubles," "lying" and "cajolery" the minds of everybody with whom they were in contact—all to break up the good understanding between the two nations that fought side by side for her overthrow. The article we allude to is very plain, easy to be understood, well calculated to give offence to Russia, and excite the nerves of "all the world and his wife" who may be afraid of gunpowder. The Neapolitan affair is where it was. The French Ambassador at that court has arrived at Paris. The French squadron at Toulon is taking in munitions of war, and provisions for six months. The British Fleet is formally announced to stay in the Black Sea, till Russia fulfils the Treaty of Paris. England, Turkey and Austria are united in this determination, and are trying to bring France to the same policy while Russia is doing her best to keep Louis from it. The British squadron at the Isle of Serpents had been reinforced. Spanish affairs about the same. An ultimatum has been sent by England to Persia. The Shah persists in his refusal, and the British expedition against him was about to sail. The Persian army was proceeding with the siege of Herat; it was fortifying the environs, of which it had obtained possession, after having defeated the Affghans, six thousand of whom had surrendered.

The London Times Malta correspondent says: Intelligence contines to pour in from the surrounding and more distant countries which felt the earthquake on the night of the 11th and morning of the 12th of October. It seems to have been more sensibly felt in the interior than in the seaport towns of the neighboring Island of Sicily. In Naples the shocks were severe and of long duration, and so likewise in Calabria; but it appears to have generated in Asia Minor or in Syria, as indeed, has been generally the case when phenomena of this nature having any degree of intensity have been felt in Malta; with which countries, rather than with the nearer land of Sicily, Malta in this respect corresponds. At Rhodes the shock was felt at 2.40 a. m., on the 12th, and was so violent that 50 houses and the celebrated tower are reported to have been razed to the ground in the town, and many others seriously injured, while the village of Trianda is in ruins, with a deplorable loss of life. Alexandria also felt it, and in Cairo there have been causalities from falling houses and mosque minarets. The duration of the shock throughout Egypt is reported to have averaged 75 seconds, the time agrees with Malta. The Austrian Lloyd's steamer Adria, though distant fully 50 miles from Rhodes, felt it so severly that all on board thought she had struck on some new submarine formation. The St. Andrew English steamer, bound to Alexandria from Liverpool and Malta, at a distance of 300 miles from this last-mentioned port, got so strained by the shock that she sprung a serious leak, lost one of her masts, and bale goods were pitched into the engine-room from out the hold.

The varied natural phenomena of extreme heat, earthquake, thunder storms, lightning, squalls of wind, heavy rains, and waterspouts in the offing, to which Malta has recently, and within the brief space of a week, been subjected, are unexampled in its annals, and cannot but be attributed to most extensive volcanic and volcanico-galvanic action going on in the bowels of the earth to the eastward, generating currents to the westward of the island.

An eccentric writer in the Malta Mediterraneo thus concludes his article on the weather, after speaking of the earthquake and successive thunder storms and of heavy rains: "The atmosphere, in a word, paid back to Malta, with interest, without funding or capitalization, the heavy loan it had received, also through Malta, of electric fluid from the volcano, just as Malta had restored its own debt on the same account. The sum restored will be invested in the new formations consequent on the suppression of the volcanic action. The residue remaining to Malta will be invested in the winter vegetation and next year's crops."

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE principal subject of interest this last week, is the melancholy accident of the steamship the Lyonnais, and the arrival of a few of her passengers and some of the crew as reported on our first page. The agents here of company to which the Lyonnais belongs, fitted out the steamship Marion with everything requisite to go in search of, and render assistance to any of her passengers who may yet be floating on the wide expanse of waters. Mr. A. Laguierre, second mate of the lost ship, accompanied by the second officer of the same company's ship Vigo, and an experienced surgeon, left this port in the Marion on Sunday with buoyant hopes of being successful. It was the opinion of the officers and men of the Lyonnais, that have reached here; that the vessel that caused the accident to the steamer, must have gone down immediately, as they heard cries of distress for about ten minutes, and afterwards complete silence. It turns out that the supposed lost vessel is the bark Adriatic, which arrived at Gloucester, Mass., on the 4th of Nov., two days after the disaster, the captain of which gave but little notice of the circumstance at the time, and the information has come out now, by mere accident, the captain of the bark reports, that the steamer was seen fifteen or twenty minutes before the collision; that, coupled with the statement of the survivors that the vessel carried no flights, may be the reason for his silence. More news and explanations are expected.

Terrible Fire at Three Rivers.

MONTREAL, Nov. 17, 1856.

The fire at Three Rivers broke out at 4 o'clock, on Saturday morning. A house on Notre Dame street was discovered to be on fire at that hour, and those who were in it had barely time to escape with their lives. The wind blowing from the north, the fire caught the houses on the opposite side, and spread with fearful rapidity, and consumed three sides of the block—in all, about fifty buildings. The estimated value of the property destroyed is £100,000. About one half of the business portion of the town has been laid in ashes. As usual, the scarcity of water tended to this result. For upwards of half an hour not a carter could be found to draw water from the river, which is in the immediate vicinity. The flames spread with fearful rapidity till they were literally exhausted from want of sustenance, and burned everything until they reached the river.

Conviction of Prisoners in Kansas.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 17, 1856.

Our advices from Kansas are to the 10th instant. Last Saturday twenty prisoners were taken at Hickory Point and found guilty of manslaughter. They were sentenced to five years' imprisonment at hard labor.

Burning of the Propeller B. L. Webb.

DETROIT, Nov. 17, 1856.

The Propeller B. L. Webb was destroyed by fire in Whisky Bay, Lake Superior, on the morning of the 12th instant. She had a full cargo and was bound to Moagnette. She was a new vessel and this was her first trip. She cost $50,000 and was insured for $40,000. No lives were lost.

Railroad Accident.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 18, 1856.

An accident occurred on the South Carolina Railroad on Saturday, in consequence of the rail breaking. The cars were thrown off the track, and three of them broken to pieces. A number of persons were injured—two fatally.

Be Firm With Your Children.

Mother. "I haven't got any; it's all gone."

C. "I know there's some in the cupboard; I saw it when you opened the door."

M. "Well, you don't need any now; cake hurts children."

C. "No it don't; (whining) I do want a piece, mother; mayn't I have a piece?"

M. "Be still, I can't get up now, I'm busy."

C. (Crying aloud)—"I want a piece of cake; I want a piece of cake."

M. "Be still, I say; I shan't give you a bit if you don't leave off crying."

C. (Still crying)—"I want a piece of cake, I want a piece of cake."

M. (Rising hastily and reaching a piece)—"There, take that and hold your tongue. Eat it up quick; I hear Ben coming. Now don't tell him you have had any."

(Ben enters.) C. "I've had a piece of cake; you can't have any."

Ben. "Yes, I will; mother, give me a piece."

M. "There, take that; it seems as if I never could keep a bit of anything in the house. You see, sir, (to the child,) if you get anything another time!"

[Another room.] C. "I've had a piece of cake."

Younger sister. "Oh! I want some, too."

C. "Well, you bawl, and mother'll give you a piece. I did."

Clever Trick at a French Fair.

A CLEVER trick was played off a few days ago at the fair of Breaute (Seine Inferieure.) A well dressed gentleman, sauntering about with a valuable gold-headed cane in his hand, was stopped by a wretched-looking man, who dragged himself painfully along on crutches, and piteously implored charity. The gentleman, moved to compassion, generously gave the beggar a piece of silver. "How can you be so foolish," cried a man standing by; "that fellow is an impostor, and no more lame than you are. Just lend me your cane for a minute, and by means of a sound thrashing, I will convince you of the truth of what I say." The gentleman mechanically let the man take the cane; the beggar, throwing down his crutches, ran off as fast as he could. The other, amidst roars of laughter from the bystanders, ran after him, menacing him with the cane; and so they ran a considerable distance, when they turned aside into the town, and were seen no more. The gentleman waited for some time, expecting to see the man return with his cane, but the expectation was in vain; it was then clear that the whole scene had been an affair concerted between a pair of adroit rogues. The gentleman had nothing for it but to walk home, feeling very foolish at having allowed himself to be so victimised.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Time.

SELECTED.

Time is flying, flying, flying,
Oh, how swiftly by!
Like a waterfall that's rushing,
Or a fountain ever gushing—
Hourly, daily, weekly, yearly,
Rapid as the lightning, nearly,
Do the moments fly.

Catch the seconds as they're passing,
Wait not for the hours,
Prize them as a golden treasure—
Use them not in trifling pleasure—
Seconds, minutes—prizing, holding
As you would those buds unfolding
Into choicest flowers.

Act for some important purpose,
Not with selfish zeal;
See humanity is bleeding,
Aid, thy fellow man is needing.
Hundreds, thousands, millions—hear them
Breathing out their woes—go, cheer them,
Seek their wounds to heal.

Soon another year, all freighted
With the deeds of man,
Will be borne to God the giver
And recalled by mortal never!
Oh be wakeful, watchful, ready,
Heart and hand to bless the needy—
Thus fill out thy span.

DISCOURSE

By President Brigham Young,

At the Bowery, Great Salt Lake City, Sept. 21, 1856.

From the Deseret News, Oct. 1, 1856.

Before I sit down, I shall offer a proposition to the congregation; though I will first say a few words concerning our religion, our circumstances, and the circumstances of the brethren and people generally that inhabit these valleys, but more especially of those that have the privilege of assembling at this Tabernacle from Sabbath to Sabbath.

If they will rightly consider their situation, they will believe for themselves that they are in a place, in a country, where they can be saints as well as in any other place there is on the face of this earth.

True, we hear some complaints from those who lose the spirit of their religion, who turn away from us. They think that this people will suffer here. I will give you my feelings upon the subject.

There is not a hardship, there is not a disappointment, there is not a trial, there is not a hard time that comes upon this people in this place, but that I am more thankful for than I am for full granaries.

We have been hunting, during the past twenty-six years, for a place where we could raise saints, not merely wheat, nor corn. Comparatively I care but little about the wheat and corn, though a little is very useful.

It is true that this is a good country for fruits of some kind; as good peaches as can be raised on any soil this soil produces, and also grapes, apples, and so on. But what of all that? The man or the woman that mainly looks after the fruit, after the luxuries of life, good food, fine apparel, and at the same time professes to be a Latter Day Saint, if he does not get that spirit out of his heart it will obtain a perfect victory over him; whereas he is required to obtain a victory over his lusts and over his unwise feelings; and if he does not get rid of that spirit, the quicker he starts east for the States, or west for California, the better.

If we could not raise any fruit, if we could not raise an ear of corn, I should be quite thankful if we could raise the oats and the peas, and make the oat bread and the pea broth, and live on them from year to year.

I say hallelujah, this is a first-rate place to raise saints. [Let the people complain of hard times, complain of their poverty, their poor fare and their hard labor; that wood is scarce, that we have to go far for it, and have to toil so hard to raise our grain; that we lose our stock upon the prairie, that a cow is gone to-day, and an ox was lost last year; that if we turn out our cattle they will stray off, and we shall see them no more.

How would you feel were you in a country where you could not raise stock, except you provided comfortable shelter and an abundance of fodder for them all?

In the country where I was brought up, could you turn out a calf in the fall and have it live through the winter? There never was such a thing done, to my knowledge; and no man ever thought of such a thing as wintering a calf, unless he had a shelter prepared for it almost as warm as the rooms for the children.

I mention these things for the benefit of those here to-day, if any, who think that this is not a good country, and who do not really know whether they wish to stay, or whether we are right or wrong, or whether "Mormonism" is true or false.

I would advise those persons to repent of their sins forthwith, and to try with all their might to get the Spirit of their religion upon them; and if they cannot do that, to take their own course and go where their hearts desire, for doubtless there is some place where you would wish to go.

Those that have the gospel, who enjoy the Spirit of their religion, lie down in peace and wake up full of rejoicing, full of peace, of glory, of faith and thanksgiving; this is the case with all who are full of good works.

We need a reformation in the midst of this people; we need a thorough reform, for I know that very many are in a dozy condition with regard to their religion; I know this as well as I should if you were now to doze and go to sleep before my eyes.]

You are losing the spirit of the gospel, is there any cause for it? No, only that which there is in the world. You have the weakness of human nature to contend with, and you suffer that weakness to decoy you away from the truth, to the side of the adversary; but now it is time to awake, before the time of burning.

Whether the time of burning will be this week or the next, or next year, I do not know that I care; and I do not know that I would ask, if I was sure the Lord would tell me. But I tell you that which I do know, and that is sufficient.

[I do know that the trying day will soon come to you and to me; and ere long we will have to lay down these tabernacles and go into the spirit world. And I do know that as we lie down, so judgement will find us, and that is scriptural; "As the tree falls so it shall lie," or in other words, as death leaves us, so judgement will find us.

I will explain how judgement will be laid to the line. If we all live to the age of man the end thereof will soon be here, and that will burn enough, without anything else; and the present is a day of trial, enough for you and me.

We have got to be rightly prepared to go into the spirit world, in order to become kings. That is, so far as the power of satan is concerned, you and I have got to be free from his power, but we cannot be while we are in the flesh.

Here we shall be perplexed and hunted by him; but when we go into the spirit world there we are masters over the power of satan, and he cannot afflict us any more, and this is enough for me to know.]

Whether the world is going to be burned up within a year, or within a thousand years, does not matter a groat to you and me. We have the words of eternal life, we have the privilege of obtaining glory, immortality, and eternal lives, now will you obtain these blessings?

[Will you spend your lives to obtain a seat in the kingdom of God, or will you lie down and sleep, and go down to hell?

I want all the people to say what they will do, and I know that God wishes all his servants, all his faithful sons and daughters, the men and the women that inhabit this city, to repent of their wickedness, or we will cut them off.

I could give you a logical reason for all the transgressions in this world, for all that are committed in this probationary state, and especially for those committed by men.

There are sins that men commit, for which they cannot receive forgiveness in this world or in that which is to come, and if they had their eyes open to see their true condition, they would be perfectly willing to have their blood spilt upon the ground, that the smoke thereof might ascend to heaven as an offering for their sins, and the smoking incense would atone for their sins, whereas, if such is not the case, they will stick to them and remain upon them in the spirit world.

I know, when you hear my brethren telling about cutting people off from the earth, that you consider it is strong doctrine; but it is to save them, not to destroy them.

Of all the children of Israel that started to pass through the wilderness, none inherited the land which had been promised, except Caleb and Joshua, and what was the reason? It was because of their rebellion and wickedness; and because the Lord had promised Abraham that he would save his seed.

They had to travel to and fro to every point of the compass, and were wasted away, because God was determined to save their spirits. But they could not enter into his rest in the flesh, because of their transgressions, consequently he destroyed them in the wilderness.]

I do know that there are sins committed, of such a nature that if the people did understand the doctrine of salvation, they would tremble because of their situation. And furthermore, I know that there are transgressors, who, if they knew themselves and the only condition upon which they can obtain forgiveness, would beg of their brethren to shed their blood, that the smoke thereof might ascend to God as an offering to appease the wrath that is kindled against them, and that the law might have its course. I will say further; I have had men come to me and offer their lives to atone for their sins.

It is true that the blood of the Son of God was shed for sins through the fall and those committed by men, yet men can commit sins which it can never remit. As it was in ancient days, so it is in our day; and though the principles are taught publicly from this stand, still the people do not understand them; yet the law is precisely the same. There are sins that can be atoned for by an offering upon an altar as in ancient days; and there are sins that the blood of a lamb, of a calf, or of turtle doves, cannot remit, but they must be atoned for by the blood of the man. That is the reason why men talk to you as they do from this stand; they understand the doctrine and throw out a few words about it. You have been taught that doctrine, but you do not understand it.

[It is our desire to be prepared for a celestial seat with our Father in heaven. It was observed by Bro. Grant that we have not seen God, that we cannot converse with him; and it is true that men in their sins do not know much about God. When you hear a man pour out eternal things, how well you feel, to what a nearness you seem to be brought with God. What a delight it was to hear Bro. Joseph talk upon the great principles of eternity; he would bring them down to the capacity of a child, he would unite heaven with earth, and this is the beauty of our religion.

When it was mentioned this morning about seeing God, about what kind of a being he was, and how we could see and measurably understand him, I thought I would tell you. If we could see our Heavenly Father we should see a being similar to our earthly parent, with this difference, our father in heaven is exalted and glorified. He has received his thrones, his principalities and powers, and he sits as a governor, as a monarch, and overrules kingdoms, thrones, and dominions that have been bequeathed to him, and such as we anticipate receiving. While he was in the flesh, as we are, he was as we are. But it is now written of him that our God is as a consuming fire, that he dwells in everlasting burnings, and this is why sin cannot be where he is.

There are principles that will endure through all eternity, and no fire can obliterate them from existence. They are those principles that are pure, and fire is made typical use of to show the glory and purity of the Gods, and of all perfect beings. God is the Father of our spirits; he begat them and has sent them here to receive tabernacles, and to prove whether we will honor them. If we do, then our tabernacles will be exalted: but if we do not, we shall be destroyed; one of the two—dissolution or life. The second death will decompose all tabernacles over whom it gains the ascendancy; and this is the effect of the second death, the tabernacles go back to their native element.

We are of the earth, earthy; and our Father is heavenly and pure. But we will be glorified and purified, if we obey our brethren and the teachings which are given.

When you see celestial beings you will see men and women, but you will see those beings clothed upon with robes of celestial purity. We cannot bear the presence of our Father now; and we are placed at a distance to prove whether we will honor these tabernacles, whether we will be obedient and prepare ourselves to live in the glory of the light, privileges and blessings of celestial beings. We could not have the glory and the light without first knowing the contrast. Do you comprehend that we could have no exaltation, without first learning by contrast?

When you are prepared to see our Father, you will see a being with whom you have long been acquainted, and he will receive you into his arms, and you will be ready to fall into his embrace and kiss him, as you would your fathers and friends that have been dead for a score of years, you will be so glad and joyful. Would you not rejoice? When you are qualified and purified, so that you can endure the glory of eternity, so that you can see your father and your friends who have gone behind the vail, you will fall upon their necks and kiss them, as we do an earthly friend that has been long absent from us, and that we have been anxiously desiring to see. This is the people that are and will be permitted to enjoy the society of those happy and exalted beings.]

Now for my proposition; it is more particularly for my sisters, as it is frequently happening that women say that they are unhappy. Men will say, "My wife, though a most excellent woman, has not seen a happy day since I took my second wife;" no not a happy day for a year," says one; and another has not seen a happy day for five years. It is said that women are tied down and abused: that they are misused and have not the liberty they ought to have; that many of them are wading through a perfect flood of tears, because of the conduct of some men, together with their own folly.

I wish my own women to understand that what I am going to say is for them as well as others, and I want those who are here to tell their sisters, yes, all the women of this community, and then write it back to the States, and do as you please with it. I am going to give you from this time to the 6th day of October next, for reflection, that you may determine whether you wish to stay with your husbands or not, and then I am going to set every women at liberty and say to them, now go your way, my women with the rest, go your way. And my wives have got to do one of two things; either round up their shoulders to endure the afflictions of this world and live their religion, or they may leave, for I will not have them about me. I will go into heaven alone rather than have scratching and fighting around me. I will set all at liberty. "What, first wife too?" Yes, I will liberate you all.

I know what my women will say; they will say, "You can have as many women as you please, Brigham." But I want to go somewhere and do something to get rid of the whiners; I do not want them to receive a part of the truth and spurn the rest out of doors.

I wish my women, and Bro. Kimball's and Bro. Grant's to leave, and every woman in this Territory, or else say in their hearts that they will embrace the gospel—the whole of it. Tell the gentiles that I will free every woman in this Territory at our next conference. "What, the first wife too?" Yes, there shall not be one held in bondage, all shall be set free. And then let the father be the head of the family, the master of his own household; and let him treat them as an angel would treat them; and let the wives and the children say amen to what he says, and be subject to his dictates, instead of their dictating the man, instead of their trying to govern him.

No doubt some are thinking, "I wish Bro. Brigham would say what would become of the children." I will tell you what my feelings are; I will let my wives take the children, and I have property enough to support them, and can educate them and then give them a good fortune, and I can take a fresh start.

I do not desire to keep a particle of my property, except enough to protect me from a state of nudity. [And I would say, wives you are welcome to the children, only do not teach them iniquity; for if you do, I will send an Elder, or come myself, to teach them the gospel. You teach them life and salvation, or I will send Elders to instruct them.

Let every man thus treat his wives, keeping raiment enough to clothe his body; and say to your wives, "take all that I have and be set at liberty; but if you stay with me you shall comply with the law of God, and that too without any murmuring and whining. You must fulfill the law of God in every respect, and round up your shoulders to walk up to the mark without any grunting."]

Now recollect that two weeks from to-morrow I am going to set you at liberty. But the first wife will say, "It is hard, for I have lived with my husband twenty years, or thirty and have raised a family of children for him and it is a great trial to me for him to have more women;" then I say it is time that you gave him up to other women who will bear children. If my wife had borne me all the children that she ever would bare, the celestial law would teach me to take young women that would have children.

Do you understand this? I have told you many times that there are multitudes of pure and holy spirits waiting to take tabernacles, now what is our duty?—to prepare tabernacles for them to take a course that will not tend to drive those spirits into the families of the wicked, where they will be trained in wickedness, debauchery and every species of crime. It is the duty of every righteous man and every woman to prepare tabernacles for all the spirits they can; hence if my women leave I will go and search up others who will abide the celestial law, and let all I now have go where they please; though I will send the gospel to them.

This is the reason why the doctrine of plurality of wives was revealed, that the noble spirits which are waiting for tabernacles might be brought forth.

If the men of the world were right, or if they were anywhere near right, there might not be the necessity which there now is. But they are wholly given up to idolatry, and to all manner of wickedness.

Do I think that my children will be damned? No, I do not, for I am going to fight the devil until I save them all; I have got my sword ready, and it is a two-edged one. I have not a fear about that, for I would almost be ashamed of my body if it would beget a child that would not abide the law of God, though I may have some unruly children.

I am going to ask you a good many things, and to begin with I will ask, what is your prayer? Do you not ask for the righteous to increase, while the unrighteous shall decrease and dwindle away? Yes, that is the prayer of every person that prays at all. The Methodists pray for it, the Baptists pray for it, and the Church of England and all the reformers, the Shaking Quakers not excepted. And if the women belonging to this Church will turn Shaking Quakers, I think their sorrows will soon be at an end.

Sisters, I am not joking, I do not throw out my proposition to banter your feelings, to see whether you will leave your husbands, all or any of you. But I do know that there is no cessation to the everlasting whinings of many of the women in this Territory; I am satisfied that this is the case. And if the women will turn from the commandments of God and continue to despise the order of heaven, I will pray that the curse of the Almighty may be close to their heels, and that it may be following them all the day long. And those that enter into it and are faithful; I will promise them that they shall be queens in heaven, and rulers to all eternity.

"But," says one, "I want to have my paradise now." And says another, "I did think I should be in paradise if I was sealed to Bro. Brigham, and I thought I should be happy when I became his wife, or Bro. Heber's. I loved you so much that I thought I was going to have a heaven right off, right here on the spot."

What a curious doctrine it is, that we are preparing to enjoy! The only heaven for you is that which you make yourselves. My heaven is here—[laying his hand upon his heart]. I carry it with me. When do I expect it in its perfection? When I come up in the resurrection; then I shall have it, and not till then.

[But now we have got to fight the good fight of faith, sword in hand, as much so as men have when they go to battle; and it is one continual warfare from morning to evening, with sword in hand. This is my duty, and this is my life.]

But the women come and say, "Really, Bro. John and Bro. William, I thought you were going to make a heaven for me," and they get into trouble because a heaven is not made for them by the men, even though agency is upon women as well as men. True there is a curse upon the women that is not upon the man, namely, that "her whole affections shall be towards her husband," and what is the next? "He shall rule over you."

But how is it now? Your desire is to your husband, but you strive to rule over him, whereas the man should rule over you.

Some may ask whether that is the case with me; go to my house and live, and then you will learn that I am very kind, but know how to rule.

If I had only wise men to talk to, there would be no necessity for my saying what I am going to say. Many and many an elder knows no better than to go home and abuse as good a woman as dwells upon this earth, because of what I have said this afternoon. Are you, who act in that way, fit to have a family? No, you are not, and never will be, until you get good common sense.

Then you can go to work and magnify your callings; and you can do the best you know how; and on that ground I will promise you salvation, but upon no other principle.

If I were talking to a people that understood themselves and the doctrine of the holy gospel, there would be no necessity for saying this, because you would understand. But many have been (what shall I say? pardon me brethren,) hen-pecked so much that they do not know the place of either man or woman; they abuse and rule a good woman with an iron hand. With them it is as Solomon said; "Bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." You may talk to them about their duties, about what is required of them, and still they are fools and will continue to be.

Prepare yourselves for two weeks from to-morrow; and I will tell you now that if you tarry with your husbands, after I have set you free, you must bow down to it and submit yourselves to the celestial law. You may go where you please, after two weeks from to-morrow; but remember that I will not hear any more of this whining.

In the midst of all my harsh sayings, shall I say chastisements?—I am disposed in my heart to bless this people; and I do bless you in the name of Jesus Christ: Amen.

Marriage and Divorce in California.

Advice to Ladies.

San Francisco Correspondence of the N. O. Picayune

By reference to the law columns of our journals, you will perceive that we are in, on an average, for four divorces every day. And what is not a little singular is, that the application generally comes from the weaker vessel. Perhaps you will get your ears pulled for publishing it, but I must in all fairness say the root of the evil is that women are naturally a little too fond of admiration. Here, in this city, we have at least seven men to one woman, and in the interior the disproportion is much larger. The consequence is that, as in the case of all scarce commodities, the article commands more than its intrinsic value. "It is a good deal sought after," as the quotations sometimes run on a popular railroad stock.

The feminine is quickly caged; the husband is in exstacies for about a fortnight, but not quite so exalted the succeeding two weeks. Her forty other lovers, not easily finding another unappropriated piece of dimity to suit their disappointment, make friendly calls upon the lost Pleiade, and by exceeding sympathy with her at the coolness of her husband, win her regard, and then their attentions are so much more delicate than those of her lord, that the poor, weak thing finds she has committed a great error in her choice, especially if the new flame is rich and generous, and the old one rather plain and economical. An application for divorce is the result.

Hundreds have no other excuse to offer in making the application, than "uncongenial dispositions," and dislike. The process is the simplest imaginable. A lawyer with an easy conscience is engaged—most San Francisco lawyers have easy consciences when they have any—who receives the fee from the new lover. A referee is then hunted up by the lawyer, who agrees to decide according to the lady's wishes for a portion of the fee. The judge of course refers the application as requested. The referee hands his report into court, where it is often passed upon without a word of open testimony—and, in nine cases out of ten, favorably. The lady is then ready to be married again—and, having lost all delicacy by the process she has gone through, is ready to run away with the next lover without a divorce.

My advice to weak-headed ladies in the Atlantic States is, not to come to California to get married—and not to come after they are married; if they are pretty "and interesting," they are much safer anchored in some snug harbor in the Atlantic than in the open roadsteads among the shoals and breakers of the Pacific.

But for the encouragement of those who have determined to come, I will quote from the Bulletin the following advertisement. If a plain cook, thirty-five years of age, has to give bonds not to marry within six months, it stands to reason that a tender little chicken of about half that age would stand no chance at all of pining away for lack of a husband up at Rabbit Creek:

"Wanted.—A single female, from twenty to thirty-five years of age, to go to Rabbit Creek, Sierra county, to do plain cooking and general housework in a genteel family, and agrees not to marry within six months. Wages $50 per month. Expenses paid. None need apply unless well qualified. Address A. C., at this office, or 117 Merchant street."

N. B.—Your correspondent is a married man, but his wife doesn't live in California.

Arrival of French Refugees.

There arrived here on Friday night last, on board of the bark Amazon, Capt. Kirwin, nine Frenchmen, who had been transported from their native land for political offences, and who escaped from Cayenne, one of the islands of French Guiana. The manner of their escape was both novel and dangerous, the mode of conveyance from the island being on a raft constructed by themselves, and made of drift wood. After a perilous voyage of five days they reached Demerara, and from thence were brought to this port by the bark above stated, and were taken charge of by the French Benevolent Society Strangers' Home, on High street, near Watson, and Mr. Muirhead, the Superintendent, paid every attention to their comfort and convenience. During Sunday they were visited by the French and English Consuls, and also by a large number of our French citizens, to whom they communicated freely all the facts relating to their escape and suffering, speaking very highly of the kindness extended to them by the officers of the Amazon.

They left Baltimore yesterday afternoon for New York, where they have friends, and will be able to obtain employment. Their offences are said to have been entirely of a political character, and are not such as would warrant their extradition under the treaty with France, which does not include offences of that character. They were in good spirits at their success in reaching this country, and were received with great warmth and cordiality by their countrymen, who furnished them with quarters and means to proceed to New York.—[Baltimore American, Nov. 25.

The U. S. Commissioner of Patents has received a communication from our Consul at Genoa, in reference to the production of Cotton in Italy. The writer says that none is cultivated in that section of the country, nor does, he think, in any other, although the soil, climate and seasons, in many places, might suit it very well. The importation of Cotton from the United States into Genoa, is increasing in proportion to the facilities afforded by railroads for its introduction into the interior of Italy, Switzerland, &c. From the 1st January to the 31st of December, 1855, the direct importation from the United States, in American vessels, was 25,089 bales, averaging over 400 pounds each. From the 1st of January, 1856, to June 20th, making six months, American vessels took into Genoa 30,410 bales. The quantity brought there from India, Egypt, and other countries besides the United States, was not very considerable, and the Consul says that the article was of an inferior quality.

Philosophizing on Gender.—Punch slanderously says: "The sun is called masculine from his supporting and sustaining the moon, and finding her wherewithal to shine away as she does of a night; and from his being obliged to keep such a family of stars besides. The moon is feminine, because she is constantly changing, just as a ship is blown by every wind. The church is feminine because she is married to the State, and Time is masculine because he is trifled with by the ladies."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 29, 1856.

Polygamy, Monogamy, Psychology, Politics and Mormonism.

SOME of our cotemporaries are not a little amused at, and make themselves merry over, two or three discourses of Governor Young, published in the Deseret News and re-published by the New York Herald, from which we presume the others extract. One of those relating to Mormon wives, and which will be found on our first page, is a regular god-send to them. After our political excitement, something was really needed as a change of diet, for after feasting so long a time upon the good and bad doings of the "Know-Nothings," the "Black Republicans," and the "Unterrified Democracy," which had really become stale, lo! and behold! down from the mountains come no less than three sermons of Gov. Young, fresh from the mint, and regular stavers at that. One of them, especially that which treats of Mormon wives, is a rara avis, a regular bonne bouche. Some of our friends enjoy the fun extremely; others, more philosophically inclined, shake their heads and look very wise; whilst the less intelligent froth and foam, rage and rant—talk about "awful pollution," "wonderful depravity," "wretched plague spots," and rave about "Sharpe's Rifles," Big Blunderbusses, Roaring Cannon, Donner und Blitzen. Some of the more pious think it very dreadful, and are surprised that Utah has not been sunk long ago, like the ancient cities of the plains. But doucement, doucement, not quite so fast, gentlemen; keep cool; whatever may be your position and feelings, the Mormons are very oblivious to them, we can assure you; they have become so much accustomed to your smoke, froth and foam, and know how soon they all evaporate, that they pay little attention to it; and as it regards the religious squallers, the Mormons are not half so much afraid of consequences, as the Dutchman was who went to a Methodist meeting, but upon seeing their contortions and fallings down, and hearing their grunts and groans, mistook their contrition for an epidemic, and fled from their midst, crying, "don't go near! don't go near! sie hat die Metodis. Mein Gott! dey ish got de Metodis! dey all pe tod fore morning!" Besides, as these religionists worship a god without body, parts or passions, he is not quite so excitable as are many of his followers down east; he has no eyes, and cannot see; he has no ears, and cannot hear; he has no passions, and cannot be angry; he therefore lets others alone, just as he does the Mormons, being perfectly indifferent to anything that is going on in the mountains—leaving it all to his faithful adherents and devotees, who are so very competent to manage other people's affairs.

We doubt not that our plain, open, honest, straightforward manner of doing business is rather singular and frappant to men whose conduct is so covert, sinuous, and disguised. We are in the habit of calling things by their proper names. Here, if in one or a thousand families they use the most bitter invectives, foul-mouthed abuse, crimination, recrimination and violence, it is simply called a "little flare up" or a "scene;" we should call it cruelty, outrage, bullyism, disgraceful, and think it worthy of public censure. A man, single or married, here, may seduce a young lady, which outrage, in some instances, in these parts would be called gallantry, in others a faux pas, or petit amour. We should call it seduction, and the man a scoundrel and villain who did it; we should look upon him as a viper in society, who, if he had his deserts, would be made shorter by the head. A man here, if he have money, may follow gambling, he may be a drunkard, licentious and debauched; he would simply be called a fast man, but probably very respectable. We should call such a person a whoremaster, a drunkard, gambler, debauchee—a pest to society, and a stink in its nostrils. In regard to our social position, there are a hundred times more domestic brawls here than with us in Utah, in proportion to numbers; but they are given the go-by. We consider that the evils complained of among us are altogether too disgraceful for Saints, and worthy of public censure.

The Mormons, as Mormons, both men and women, believe in the doctrine of polygamy, as an institution of heaven; they believe, or profess to believe in eternal relationships and associations in the celestial Kingdom of God. If women are married to men, they did not marry with their eyes closed, or without a perfect knowledge of what they were doing; they were not coerced, their action was free and voluntary; if, therefore, after entering into this state they find themselves united with spirits which are not congenial, or with ignorant abusive men, what has polygamy to do with it? The same difficulty precisely would exist under monogamy. Mormonism, however, makes provision for their release from this unnatural position, which we consider very right and proper. If, on the other hand, women, after being united to good men, became unreasonable, captious, faultfinding and troublesome, it is proper that they should be relieved, if they wish it, and thus deliver the man from a perpetual annoyance; or if not let them behave themselves with propriety, as becomes saints of the Most High; for the women have just as much hand in entering into these engagements as the men have; they do it, or profess to do it in sincerity and good faith; not only with a reference to time, but to eternity. They are as much bound by covenants as the men are, and if they do not fulfill their duties they are culpable, and render themselves subject to censure; and if they murmur at being bound they certainly cannot object to be loosed. All are not saints who profess to be, either men or women; all do not live up to their profession; but what if they don't? are they therefore to be kept in a state of bondage and vassalage, unnaturally associated with those with whom they have no sympathy of feeling, interest or faith? we do not so judge. And hence a general proclamation of this kind will allow people time to reflect; those who may have been a little fretted and worried, will, if honest and faithful, cleave to their covenants, whilst it will afford all who are really dissatisfied an opportunity of being liberated from a yoke that is troublesome, whilst at the same time the Governor is relieved from much annoyance.

We believe in extending equal and evenhanded justice to every man and woman. In every society, no matter how well organized, there must be, among other evils, many mis-alliances; and to bind such people together without any feasible plan of redress, is, we consider, one of the many evils of monogamy, and is the fruitful source of so much misery, contention, strife, conjugal infidelity, bitterness and woe that are so prevalent in this country.

We have no doubt that among ninety or one hundred thousand inhabitants there must be many women who are dissatisfied and complaining; and such is the manner in which things are conducted in Utah, that every complaint of a serious nature goes to Governor Young, as President of the Church: where there are wrongs it is his prerogative to redress them, and he is appealed to in all such cases. In what position would be a Governor of any of these Eastern States if he had to adjust the ten thousand domestic difficulties that occur daily? He would be placed, we think, in a worse position than Gov. Young is, notwithstanding their professed superior virtue, intelligence and purity. Would such a governor dare proclaim to all the dissatisfied daughters of Eve among the monogamists that they should be at liberty? No; they are bound down, tyranized over, abused and oppressed without relief, protection or sympathy; and thousands of them wander about as living skeletons, brokenhearted from neglect, withered hopes, conjugal infidelity, and all the various forms of brutality and beastiality that prevails, in every form, under our delectable, virtuous, pure, exquisitely refined and delicately constructed system of monogamy. Let a proclamation be made in good faith to all the wives in New York that they could be released from their unfaithful husbands, and there would be such a scattering in Gotham as has not been witnessed since the revolutionary war. Many a house that now boasts a beautiful female, a lovely and affectionate wife, to all appearance contented and happy, would be vacated, and the place left to another.

There is one great psychological fact that most writers seem to have lost sight of, both in regard to matrimony, religion, morality, and politics, viz: that man is an intellectual as well as a physical being; that the human mind cannot be coerced, and that wherever there is any unnatural legal, moral, social, or religious restraint placed upon man, in proportion as that man is intelligent, just in that proportion will he seek an outlet to his pent-up faculties, which, like steam in a boiler, will continue to intensify until it either lifts the safety-valve or explodes; and just in proportion to the restraints placed upon man, bearing in mind the foregoing intelligence, just in that proportion will be those difficulties. We are aware that when man is placed in a state of vassalage, and body, mind, and energy is crushed beneath a tyrant's power, that he is a mere machine, his faculties become paralyzed, his body and mind enervated, he is no longer a man, but a soulless, moving automaton, body and soul being governed by, and subject to, the will or caprice of the operator; but in the absence of this, wherever there are stringent or unnatural restraints, they are invariably conducive of evil rather than good. It is necessary that there should be some relief to pent-up passions of the human soul, and notwithstanding there may be wholesome and healthy laws, and checks, and bounds, yet there needs, as in water, steam, air, and all the works of nature and science, some relief. We have our sluice-ways and safety-valves as escapements for the pent-up water or steam, vents for air, ducts and channels for the human system, drains for our cities, &c.; and as in the physical world so in the social and body politic, we need some provisions as outlets or escapements for many of the social evils of life, other than the bare dead letter of the law which says, "Do this and live," "do that and die." Nowhere is this principle more fully developed than it is in France and in many parts of Germany. The laws in relation to matrimony are very stringent in both of these countries; in the former, placing the alliance of their children almost exclusively under the direction of their parents; in the latter, under both parents and priesthood. The consequence is that all sorts of unnatural alliances take place, through property and other considerations on the one side, and utter recklessness on the other, in the shape of unnatural, illegitimate, and almost unrestrained sexual intercourse. To such an extent is this carried on in many parts of France and Germany that one-half of the children are illegitimate. We believe in "breaking off every yoke, and in letting the oppressed go free," and when men and women get unnaturally and unhappily united they ought to be liberated from their thraldom.

Again, psychologically speaking, for men to act in good faith, either morally, religiously, or politically, the mind must comprehend the true state of affairs and the judgment must be convinced of the propriety of the step to be taken; the action will then be free and voluntary: in the absence of this, disorder and confusion must necessarily ensue. If you can convince a man that virtue and chastity are the most conducive to his happiness and comfort, then, if he has the moral fortitude to resist temptation and overcome his lusts, he will follow your advice from principle; the inducement offered may either be worldly prosperity, health, wealth, fame, enjoyment, the love of God, the prospect of earthly or heavenly exaltation, or any exalting, ennobling, or purifying object. If he regards not virtue, as a principle, then, wholesome laws, placed for the protection of a community, are necessary for his restriction, and the protection of his fellow-beings. These laws ought simply to be made for the wrong, or "evil doer," and not for the oppression of the good and virtuous; they ought to protect innocence and virtue from wrong and outrage; but when laws are made to bind the will and coerce the action of intelligent men; when it is sought by unnatural laws to fetter and manacle the mind and action of the good and virtuous, they will burst from such restraints, and proclaim themselves free. A want of intelligence, sincerity, honesty, and truthfulness among politicians in every age has been one of the fruitful sources of the world's disasters, and nowhere is it more signally manifested than in these United States. With the finest country and best political institutions in the world, we are rent, split up, and divided into a thousand fragments. What is the matter? Our Governors, Legislators, Judges, and Politicians do not maintain that high-toned, honorable, honest, straight-forward course which their elevated position in society demands; they pander and truckle to the lowest and basest of human passion, and instead of being looked up to and esteemed as the honorable of the earth, they, in too many instances, dwindle down to mere time-servers, demagogues, sectionalists, and mere party tricksters—a disgrace to their country, their office, and themselves.

Why is it that at the present time all men on one side of a defined geographical line think, or profess to think, one way, and nearly all on the other side think otherwise? Is thought and principle governed by geography? or does interest on the one side, and aggression and fanaticism on the other, govern? If politicians were intelligent, sincere, and honorable, this certainly would not be the case; wisdom would discover the wrongs on both sides of the question, and honesty and prudence adjust them. If, instead of Southern cheveliers and fire-eaters on the one side, and rabid abolitionists and fanatics on the other, each with their respective party papers; if, instead of knock-down bullyism on the one hand and underground railroads on the other, there was enough virtue, honesty, and intelligence to put things right, and men would submit on all sides to sound constitutional principles; if we had men who would calmly and dispassionately investigate matters, and were as earnest and zealous to do right, and as true patriots, to seek the weal of the nation, as they are to fan party fires and to scatter abroad firebrands, arrows, and death, we might be united. Can such a course do good? It is easy to destroy, and if more difficult, it is certainly more patriotic and philanthropic to throw oil on the troubled waters, to seek to save instead of to destroy. If our Constitution does not suit us let us constitutionally mend it; if there can be no union, why, in God's name, separate; but do it as statesmen, not as inebriates, bullies, and madmen.

The very law itself, if improperly used, becomes an engine of oppression in the hands of corrupt administrators; its forms and technicalities being vexatious, annoying, and troublesome. The Mormons have borne the yoke time and time again; they always believed that what others could endure, they could. Others, we find, however, are neither so law-abiding or docile under the mal-administration of law as they are, whatever their professions. The Vigilance Committee of California was the result and legitimate offspring of a corrupt abuse of law. The outrages perpetrated both by the Border Ruffians and the free-soil party, in Kansas, are both the result of the same thing. When Governors, Judges, Magistrates, Sheriffs, Constables, and Jurors become corrupt, it is difficult to obtain justice: hence men violate law, justice, and the Constitution because they cannot obtain justice through the administration of the law, and thus become themselves transgressors of law and the violators of that which they ought to sustain. Those bounds, once outstepped, men give way to their unrestrained passions and break down every barrier; reckless and frantic, they perpetrate every conceivable enormity, and universal discord and confusion exists. How much better it would be in such instances to bring magistrates and officers to an account, to correct the evil in a legitimate way, maintain the supremacy of the law, and administer justice and equity to all. Who is to blame for all those evils? They originate with rulers who, taking advantage of the position they occupy, seek through fraudulent means to aggrandize themselves at the expense of truth, integrity, justice, and honor. For the injured it would be better for them to imitate the example of the Mormons, and seek legal redress for their grievances, and, if failing in this, to possess sufficient patriotism to "bide their time," and endure lesser evils rather than perpetrate greater.

The Mormons have a great many teachers; almost every priest, editor, politician, and scribbler takes upon himself this task voluntarily. Sound philosophy would suggest that if you would teach a man a principle he must be satisfied of your disinterestedness and sincerity as a teacher. Of what use is it for an emperor, king, or ruler to make laws respecting virtue when he is himself revelling in licentiousness? Of what use is it for a politician to talk about patriotism when everybody knows he is after emolument and office? And of what use is it for editors, priests, moralists, religionists, philosophers, and monogamists to blow, swell, foam, and froth about the institutions of Polygamy when they know themselves, and the Mormon Polygamists know, that the institutions of Monogamy are a hundred times more degrading and corrupt than Polygamy is represented to be. Take, par example, the institution of Prostitution, which may fairly be said to be a Christian monogamic institution, and clings to it in all its ramifications; for wheresoever Christianity and Monogamy exist, or wheresoever it is introduced, this disgusting institution also exists, and cleaves to it like the skin to the body. It is truly and emphatically a monogamic Christian institution. Go where you will among Christians, there are the nymphs du pave, femmes entertenues, or kept mistresses, pimps, procurers, and procuresses, houses of assignation and dens of infamy of every grade, in which both married and single revel. Like the insiduous, deadly sorrocco, it spreads its blighting, withering, pestiferous influence everywhere among Christian monogamic society, corrupting, demoralizing, and debasing in all its leprous, festering, and loathsome deformity. Here we shall be told that "these are not Christians who commit these enormities." What are they? They are most of them baptized, go to church, and are really and truly a Christian monogamic society. In Christian England, where their Kings and Queens profess to be the annointed of the Lord, and rule that Christian nation "by the Grace of God," prostitutes used to be licensed by Christian bishops; in Christian France they are now licensed, and have their tickets and numbers like porters or cabmen. In Hamburg and other Christian cities of Germany they have their Dammthor wall a special district of the city allotted for their exclusive use, in which, like the Christian's hell—they writhe and rollick, and moan, and corrupt, and die, and live, and whose nauseating disgusting acts are performed in the face of high heaven, and ascend as a stink in the nostrils of Jehovah. Yet these are licensed by the Christian government of the city, and the funds obtained from this disgusting, Christian institution appropriated for the support of the army and the mouchards or secret police. The United States, nationally, is not Christian, it knows no man's religion; but Christianity may be said to be the choice of the people; they are professedly Christian. And yet it has become a serious doubt in the minds of many in our large cities whether prostitution, as one of the baneful crying evils of monogamy, and one of its most prominent institutions, had not better be more systematized; be openly acknowledged as a monogamic institution, and the nymphs du pave, and all the other appendages of this Christian monogamic institution, be placed under checks, laws and restrictions a la mode francaise. To say that prostitution is not a monogamic Christian institution therefore is to state a falsehood. Mormonism and Polygamy is charged by Christians with all that takes place within its dominions. Christianity and monogamy must be weighed in the same scales.

Let us here calmly ask: what can the Mormons think of the remarks of their christian friends, knowing, as they do, the above facts? You can't hoodwink them; they have come right from your midst, and know of all these evils. Furthermore, they have been robbed, plundered, abused, persecuted, prosecuted, and sacrificed millions of dollars worth of property, through and by the agency of their christian friends. They are the only people now in the United States, who, as American citizens, have not a right to the soil of the nation. They know this; they are not entirely a pack of fools. Again, all the Christians that write about them or their institutions, from penny-a-line scribblers through the various grades of yellow-covered literature, up to what are termed the most respectable journals and periodicals, publish almost invariably a tissue of barefaced falsehoods. Thus the Mormons, if the above be correct, and we defy contradiction, cannot look upon Christians in any other light than as licentious, degraded, and corrupt; as men reckless of truth, and wholesale defamers. That being the case, with what grace can they receive teachings and reflections from such parties? If they tell them to pluck the "mote out of their eye," they very naturally ask, have you seen the beam in your own? What do all these shallow commentaries and puerile flings of our editors amount to under such circumstances? They show themselves most egregiously ignorant of the subject upon which they write, knowing neither the habits, customs, principles, motives, or general character of the people. Or, if they do, misrepresenting them; and instead of presenting facts, hypocritically distorting truth, or maliciously presenting vituperation, abuse, and slander.

If Mormonism is an evil, it must be met on other grounds; it must be met by sound reason, incontrovertible argument, and a healthy and sound philosophy; the parties doing it must cleanse themselves from the filthiness, corruption, slander, and fraud above referred to; they must have some pretensions to virtue, truth, purity, and honesty. When this is done, if they have anything better, more virtuous, pure, philosophical and true, than Mormonism is, we will pledge ourselves they will embrace it.

The N. Y. Herald and the Deseret News.

ON our first page we publish the discourse of President Young which has created such a stir among the professedly very religious and philanthropic. No doubt it will be read with interest by all the Saints.

Without suspecting that the discourses of President Young were garbled in the New York Herald, we handed that sheet into the printer to "set up" for THE MORMON. After one discourse had been in type, the idea rushed into our mind that the Herald could not be trusted; accordingly, we sent up the Deseret News to the printer, with the request to put the Herald aside. What then? It turns out that from the discourse we publish on our front page, the Herald took out here and there paragraphs, which, for reference, we have put in brackets, the absence of which, though it may not alter the facts they did publish, leaves the discourse incomplete, and changes the spirit of the whole. The Herald has many black crimes to atone for.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

GEN. WALKER and his ambassador to England and France, Gen. D. De Goicouria, have smashed up partnership in the great business of establishing liberty and republican institutions in Nicaragua and Cuba, and are now furnishing the inhabitants of Gotham and "the rest of mankind" with the grand secrets of filibusterism. Gen. D. De Goicouria has been here some time trying to raise a loan for Nicaragua, during which he lost heart in his mission, and Walker, well posted on everything to the disadvantage of his partner, dismisses him from further interest in the concern. To save his honor from the impeachment of Walker's friends, the other tells everything he knew about nearly all concerned in Walker's schemes, and shows how the great filibuster had contracted with him for his assistance in Nicaragua, after which they were to go in force to Cuba and kick out Isabella's representative and join the beautiful and oppressed island to the United States. Goicouria now charges Walker with imbecility, incapacity and deceit. On Saturday, a Mr. Randolph, friend to Walker, for the exposure of his name and relationship in money affairs insulted Goicouria, and hinted his willingness to accommodate him, so Monday morning was set apart for powder and ball to test their truthfulness. It has not yet come off, Randolph is said to be sick, requiring assistance to stand, but is willing to fight at "six paces."

The late glowing accounts from Nicaragua of the battles at Massaya and Granada have been shrewdly criticised and shown up to the disadvantage of Walker, which coupled with charges against him, has brought out another hero panting for a set-to and thus they go—the end is not yet. Walker is now credited with having had in view from the beginning the establishment of a federal southern republic, by throwing his influence and arms around Nicaragua, the other surrounding States, that now fight him, and Mexico. The reports from Washington indicate that Secretary Marcy is likely to devote the remainder of his time in office to cripple Walker. Nicaragua in New York is the leading subject this week and more revelations are expected.

Senator Douglas with his young bride and friends have been spending the last few days in the city, and attracting considerable attention as the President that is to be.

The steamship Marion that went in search of the passengers that left the Lyonnais, returned on Tuesday after a nine days cruise without seeing or hearing anything of the vessel or boats. Hopes are entertained that the wrecked may have been picked up by outward bound vessels.

The Democracy held a great meeting on Wednesday evening at Tammany Hall, to commemorate their great triumph in the election of Mr. Buchanan—great men present—great speeches delivered. The French refugees alluded to on the front page arrived in this city on Tuesday evening.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The tone of defiance of the English press to France and Russia has in some measure been softened. Lord Palmerston in a speech lately at Manchester used the following expression, which has been the subject of much remark:

"I hope the peace will be lasting; but its endurance will depend on the fidelity with which its conditions are fulfilled. If that power which provoked hostility faithfully carried out the treaty, then no doubt peace would long be preserved."

To keep company with the late great French Railway fraud the English Great Northern Railway Company have just discovered themselves minus the services of Mr. Leopold Redpath, the registrar of shares and transferer of stocks with a small sum of $750,000. He was a director of many charitable institutions, lived in a splendid house in Regent's Park, and had a country seat. The impression was, that he filled his office in the transfer departments merely for the sake of having something to do, and his large contributions to public institutions supported the idea. It appears, whenever he issued stock for £100, he added an "0;" this practice also extended to larger amounts. Redpath left the office when the chief clerk of the new check department said he was about to examine the transfer books, and did not return. His whereabouts have not been discovered, but his friends are on the look out. Liverpool has been visited by a severe gale, doing much damage to shipping. The Samuel M. Fox and Silas Wright, with emigrants for New York, and the Louisiana for New Orleans, were driven on shore and wrecked while being towed out of the Mersey. No lives lost.

The Royal Geographical Society of England at the opening meeting of the winter session, voted the gold medal of the society to Dr. Kane, for the important additions he had made to geographical knowledge during the expedition to the Arctic seas in search of Sir John Franklin. This was delivered to the Dr. with sincere expressions of sympathy for him in his illness, and the regret of the society that he had been enable to meet with them and receive the heartly welcome which awaited him.

FRANCE.—The Russian Ambassador, Count Kirseleff, has been received very cordially by the Emperor, who expressed his great wish for cordiality, and gave England a side wipe for being too rigorous in the interpretation of the treaty. Louis got his Empire easily, he thinks a piece of land on the Danube of little consequence—Russia may have it. There are many and seemingly well founded rumors that Count Walewski has played into the hands of Russia for the favors that power bestowed on him lately.

SPAIN.—The Madrid Gazette of the 3d contains the Royal decree, which re-establishes the decree of 1845 on the press. Amongst other things, newspaper editors are bound to transmit a copy of their papers to the public prosecutors two hours at least before distributing them. The decree allows printers and editors a month to conform to its enactments, and declares that, in the provinces, the ordinary public prosecutors, and in Madrid one specially appointed, shall see to the execution of these enactments. The Espana publishes an article insisting on the necessity of Spain drawing closer her alliances with the Northern Powers. This article had created a considerable sensation.

NAPLES.—Bomba is expected shortly to make some slight concessions in favor of the prisoners. The Pope has lately got very nervous over the Neapolitan difficulty, and has recommended concessions.

TURKEY.—Another change of ministry. Reschid Pascha, the friend of England, has been nominated Grand Vizer. The Sultan takes upon himself the responsibility of detaining the English Fleet in the Black Sea. He had a grand divan on the 1st Nov. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe gave a magnificent entertainment the same day in honor of conferring the order of the garter on the Sultan.

The commander-in-chief of the liberating army of Circassia, Sefir Pasha, is encamped at Suchum Kaleh. His army amounts to 25,000 effective men. The whole of the eastern coast forts are in possession of the mountaineers.

PREST. TAYLOR,—Dear Uncle:—According to your kind request, I take the pen to attempt to contribute a few lines to THE MORMON. It is to me ever a source of great pleasure to swell the flood of testimony to sustain the cause of truth.

I have frequently been interrogated by persons who wished to learn the circumstances that brought me into connection with the Latter Day Saints, and think this a very fit time to relate a few of the scenes through which I have passed in connection with this people.

I was born in Liverpool, England, in the year 1834, and was about five years of age when my parents became acquainted, through your labors, with, and embraced the doctrines of Jesus Christ.

I have but a faint recollection of many circumstances which transpired while I dwelt on the eastern side of the Atlantic, in consequence of my parents emmigrating to the City of Nauvoo, Illinois, at that time the gathering place of that people, when I was eight years of age. There, as was the case in England, I was taken regularly to their place of worship and taught what my parents believed: after ten years of age I began to understand what I had heard. I took great delight in attending meetings, experiencing much joy, for although so young, it seemed as if my spirit was on fire, in listening to the Prophet and others preaching, more especially, however, when mention was made of the necessity of parents instructing the rising generation, in all that was good, that they might prove faithful and carry out the work in an acceptable manner before God, nobly begun by their fathers.

Listening to the words of these men together with the instructions I had received from my parents, led me to believe that I must live according to the laws of God, if I would enjoy his favor, and, of necessity, be baptized. I was accordingly baptized and received as a member of the Church in the fall of 184[illegible], after the decease of my father, my only remaining parent—two years from the time that my mother was called to move in another sphere, leaving myself with two brothers and four sisters, the eldest of whom was seventeen years of age, orphans in the world. Had the loss of a kind father and mother been all the trouble I was to encounter at this time of trials, my portion would have been rendered more sweet, but I was subject to what I even then considered a far greater loss—the Prophet and Patriarch, both being martyred the same summer. I was constrained to believe not only I had been robbed of all earthly protection; but a whole people of a father and friend; and thus I was left with nothing to make life desirable, and to mourn over the situation of my few remaining friends, among a bereft and down trodden people. I was conscious that the men then slain were the instruments in bringing my parents to this land, and to a knowledge of the designs of God with reference to his people if they trusted in Him; and could not but feel that all hope had fled from us in beholding the palid countenances of those who walked the streets of that city, until God whispered consolation to their souls; not being able to understand through my short sightedness, how it could be possible for God to raise up men to carry on the work, believing none so good as those slain.

Thus weeks and months rolled on, whereupon I began to discern that the Lord was prospering his people, healing their broken hearts, and clothing another with the mantle of his servant Joseph. When the Temple was completed and blessings poured out upon the faithful, although not all at peace, for it was a continued grief to the people of God, to witness the sufferings of unoffending individuals who fled into the centre for protection against those who swarmed around the borders—demons in human shape, were burning houses with stacks and fields of grain, inflicting the most severe punishment upon men, women and children, and leaving them with nothing but the canopy of Heaven as their covering, and that in the most inclement seasons of the year, in the unhealthy climate of Illinois, full of miasma disease and death.

And why not forsake this people? Some would no doubt say, inasmuch as your connection with them subjected you to persecution from those of a contrary belief. If I had fled from them, where would I have gone that my life might have been rendered more happy? This people were my friends, while the world proved to be my enemies, as was manifested by the actions of ministers of Christian sects, who led on bloodthirsty mobs to endeavor to rob, as they thought, helpless people of their lives.

That these were the people of God, I had not the least doubt, through the virtue contained in their doctrines: I knew that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet and kind shepherd to the flock in his charge; so much so that he laid his life down for their sakes, thus verifying the words of Jesus, wherein he says: "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."

Had he been a "hireling" as many I might now mention, who glut themselves upon the fat of the flock, and clothe themselves with the wool, not feeding the flock with that food which is life eternal to them that partake of it, (such as Peter and his associates alone had through the Holy Priesthood) he would no doubt, have acted the part of one that "Fleeth because he is an hireling and careth not for the sheep." I verily know he could have fled, from those in pursuit of him, had he loved his own life in preference to the safety of his people, but this was not the case, for like a man and not a coward, he went to the place of martyrdom in company of Hyrum (may I never forget their departure, but let it be my guide in like circumstances) when Joseph remarked "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter; but I am calm as a summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offence towards all men I shall die innocent and it shall yet be said of me, he was murdered in cold blood." Had I not known these things I might view things differently, but as it is, I having a living hope within me, of a glorious triumph over death and hell as well as a knowledge that thou wast true to thy calling, Joseph, and will never forsake the cause of our fathers nor forget the righteous cause of thy faithful brethren, once oppressed but now free, till the stains of thy blood with that of thy brethren are wiped from the soil of Illinois, through the vengence of a just God, nor cease to tell the world of the blackness of their deeds, and the justness of thy cause till the purposes of our father in the redemption of His children, for which thou died is accomplished, and the whole world acknowledge thou wast a true Prophet and murdered in cold blood.

Correspondence from Great Salt Lake City.

ELDER TRESEDER of Hornerstown, N. J., has forwarded the following letter for publication which will no doubt be interesting to relatives and those who are ever pleased to read of Utah. Not unfrequently we learn of the Saints in the States receiving excellent letters from their relatives in Utah; we would take this occasion to suggest to all—send on such letters to us or copies of them, retaining the private business to yourselves. We do not publish letters as evidences of the divinity of Mormonism, but in these days when so much of a calumnious character is reported against the inhabitants of Utah, the plain, simple letter of a child to his parents, or that of parents to their children, will outweigh ten thousand letters of paid correspondents. We congratulate Elder Treseder in having a portion of his family with the body of the Church, and pray that circumstances may favor him, that he with his partner and the remainder of his family may join those who have gone before, as a recompense for his faithfulness and unwearied zeal in propagating the principles of Truth. A way will open up.

G. S. L. CITY, Sept. 29th, 1856.

DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER: As the time is near at hand, for the Eastern mail I thought I would say a few words to you and give you some particulars respecting the arrival of the first two companies of hand-carts. I hope you have good health: Richard, George, and myself are well.

The first two hand-cart companies arrived in the city last Friday evening, 26th. Since we received the news of their starting, they have been the universal topic of conversation; while at work or in leisure. I wonder where the hand-carts are? was on the end of every one's tongue.

We heard various reports concerning them but nothing true till last Thursday when we heard they were within one day's march of the city. We heard they were going to winter at Fort Laramie, some said the reason they had not been seen was while the mail passed they had gone off the road to feed—others they had stampeeded; but last Thursday all doubt and uncertainty was at an end by a messenger coming in, stating they certainly would be in the next day.

The excitement in the city on the 4th and the 24th of July, to my mind, was nothing in comparison to it. Presidents Brigham Young, and H. C. Kimball escorted by the minute men and a company of Lancers, followed by as many of the citizens as could turn out—some in vehicles and some on foot, with the two bands, to welcome the hand-carts and they did not forget to take them something to eat.

Presidents Brigham Young, and Kimball went part way up the little mountain in a buggy and met them coming down. Bro. Brigham was introduced to them as they formed in line, and he was so much affected with the spectacle, he could only say: My good people I am glad to see you, God bless you all. He hurried away, he could say no more. The Salt Lake Brethren then gave the emigrants plenty to eat and they once more went to their hand-carts and made the last start. As they came down the bench you could scarcely see them for the dust. When they entered the city, the folks came running from every quarter to get a glimpse of the long-looked-for hand-carts.

If I had had time I should have gone as far as the foot of the little mountain, but I had not the time to spare, and so I was contented to meet them in the city by Brigham's house. Behind a row of wagons and carriages, came the hand-carts. I shall never forget the feeling that ran through my whole system as I caught the first sight of them. The first hand-cart was drawn by a man and his wife, they had a little flag on it, on which were the words: "Our President—may the unity of the Saints ever show the wisdom of his counsels."

The next hand-cart was drawn by three young women. I did not take particular notice of the others, some were drawn by women some by men, in all amounting, I believe, to 50 hand-carts, and near 500 souls. I believe some 7 or 8 persons died on the road. The tears rolled down the cheek of many a man who you would have thought would not, could not, shed a tear; but the scene was exciting in the extreme and most everybody felt sympathetic and joyous. I could scare refrain from tears. Richard cried like a child, and amongst the women the crying was pretty near universal.

I went down on the public square with the companies. Bro. Brigham spoke a few words and retired, requesting the Bishops of the several wards to first see that they did not want. In the morning of the next day, there was an abundance of provisions for them, and they sat down to a dinner provided for them by the Governor: the Nauvoo Brass and Capt. Ballo's Band playing all the time. There were hundreds of people on the Square all that day, and all day yesterday. The emigrants appeared in pretty good spirits, and I think in good health with a few exceptions. In a short time I have no doubt the Square will be as empty as ever; they will soon disperse, some to their friends, some to the country, some perchance will go back. The entrance of the two first hand-cart companies into G. S. L. City, will never be forgot by thousands. They outtravelled all the ox teams that left with them, and overtook and got in before a company of ox teams who are not yet in, under the Presidency of Eld. John Banks, who left 10 days before them, and they would have been in several days sooner, had they not been hindered in waiting for the ox teams they had with them. Yesterday I had once more the pleasure of listening to Bro. John Oakley, giving some account of his mission and his travels with the hand-cart companies as their rear guard; he looked as well as ever I saw him. I spoke to him on the Square last evening, he asked me how I liked the place, desired me to do right and stick to Mormonism, which, by the help of God, I mean to do. Bro. Brigham said that he knew Bro. Oakley and the men who travelled with him were good men. I can assure you that to Bro. Oakley was a great consolation.

Bros. Dunbar, William Kimball, Joseph Young and others, are expected in every day, I shall be glad to see the little man once more. I should not be surprised if he should work in the same shop with me. I work with Bro. Cline yet, and I am now boarding with him, and expect to do so all winter. We are very busy making buckskin clothes for a Fair that is coming off this week, intended to exhibit articles and produce of every description that are made or raised in Deseret. We are making a coat and pants of buckskin that when finished will cost one hundred and forty dollars. The coat is embroidered with silk in bunches of grapes, the edges are trimmed with otter skin: the pants have bunches of grapes from the bottom to the hips all the way up the side seam. The labor of the embroidering cost seventy dollars, and the silk twenty dollars, the rest is spent in the skins and the labor of the tailor. We think they will gain the premium for the tailoring department: they are sold to Mr. Livingston, a merchant in this place, who is going to the States by the next mail, and who calculates to take them to New York.

Harvest is now in, but we expect some hard times yet before another harvest, but I hope economy will be observed and I have no doubt that all will be well. There is a great reformation in Utah; the Home Missionaries are abroad stirring up the Saints to diligence and to repent, get baptized, and to renew their covenants. Hundreds have done so and those who wish to do right and be Saints are going to be baptized in the city; as I have not been baptized since I have been in the city, I shall gladly avail myself of the opportunity. I could have been baptized before if I had wished, but I have neglected it.

I often think of you, and imagine I see you seated around the table, and I sometimes imagine how you feel when you see the vacant places of your three eldest sons; but I thank God we are all well and do not want, though we cannot always get things the moment we need them, yet we do not require clothes. Winter will soon shut us in, and then we shall have dancing and theatrical performances, and the time will wear away pleasantly enough. I went to a party three weeks ago, and enjoyed myself much; but I never go that I do not think when I shall have the pleasure of father's or mother's company, or that of my dear little sisters. I presume Phœbe is a fine girl, and Frank I believe is a wicked little fellow; kiss them all for me, and tell them their brothers do not forget them, though so far away. I have had my likeness taken, and would send it to you if I could. Samuel Rosekelly, my old schoolmate, is gone on a mission to England. I heard some time ago that Bro. Hart was coming out this season; but I was told yesterday he is not. I believe some of the Jersey Saints are coming out with some hand-carts; I say God speed and give them strength. Bro. Heber Kimball said yesterday that millions would come by that means, and many with their bundles on their backs. Since I have been here I have been tried considerable, and have said that which, in moments of reflection, I have been sorry for; but from this time I wish to do right and serve the Lord, and work out my own salvation with fear and trembling.

I hope I shall not tire you with so much writing, and that out of the whole you will find some things that may interest you. As it is getting late I will come to a close; and if the mail comes in to-morrow (the last of the month) I trust I shall have a letter from you, as I was disappointed by the last. When you write, send me all the news you can, and remember me to the folks in Devonport, and tell them I should be glad to hear from them. I wrote a long letter to uncle Francis by the last mail, giving him a full account of travelling over the plains and some description of the place.

Old Mr. and Mrs. Benham are going back to the States in the spring; they have been grumbling ever since they have been here, although they have done better than hundreds of good Saints whose feet they were not good enough to wipe. Such to me is one of the mysteries of the life of man, why the evil are frequently enjoying all the good of this life, and the honest and virtuous are in want, cold and misery.

Richard and George send their kindest and best love, and accept the same yourself from your ever affectionate son,

CHARLES M. TRESEDER.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 21, 1856.

PRES. TAYLOR:—Dear Sir,—I arrived here from New Jersey yesterday, having visited the Branches at Toms River, and Hornerstown; at Toms River, I reorganised the Branch, held eight meetings, instructed and counselled them in relation to their duties, and left them in peace, and rejoicing in the principles of truth, they have embraced.

I held three meetings in the Saints' Chapel at Hornerstown last Sabbath, assisted in confirming eight that had renewed their covenants by baptism. Ordained Bro. Joseph Asey to the office of an Elder. He is a virtuous and good man, resides near the "White Horse," Mercer County, New Jersey. There were some persons present that formerly belonged to the Church at Nauvoo, but have fallen into darkness, and lost the Spirit of God. All truth to them has become like a dream, the very foundation that tends to their exaltation, they cannot comprehend—stumble at and despise, and are ignorant of its blessings, principles, glories, and powers. They "cannot abide a Celestial Law, hence cannot abide a Celestial Glory." Kirtland "the cage of every unclean bird," has become their residence. I reasoned with them in regard to the principles of truth, showed them their situation and bore my testimony to the truth in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

Quite a good spirit is prevailing in the Hornerstown Branch under the Presidency of Elder Treseder, a good and virtuous man. He is delivering lectures every week, quite a good congregation attends his discourses, and I trust much good will yet be done there through his labors.

The Saints generally have their faces Zionward, and all that have the means (with few exceptions), so far as I am acquainted, purpose leaving for Utah, in the coming spring.

My health is tolerable. I have been some part of the time since I left New York, quite indisposed by reason of a severe cold settled on my lungs, which oppressed me considerable in much speaking, but I feel first rate in spirit, and feel to exclaim all the while: Hallelujah to the Lord of Hosts: our God omnipotent reigneth. I shall tarry here over Sabbath, and shall leave next week, to visit the different Branches of the Church, in Delaware, Pennsylvania, &c. President Cannon I expect will accompany me; he is well, and sends his kindest regards.

I expect to be in New York in the course of two or three weeks, so as to accomplish, if I can, my Eastern tour before the weather becomes too inclement, to visit all the Branches and Saints I can, particularly those that have responded to my circular, and your kind editorial in relation thereto.

My kindest regards to Bros. Stenhouse, Dulin and George, and may the peace, blessings and power of Israel's God, whose throne is high in the Heavens, be and abide with you and yours, and all associated with you, in the Kingdom of God, is the earnest wish and fervent prayer of your Brother in Christ. Amen.

W. I. APPLEBY.

Letter from Elder Jacob Hofheines.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26, 1856.

MR. TAYLOR—Dear Sir: Knowing that you like to hear from the Elders of Israel, and having lately returned from my field of labor, Toms River, Ocean County, New Jersey, where I have been travelling for the last few months, I venture writing a few lines, to be published in your valuable paper, the great Champion of Truth. I can really say that the Kingdom of God is prospering and increasing. The Saints are rejoicing and realizing the promises and gifts of the Everlasting Gospel. Some of the honest in heart have been baptized, and some more are investigating the truth. Notwithstanding the opposition of the Sectarian Priests, editors, liars and doctors, the Truth will prevail. I can only say, let them do all they can, for the harvest is ripe and they have to gather the tares, for the great burning, and we will gather the wheat, and fill our mission, as they have to fill theirs.

Having been appointed to labor in this great city among the Germans, I am desirous to do my best, feeling ever willing as a servant of God, to obey the Priesthood. I have visited some Germans in company with Elder A. Ott, and preached to them. The prospects are promising, yet the tradition and prejudice are great, but knowing, that the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob lives, and has again spoken in these last days, raised up the prophet Joseph, and organized His Kingdom on the earth; and knowing from past experience His power, and realizing His spirit, I feel to put my trust in Him.

The German Mission is a hard one, on account of the powerful tradition and the great love they have for the enjoyments of this world, but as the fullness of the gospel has to be preached to all nations and tongues for a witness before the end comes—and they being a part of the great body of all nations,—I feel to thank the God of Israel for being accounted worthy to be one of the witnesses of the Kingdom of God of the last days, and the prophet Joseph; for I do know and testify to this Generation, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God and that the Gospel John the Revelator speaks of in the 14th Chapter, 6—7, has been revealed to him, for flesh and blood has not revealed it to me, but my Father in Heaven, and to Him I give the glory and power, both now and for ever, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Respectfully yours, in the Gospel of Peace,

JACOB HOFHEINES.

FOR THE MORMON.

Reflections on Visiting the Scenes of Childhood.

BY W. I. APPLEBY.

How sensitive are our feelings, and with what emotions does our heart pulsate, on visiting the scenes of our childhood, and home of our youth; what fond recollections of the past rush into our minds, and the reminiscences of the blissful retrospective clings around our hearts like "ivy to the vine," and the thoughts of home, father, mother, and kindred,—dear and departed ones, cause tender emotions in our bosoms, and often times heaving like the troubled ocean, tears of sympathy flow—objects of endearment long since faded, and fallen, like the sweet rose of a summer's morning, but perishing and dying before the evening dews have time to cherish and revive it; such are the reflections of fond and cherished endearments. Sometimes these emotions rush upon our memory like the gushing torrent, at other times like the moonbeam playing upon the bosom of the placid lake.

Such were some of the feelings and emotions I experienced a short time since, in passing by, and viewing the place that gave me birth, not far from the place I am now writing. There, once, was the home of my youth, the scenes of my childhood. There, where a kind and tender Father, by his industry and care, reared and provided a good and comfortable home for me, there, where I leaned upon a mother's bosom, and dandled on a father's knee, there, where I was nourished, protected, clothed, and fed, and when I was sick, kindly watched and administered to, by a dear and beloved mother, like a guardian angel of mercy around my bed. There, where I was taught to lisp my unfeigned accents,—that there was a God who made me, a Saviour who died for me, and whom I was commanded to love honor and obey. There were the meadows in which I delighted to chase the gaudy butterfly from flower to flower, and from which the humming bird extracted the nectared sweets,—and where the linnet, and the lark cajoled and sang. There were the rippling brooks, in which I delighted to angle for fish, or shoot them with my bow and arrow. There were the banks, on which I loved to roam, and gather the strawberry, pluck the rose and other beautiful flowers. There were the green waving pines yet standing, not far distant, at the roots of of which, the pure bubbling springs flowed, and, in my rambles, invited me to quench my thirst at their exhilarating and exuberant fountains, and repose under the waving boughs from the heat of summer's meridian sun. There stood the apple-trees and other trees, whose sweet fragrance often invited me to repose under their cooling shades, and listen to the songs of the birds in their bowers. There once stood the willows, before the door of that once happy domicile, in whose branches the whip-pon-will and 'Caty-did' sing, whose music oft charmed me to slumber, and lulled me to sleep, and repose. How oft in the door of that once peaceful dwelling have I sat at evening's twilight, and watched the gathering thunder cloud, until the forked lightnings flashed, and the thunder in the distance rolled: filled with reverential awe, and admiration my youthful heart could not comprehend: at other times viewing the gentle doves walking up and down the road before the door seeking for gravel, listening to their cooing, or to their solemn and melancholy moan. There, where, in visions of the night, in my youthful days, I beheld a fiery stream arise in the South East, crossing the sky to the North West, some six feet wide, belting the heavens, making a rushing noise, and in the West, at an altitude of some twenty degrees above the horizon, burst out into one of the most beautiful suns my eyes ever beheld, all nature appearing enchanted, revived and rejoicing at the scene and change that had taken place. At another time a yellow cloud, of form nearly square, and of large dimensions to arise in the North, about two degrees above the horizon; presently a black cloud arose and settled upon the surface of the former, that nearly obscured the same, and in the black, seven bright and luminous stars made their appearance. A few minutes after they disappeared. I was informed what the same portended but I shall not insert it here.

Also some time after, I saw two suns near the meridian of the heavens, one left the other and settled down to the verge of the Southern horizon, and disappeared in a pale fiery hue.

Likewise in another vision, wherein I saw a large light arise in the East, a thick, dense forest prevented a plain view of the light from me, only some of its rays that penetrated through the trees. Suddenly, I was invisibly caught up some two hundred feet in the air, in order that I might look upon the heavenly light in all its beauty and brilliancy, without any object to intervene. When I had feasted my soul upon the beauties of the same, I was again let down gently to the earth.

At another time, one beautiful morning in May, when not a cloud was to be seen to obscure the face of heaven's blue arched vault, when all nature appeared rejoicing in returning spring, (I then being some nine years of age,) while looking up and viewing the heavens, in the West, at an altitude of some fifty five degrees, a heavenly messenger, white as the driven snow, appeared to me. I looked upon the same with my natural eyes, until he appeared to recede back into the skies. My youthful mind could not comprehend all these things at the time, but I treasured them up in my bosom, firmly believing that they portended something, then in the future. Indeed a portion of them have already been realized.

There was I happy, my days fled sweetly and swiftly away, where all was joy and life in childhood's sweet sunny dreams, when time and life was joyous to me, as sweet and peaceful as the gentle breeze of a summer's morning, from off the bed of roses that fan the blushing cheek of virtue, innocence, and beauty.

But the kind and affectionate father, who provided that home, and made it happy, fell off by the shaft of death, and was gathered to his fathers some twenty seven years ago, and left me, as it were, an orphan and a wanderer, thrown upon an unfriendly world. The wife and mother, a few years since, broken down with age and disease, was gathered to her husband, and has followed in the train of the dead. Several of my brothers and sisters have also made the grave their mansion, and now lie in solemn silence in the cold embraces of death, returning back to their mother dust.

That once happy home has long since passed into the hands of Strangers, and the hand of time and neglect are visible upon it. Scarce a vestige remains to mark the spot where once stood that happy domicile. All is removed and demolished, dwelling house, out houses, barn, &c. Not even the trees that once stood before the dwelling house, have the woodman's axe spared.

I looked upon the cherished place after so many long years of absence, with melancholy reflexions, and tears filled my eyes, while viewing the scene. I thought of the cares, strife, toil, suffering, privations, sorrow, sickness, I had undergone, and also the unspeakable joy I had experienced in the Gospel of Truth, since I left that once peaceful home, and had been cast upon a cold, unfriendly, and unfeeling world, to try and provide for myself and those that were dependent upon me, I involuntarily exclaimed,:—Farewell thou home of my youth, the scenes of my childhood, and former associations. Though all around you looks solemn, silent, melancholy, desponding, yet there are associations connected with the remembrance of you that will ever entwine around my head while in mortality. Farewell.

Thoughts about Apostles and Prophets.

BY ELDER JOEL M. BERRY.

THE assertions made by the Latter Day Saints, that God has raised up a Prophet and Apostles in these days who are endowed with authority to teach and instruct men in the principles of His kingdom, to which all men are required to render obedience, are statements that are looked upon by many to be little less than blasphemous. Many persons think it strange that the Latter Day Saints, who are apparently possessed of sound judgment on other subjects, should be so visionary and so wholly absorbed in the unpopular belief of there being men who now hold this power on the earth. Such persons, however, believe that men clothed with this power have formerly existed upon the earth, and were inspired to speak and write the councils of God to the then human family, and profess willingness to receive their writings, or writings said to be theirs, upon very slight testimony, and rest all their hopes of future and eternal blessedness upon their truthfulness. They have an idea that it is perfectly reasonable to believe in the words of apostles and prophets who lived hundreds of years ago, and think that were they alive now they could place all reliance and confidence in their words as the word of God.

Peter, James and John, with their brethren, are regarded as having been something superior to ordinary mortals; and many, thus forgetting that they were but human, think that it would only be necessary, did they live now, for them to declare their message, and that they were commanded to teach it to all mankind, and men, without the slightest demur, would instantly embrace its doctrines. This professed admiration of defunct prophets and seers, however, is not confined to this generation alone; it was a characteristic of other generations. The Jews, when Jesus was in their midst, would build and adorn the tombs of the prophets whom their fathers had slain, and say that if they had lived in the days of their fathers, they would not have persecuted or killed them; while at the same time they were thirsting for the blood of the Son of God, and did not rest until he had shared the same fate with the prophets whom they so so ostentatiously honored.

But what is there visible at the present time from which we can infer, that were any of the ancient prophets or apostles in the midst of this generation, they would be any better treated, or their teachings given more heed to, than they were in the generation in which they lived? The present ideas of professing Christians, that the canon of scripture is full, and that there is no further need of direct revelation, would not admit of their recognizing a prophet or an apostle, should they be so fortunate as to have one sent in their midst. The belief that these callings are no longer needed, has been inculcated in Christendom for centuries, and men have been taught to rely upon a corrupt Christianity as the religion of Jesus; and not seeing the callings of apostles and prophets filled in the church, it has required but little persuasion to cause the multitude to fall into the erroneous belief that they were designed only for the days when Christianity was first preached.

A great many find considerable fault with the Latter Day Saints because they rely so much on the words of the present prophets and apostles; they think it decidedly anti-republican; and some, to give vent to the superabundance of their spleen, occasionally call Brigham Young and his brethren hard names, simply because they make themselves equal with the former apostles. Had these individuals, with their present feelings, lived in any other generation, when prophets and apostles were upon the earth, they would have manifested the same feelings of antipathy to their callings, and would have taken a precisely similar course to oppose them. If they could only see it, it is not Brigham Young they are warring against, though many of them no doubt think that it is; but it is the principle of God's right to choose men. How much more republican would we be if we paid no attention to the teachings of our Apostles and Prophets, than we are at present! Can we not exercise our rights and privileges, as republicans, to as full an extent, by doing right as by doing wrong, by being obedient to the will of the Almighty as by being disobedient. The Latter Day Saints cannot fail to hearken to, and have confidence in, the words of their leaders, so long as they believe as they do in the necessity of Prophets and Apostles, and the authority the present leaders of the Church hold. The only thing that will destroy this confidence is to prove that those men do not hold this authority, and are not apostles and prophets. So long as we know that they have this authority, it makes but little difference to us what their names may be; and the moment the Latter Day Saints became convinced that Joseph Smith and Brigham Young were apostles of Jesus Christ, they were as willing to believe their testimony, and to hearken to their counsel and teachings, as they would have believed and hearkened to ancient apostles, and any other course would be foolishness and wickedness.

Happiness.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

O! HAPPINESS! what feelings of inexpressible delight do not overcome the human mind, when drinking out of thy golden cup; thou findest a harmonious echo in the bosom of everyone; thou harbinger of celestial bliss, thy pleasures are as inexhaustible as the fathomless depth of the ocean; thine origin is to be traced in celestial spheres; wherever thou hast the sway, the golden fruits of peace and contentment are growing luxuriously.

Happiness, like a great many other abstract terms, has not exactly a positive signification, that is to say, it cannot be confined to certain limits, but its field is as wide as eternity; hence, the term happy, is merely a relative one, for instance, a man may be spoken of as happy, viz., that he is in possession of a higher degree of Happiness, than the generality of men, without excluding, however, the possibility of there being some happier persons than he is. A man is called rich, that is to say, he has more of a fortune than many others have, without confining, however, his being rich to a certain amount of means. Happiness is a certain harmonious conformation of the mind, with a sense of complacency and satisfaction, having an endless series of gradations. It is well to know that such abstract terms, (an abstract term, is an ideal word, being merely perceptible to the inner man, as virtue, pride, etc.,) are only used comparatively, that is to say, from a certain point of view. If we balance nicely the distinction of Happiness, we find that it is the amount of pleasure caused by agreeable emotions, exceeding pain. If, on the contrary, painful sensations predominate, so that the pleasant feelings cannot act as sufficient counteragents, then, pain, grief, etc., are the results; and the greater the amount of agreeable emotions, the happier a man is. The lowest degree of Happiness is that in which the quantity of unpleasant feelings is nearly equal to that of agreeable ones. This continual increase or decrease of joyful sensations accounts for the endless gradations of Happiness.

Although the distinctions of Happiness are endless, yet that term is generally used to express that acme of cheerfulness and contentment, which can be acquired in this world.

What causes the feelings of Happiness? Is it the animal gratification of our senses, the indulgence in more refined pleasures? No. Ah! says one, I should be so happy to enjoy the regular attendence of theatrical performances. I wish I could have such pleasures every night. Such a desire is quite common, but inconsistent. For the benefit of the reader, we will dive a little further into the metaphysical question of Happiness not consisting in pleasures. Supposing we have an independent fortune at our own disposal, and can, according to the desire of our hearts, indulge in every gratification of our senses. We commence by visiting daily theatres or other places of entertainment, and in a very short time we realize that those pleasures in which we first delighted, are losing their charms for us. How is that, says one; I am so great an amateur of music, that I shall never get tired of hearing Mozart's masses! Certainly you would, even the most beautiful music, the most elegant compositions bring, when heard too often, an ennui, a mental lassitude, you get tired of listening always to the same piece. This psychological phenomenon is owing to the peculiar construction of our system, according to which every sense, no matter whether it is seeing, hearing, tasting, thinking, etc., becomes benumbed or blunted when exercised too much. I will give here another illustration. The eyes of a person who is very much in the habit of reading, will gradually become quite weak or dull. Artillerymen will often lose their hearing when exposed too long to the deafening roar of cannon. It is evident, that everything, no matter whether abstract or concrete, becomes worn out by over exertion.

A regular pleasure-hunter, will soon experience a kind of an ennui, and then he will find that the realisation of a pleasure, of which he anticipated so much, does by no means satisfy his expectations. Everyone of us has more or less experienced this. Supposing I am invited to a party, then my hopes and anticipations are generally excelling the pleasure itself, and I asked myself often, whether the pleasure or happiness caused by the anticipation or expectation of a pleasure, was not greater than the pleasure itself. As an illustration of the above, I will give here some instances of my own experience. I remember well, that during my College time, I always longed for the end of the week, for Friday and Saturday, as the close of the school. On such days I was very happy by anticipating the pleasures of Sunday, but the realization of those enjoyments was always weakened both by having expected too much and by the prospects of stern duties awaiting me on the coming Monday, and often when in the midst of a brilliant assembly, while listening to the delightful music of an opera, the real pleasure was far behind my anticipations in which I had indulged during the week. So you see, that the pain, trouble, preparations, are very seldom counterbalanced by the realization of pleasure.

A very important point, is the not too often repetition of an enjoyment, as generally the novelty of a thing strikes the mind and makes a lasting impression. As soon as the charms of novelty are gone, ennui and weariness are the natural consequences. In relation to pleasure, there are as far as has been ascertained by observations, certain limits to which enjoyments are confined, and as soon as the agreeable emotions have reached that mental acme, those nerves which are continually operated upon, become dull or benumbed, and the pleasant emotions cease, or are replaced by restlessness, weariness and ennui. He who thinks to gain by too frequent an indulgence in such gratifications, is much deceived, inasmuch as the sensibility or susceptability of emotions becomes more and more diminished. In order to keep up the mental equilibrium, it is necessary for everyone to move in a well-regulated sphere, in which pleasures are counterbalanced by labor and business. Human nature requires a variety of pleasures; man is always longing for something new, hence the continual restlessness or searching propensity of the mind. Watch a man of science, and you will find, that whenever he has in his literary pursuits discovered a new principle, or solved a problem, he is only happy for a moment, but soon he gets tired of his triumph and continues his researches, because his ever craving appetite requires more food, and that of another kind. Further, you observe, the greater the difficulties and obstacles were, he had to encounter, the greater was his joy in attaining the object in view. This is owing to the mind wanting a continual exercise of its faculties, by the ever-varying incidents of life. New dangers, new obstacles require new mental and physical exertions, in order to make successful plans.

Ah; says the poor, I wished I was rich, I would then be so happy—O! no, the accumulation of wealth, the brilliant splendor of gorgeous palaces, and all the paraphernalia of high life, do not constitute real Happiness.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeving any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur [illegible] d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. [illegible] Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de [illegible] Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qu[illegible] sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, [illegible] nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc vo[illegible] faut pas et qu'il ne de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il n[illegible] aux hommes. Pour doit pas se communiquer encore [illegible] qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu[illegible] pourquoi fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà par[illegible] nos jours? ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de [illegible] nombre

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand [illegible] Mais d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. [illegible] un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénit[illegible] et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

An Old Poem.

SELECTED.

Who shall judge a man from manners?
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vests could do no more.
There are springs of crystal nectar
Hidden, crushed and overgrown:
God who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters, rulers, lords, remember
That your meanest hinds are men—
Men by labor, men by feeling,
Men by thought, and men by fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.
There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little weed clad rills,
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
There are ceders on the hills,
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For to him all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth of fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same.
By the sweat of others' foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifteth up its voice.
Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with lovelIness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right;
God, whose world-heard voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Sinks oppression with its titles,
As the pebbles in the sea.

DISCOURSE

By President Brigham Young,

From the Deseret News, Oct. 10, 1856.

We have had the privilege of hearing the testimony of Brother Whiting, who has just returned from his mission, upon which he started two years ago from San Pete. Bros. Merril and Clinton, and several others, have lately arrived from their missions and I will here give an invitation to those Brethren to come to the stand, Sabbath after Sabbath, and bear their testimony and speak to the people. I wish to say to the Elders who arrive, come, we would be happy to see you with us; come, we will find seats for you; and if you are not all eloquent preachers, come and bear your testimony. Brother Whiting says that he is a man of but few words. I am satisfied that there is greater wisdom with many who say but little, than there is with those who talk so much; as for the multitude of words, they are but of little consequence, the ideas are of far the greatest importance.

The kingdom of our God, that is set up on the earth, does not require men of many words and flaming oratorical talents, to establish truth and righteousness. It is not the many words that accomplish the designs of our Father in heaven; with him it is the acts of the people more than their words; this I was convinced of, before I embraced the gospel. Had it not been that I clearly saw and understood, that the Lord Almighty would take the weak things of this world to confound the mighty, the wise and the talented, there was nothing that could have induced or persuaded me to have ever become a public speaker. I did think, and I now think, that I am personally as well acquainted with my own weaknesses as any other mortal is with them, for this is my fortune, my good fortune and blessing, and I am ready to acknowledge, that it is more than many have got. I am of the opinion that I know and understand myself, about as well as any person can know and understand me; yet I may think that I know my weaknesses and incapabilities to the fullest, while others may see weaknesses that I do not. Still I am so constituted that when I discover my weaknesses I bear them off as well as I can; and I say to all people, if you discover that I falter, when I do the best I can, what are you going to do about it?

When I first commenced preaching, I made up my mind to declare the things that I understood, fearless of friends and threats, and regardless of caresses. They were nothing to me, for if it was my duty to rise before a congregation of strangers and say that the Lord lives, that he has revealed himself in this our day, that he has given to us a prophet and brought forth the new and everlasting covenant for the restoration of Israel, and if that was all I could say, I must be just as satisfied as though I could get up and talk for hours. If I could only say that I was a monument of the Lord's work upon the earth, that was sufficient; and had it not been for this feeling, nothing could have induced me to have become a public speaker.

With regard to preaching, let a man present himself before the Saints, or go into the world before the nobles and great men of the earth, and let him stand up full of the Holy Ghost, full of the power of God, and though he may use words and sentences in an awkward style, he will convince and covert more to the truth, than can the most polished orator destitute of the Holy Ghost; for that spirit will prepare the minds of the people to receive the truths, and the spirit of the speaker will influence the hearers so that they will feel it.

These reflections are my true sentiments, and it is knowledge with me with regard to speakers and a people who have honest hearts, who desire the knowledge of the Lord, who are seeking to know the will of God and willing to become subject to it. The Spirit of truth will do more to bring persons to light and knowledge, than flowery words. This is my experience, and I presume it is the experience of many of you, and that you can call that to mind when you first received the Spirit of this gospel.

When you see a person at a distance, you can, at times, see the spirit of that person before you have the opportunity of speaking to him; yon can discern his spirit by the appearance of his countenance. This has been my experience from my younger days, and more especially since I have become acquainted with sacred things. My later experience has been very vivid with regard to the spirits of people, and it matters not to me whether they say much or little, so they let me hear their voices and see them, let me hear and see the manifestation of their spirit, that I may know whether they are constantly with us in their feelings. I wish to know the spirits of those that are around and with us, in favor of sanctification and purification.

Brethren, you who have returned and are this season returning from missions, we shall be happy to have you take your seats, with us on this stand, and when opportunity offers we shall be glad to hear your voices and testimonies.

When I rise before you, Brethren and Sisters, I often speak of the faults of the people, and try to correct them—I strive to put the Saints in a right course, and plead with them to live their religion, to become better, and to purify themselves before the Lord—to sanctify themselves—to be prepared for the days that are fast approaching. I do this oftener than I speak of the good qualities of this people, and I have reasons for this, which, perhaps you would be pleased to hear.

The froward and disobedient need chastisement, the humble and faithful are sealed by the Spirit of the gospel that we have received. I have not time nor opportunity to caress the people, or flatter them, to do right; nor often to speak well of them, portraying their good qualities.

The consolations of the Holy Spirit of our Gospel comfort the hearts of men and women, old and young, in every condition of this mortal life. The humble, the meek and faithful are all the time consoled and comforted by the Spirit of the gospel that we preach; consequently their comfort, happiness, joy and peace must be received from the fountain head. As Jesus says, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye have peace" so we say to ourselves, so we say to the Saints; in the Lord ye have joy, and comfort, and the light of truth which shines upon your path.

The Holy Ghost reveals unto you things past, present and to come; it makes your minds quick and vivid to understand the handy work of the Lord. Your joy is made full in beholding the footsteps of our Father going forth among the inhabitants of the earth; this is invisible to the world, but it is made visible to the Saints, and they behold the Lord in his providences bringing forth the work of the last days.

The hearts of the meek and humble are full of joy and comfort continually; do such need comfort from me? Yes, if any mourn, perhaps a few encouraging words from me would give them consolation and do them good. I am always ready to impart what I have to this people, that which will cheer and comfort their hearts, and if the Lord will lead me by His Spirit into that strain of reflections and teaching, I am more willing and ready to speak comforting words to this people, than I am to chastise them.

But I hope and trust in the Lord my God that I shall never be left to praise this people—to speak well of them for the purpose of cheering and comforting them by the art of flattery—to lead them on by smooth speeches, day after day, week after week, month after month, and year after year, and let them roll sin as a sweet morsel under their tongues, and be guilty of transgressing the law of God. I hope I shall never be left to flatter this people, or any other people on the earth, in their iniquity, but far rather chasten them for their wickedness, and praise them for their goodness.

The Lord praises you and comforts you, if you live as you are directed; if you live with your life hid with Christ in God, you do receive from the fountain-head, life, joy, peace, truth and every good and wholesome principle, that the Lord bestows upon this people, and your hearts exult in it, and your joy is made full. This people are the best people upon the face of the earth that we have any knowledge of.

Take the congregation now before me, and what portion of them has been in the church twenty-six years? What portion has been in the church fifteen years? But a small part. How many of those before me were personally acquainted with Joseph, our Prophet? I can see now and then one, you can pick up one here and another there; but the most of the people now inhabiting this Territory never beheld the face of our Prophet; even quite a portion of this congregation never beheld his face. All this I consider.

But few of this congregation have been assembled together more than a very few years, to receive and be benefitted with the teachings from the fountain head, directly from the Living Oracles.

How long have they been gathered? Some one year, some two years, and some five or six years; and I can only pick out a few, in this congregation, who were acquainted with the Prophet.

I could pick out a few in this assembly who have been here seven or eight years.

You who understand the process of preparing mortar, know that it ought to lay a certain time before it is in the best condition for use. Now suppose that our workmen should work over a portion and prepare it for use, and when it is rightly tempered, suppose some one should throw into the mixture a large quantity of unslaked lime, this would at once destroy its cementing quality, and you would have to work it all over and over again. This is precisely what we have to do with this people; when a new batch is mixed with the lime and sand which were prepared ten days ago, before it is fit for use it has to be worked all over again with the ingredients and proportions that were used to make the first.

Some think this rather hard, but they have to be worked over, because they are in the batch. Again they are in the mill, and like the potter's clay which Bro. Kimball uses for a figure, they have got to be ground over and worked on the table, until they are made perfectly pliable and in readiness to be put on the wheel, to be turned into vessels of honor.

Now suppose, when it is in this good state, that somebody should throw in a batch of unworked clay, it would spoil the lot, and the potter would have to work it all over; the clay that was prepared has to be worked over with the unprepared.

This principle makes many feel sore, and some are starting for the States and some for California, because they will not be worked over so much, and we cannot set a guard over the mill to keep the new clay from being thrown in.

You may say that that is my business; no, it is my business to throw in the new clay and work it over and over, and to use the wire to draw from the lamp any material that would obstruct the potter from preparing a vessel unto honor.

I do not wish you to think that I chastise good men and good women; chastisements do not belong to them, but we have some unruly people here, those who know the law of God but will not abide it. They have to be talked to; and we have to keep talking to them, and talking to them, until by and by they will forsake their evils and turn round and become good people, or take up their line of march and leave us.

I have reflected much upon the true character of mankind, pertaining to the gospel of salvation, and more particularly in reference to the character of that portion of mankind that is here in the capacity in which we now are. How hard it is for people to see and understand things as they are. I allude, in my remarks, to this people who do reflect, and who profess to believe in a Supreme Being, the Creator of the heavens and the earth; who have professed, by their acts, that God has spoken in the last days, that unto us he Has revealed his will; that he has given unto us the oracles of divine truth, the gospel of life and salvation, with the privilege of making sure unto ourselves eternal life; this is the people I am now preaching to, and unto whom I wish to address my few remarks.

How slow many of us are to believe the things of God, O! how slow! How many men and women can I find here who place implicit confidence in their God! Perhaps you might wish an explanation with regard to the term I here make use of. I will acknowledge my inability to explain, to the fullest extent, what I regard as implicit confidence in our God; the reason of this is the ten thousand opinions that people have.

If I were to urge that we ought to have implicit confidence in the power and willingness of our God to sustain us by doing everything for us, that would cut the thread of my own faith, it would run counter to many of my ideas in regard to the dealings of the Almighty with the human family. On the other hand, how much confidence shall I have in God? One says, "I have no confidence in him, any further than what I can see, hear, and understand. I have no confidence that wheat will grow here, unless I put it into the ground; or that I will have food to eat, unless I take the proper steps for raising it, or purchase it from those that have it." Both of these points are true in part, but the minds of the people are more or less beclouded.

To explain how much confidence we should have in God, were I using a term to suit myself, I should say implicit confidence. I have faith in my God, and that faith corresponds with the works I produce. I have no confidence in faith without works. Shall I explain this? I do not think I can fully present the idea to your understanding, but I will a portion of it, and to do so, I will refer to a circumstance that transpired in Nauvoo. A President of the Elder's Quorum, old Father Baker, was called upon to visit a very sick woman, a Sister in the church. They sent for him to lay hands upon her. It was a very sickly time, and there was scarcely a person to attend upon the sick, for nearly all were afflicted. Father Baker was one of those tenacious, ignorant, self-willed, over-righteous Elders; and when he went into the house he inquired what the woman wanted. She told him that he wished him to lay hands upon her. Father Baker saw a teapot on the coals, and supposed that there was tea in it, and immediately turned upon his heels, saying, "God don't want me to lay hands on those who do not keep the word of wisdom," and he went out. He did not know whether the teapot contained catnip, pennyroyal, or some other mild herb, and he did not wait for anyone to tell him. That class of people are ignorant and over-righteous, and they are not in the true line, by any means. You may go to some people here and ask them what ails them, and they will answer, "I don't know; but we feel a dreadful distress in the stomach, and in the back; we feel all out of order, and we wish you to lay hands upon us." "Have you used any remedies?" "No." We wish the elders to lay hands upon us, and we have faith that we shall be healed." That is very inconsistent according to my faith. If we are sick and ask the Lord to heal us, and to do all us that is necessary to be done, according to my understanding of the gospel of salvation I might as well ask the Lord to cause my wheat and corn to grow without my ploughing the ground and casting in the seed. It appears consistent to me to apply every remedy that comes within the range of my knowledge, and to ask my Father in heaven, in the name of Jesus Christ, to sanctify that application to the healing of my body, to another this may appear inconsistent.

If a person afflicted with a cancer should come to me and ask me to heal him, I would rather go to the grave-yard and try to raise a dead person, comparatively speaking. But suppose we were travelling in the mountains, and all that we had or could get, in the shape of nourishment, was a little venison, and one or two were taken sick, without anything in the world in the shape of healing medicine within our reach, what should we do? According to my faith, ask the Lord Almighty to send an angel to heal the sick. This is our privilege when so situated that we cannot get anything to help ourselves. Then the Lord and his servants can do all. But it is my duty to do, when I have it in my power. Many people are unwilling to do one thing for themselves, in case of sickness, but ask God to do it all.

A portion of our community have so much confidence in God, even men and women in this city, that if you put in their possession five bushels of wheat, they will dispose of it and trust in God for their food for a year to come. To me this is inconsistent; I know nothing about the consistency of such confidence in God. But to me it is consistent for the poor man, or woman, that has been gleaning wheat, and has saved five or ten bushels, to lay it up for a time of need; though I understand that some of them are trying to sell it. Poor men and women who have had to beg for the last six months, and who have had nothing but what they obtained through charity, but who have now obtained a few bushels of wheat, are ready to sell it for something of no intrinsic worth, trusting in God to provide for them. This is inconsistent to me.

How shall I present consistent faith and religion, so that you may comprehend the subject? I will do my best, and leave the event with God. I believe, according to my understanding of the principles of eternal truth, that I should have implicit faith in our God; and when we are where we have no help for ourselves in the case of diseases that we have the right to ask the Father in the name of Jesus, to administer by his power and heal the sick, and I am sure it will be done to those who have implicit confidence in him.

Again, in regard to food, implicit faith and confidence in God is for you and I to do everything we can to sustain and preserve ourselves; and the community that works together, heart and hand, to accomplish this, their efforts will be like the efforts of one man. The past year was a hard one for us with regard to provisions, but I never had one faltering feeling in reference to this community's suffering, provided all have had understood their religion and lived it. Some few understand their religion and live it; others make a profession, without understanding their religion, and do not live it; consequently there has been a lack of union of effort to sustain ourselves, which has made it very hard for the few.

Suppose that we had done our best and had not raised one bushel of grain this year, I have confidence enough in my God to believe that we could stay here, and not starve to death. If all our cattle had died through the severity of the past winter, if the insects had cut off all our crops, if we still proved faithful to our God and to our religion, I have confidence to believe that the Lord would send manna and flocks of quails to us. But he will not do this, if we murmur, and are neglectful and disunited.

Not having breadstuff nor manna, if we are cut off from those resources, from our provisions, the Lord can fill these mountains and valleys with antelope, mountain sheep, elk, deer and other animals; he can cause the buffalo to take a stampede on the east side of the Rocky Mountains and fill these mountains and valleys with beef; I have just that confidence in my God. I have confidence enough to believe that if we had not raised our own provisions this year, and had have proved true and faithful to our God and to our religion, that the Lord would have given us a little bread, even though he should have to put it in the minds of the people in the States to go to California and Oregon, and to load their wagons with sugar, flour, and everything needed, more than they could consume, and cause them to leave their superabundance here, as some did a great quantity of clothing, dried fruit, tools, and various other useful articles, in 1849, the first season that large emigrating companies passed through this valley to California. I could then buy a vest for twenty-five cents, that would now sell here for two or three dollars; and coats could be bought for a dollar each, such as are now selling for fifteen dollars.

This is my confidence in my God. I am no more concerned about this people's suffering unto death, than I am concerned about the sun's falling out of its orbit and ceasing to shine on this earth again. I know that we should have that confidance in God; this has been my experience, I have been led into this confidence by the miraculous providences of God. My implicit confidence in God causes me to husband every iota of property he gives me; I will take the best care of my farm, I will prepare my ground as well as I can, and put in the best seed I have got, and trust in God for the result, for it is the Lord that gives the increase.

I will illustrate by relating a circumstance which occurred this summer. A certain brother sowed a field with wheat, and he has been afraid, and afraid, all summer, about the water, saying, "when shall we get the water? We shall quit farming, for I am tired of it." I said to him, it is God that gives the increase, and it is for us to do the best we can; and if there is no water for the grain, he is close by and is careful to give the increase, when it is necessary. This brother had sown five or six acres; and the straw was so short that a portion of the crop had to be pulled, and when thrashed, he had over one hundred and seventy bushels of wheat.

The Lord wishes to show this people, that he is close by, that he walks in our midst daily, and we know but little about him; yet he intends to train us until we find out. This year, I think, gives us a positive manifestation of the hand of our God in giving the increase. I do not know that any person can cavil upon that question any more, and say that it is all in accordance with natural philosophy, as the world term it.

Natural philosophy, as you and I understand it, would not have produced one bushel of grain, where we now have ten. I would like the philosopher to make it appear how the trees have grown so luxuriant this year, with so little water. Have you ever before seen the weeds flourish so finely on these dry hills? Look at your grain; though much of it is so low that you have to pull it, can you tell what it is that has caused the kernels to be so numerous and plump? Let the natural philosopher tell the reason, if he can; he cannot do it.

After all that has been said and done, after he has led this people so long, do you not perceive that there is a lack of confidence in our God? Can you perceive it in yourselves? You may ask, "Bro. Brigham, do you perceive it in yourself?" I do, I can see that I yet lack confidence, to some extent, in him whom I trust. Why? Because I have not the power, in consequence of that which the fall has brought upon me. I have just told you that I have no lack of confidence in the Lord's sustaining this people—I never had one shadow of doubt on that point. But through the power of fallen nature, something rises up within me, at times, that measurably draws a dividing line between my interests and the interest of my Father in heaven; something that makes my interest and the interests of my Father in heaven not precisely one.

I know that we should feel and understand, as far as possible, as far as fallen nature will let us, as far as we can get faith and knowledge to understand ourselves, that the interest of that God whom we serve is our interest, and that we have no other neither in time nor in eternity.

If I have an interest in any object, but should not live to enjoy that object, you can perceive that it is cut off from me, and that my interest and my hopes are gone, so far as worldly things are concerned. If anyone has an interest in an object that is changeable in anything of an earthly nature, and is separated from it, it can be of but little use to him, and should cease to be an object of great care, or desire. Any object or interest that we have, aside from our Father in heaven, will be taken from us, and though we may seem to enjoy it here, in eternity we shall be deprived of it.

Consequently, I say that we have no true interest, only conjointly with our Father in heaven. We are his children, his sons and daughters, and this should not be a mystery to this people, even though there are many who have been gathered with us a short time. He is the God and Father of our spirits; he devised the plan that produced our tabernacles, the houses for our spirits to dwell in.

My interests are with His, yours are there, and if you, seemingly, have any interest anywhere else, it will be severed from you, and you never enjoy it. Still there is a feeling which has come by the fall, by transgression, in the heart of every person, that his interest is individually to himself; and that if he serves God, or does anything for him, it is for some being for whom he has no particular concern. This is our mistaken idea; for everything you do, every act you perform, every duty incumbent upon you, is solely for your interest in God, and nowhere else, neither can it be.

When you promote His interest, you promote your own; and when you promote your own interest, you promote His. When you gain a title of glory, or any good thing, you gain this to your Father in heaven as well as to yourself, And every object you are in pursuit of, should be that that will pertain to eternity, and let time take care of itself only be sure to do the duties pertaining to it.

If we can see and realize that our interests are hid in God, and that we can have no interence anywhere else, perhaps we can learn obediest faster than we now do. Many think, "well, I am an independent character; I do not like to be counseled, governed, or controlled; I wish to do as I please." That feeling, in a degree is in every person.

There is an impulse in man that separates his interest from the interest of his God, and the interest of our Father in heaven from ours.

This must be learned so that you can discern it in yourselves, so that you can apply all your efforts, every act of your lives, to the interest that pertains to your eternal exaltation.

If in this world we had every object that we could desire, of an earthly nature, do you not understand that death would separate us from it? You can understand that naturally. A man possessing thrones, kingdoms and power, leaves them when laid in the grave.

Now suppose that you let the common mode of reflection and practise reach into eternal things, upon the same principle you would have a selfish interest in eternity; you would there be to yourself, by yourself, and for yourself, regardless of everyother creature. But the truth is, you are not going to have a separate kingdom; I am not going to have a separate kingdom; it is not our prerogative to have it on this earth.

If you have a kingdom and a dominion here, it must be concentrated in the head; if we are ever prepared for an eternal exaltation, we must be concentrated in the head of the eternal Godhead. Why? Because everything else is opposed to that kingdom, and the heir of that kingdom will keep up the warfare with that opposing power until death is destroyed, and him that hath the power of it; not annihilated, but sent back to native element. He will never cease to contend with the opposite power, with that power that contends against the heir of this earth; consequently, if we fancy that we have an independent interest here and in the world to come, we shall fail in getting any of it.

Your interest must be concentrated in the head of the earth, and all of our interest must centre in the Godhead in eternity, and there is no durable interest in anyother channel.

I desire the people to consider whether they have any faltering in their feelings, any misgivings, or lack of confidence in their God. If they have, they should seek, with all the spirit and power they are in possession of until they can understand the principle of eternity and eternal exaltation, and then apply the actions of their lives to these principles, that they may be prepared to enjoy that which their hearts now anticipate and desire. If we will learn these things correctly and advance, and advance, and continue to advance, though the new clay may be continually thrown into the mill, we will bring it to the same pliability as the old, much sooner than if it was ground alone; for the old clay soon mixes with the new and makes the whole lump passive. If we apply our hearts to these things, we shall soon learn to have our interests one here on the earth.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 6, 1856.

The Mormon Question—Prospect of Settlement.

HITHERTO the Mormon question has been a knot of difficulties, the solution of which puzzled the most astute of our statesmen. On one hand was the abomination of polygamy, attended by unchristian practices, calling for suppression. On the other was the great doctrine of "Squatter Sovereignty," which embodied and enunciated the right of all Mormons as well as other folks, to do as they pleased, and which our politicians did not know how to get around. The difficulty of the subject consisted in the conflict of a plain divine law with the morbid excrescence on a new political theory. The boldest of our political doctors have ever showed a disposition to give the disease a wide berth; and during this season of repose, the Mormons and the Mormon question have grown to proportions absolutely formidable. Brigham Young is a man of as much real power as the Czar of Russia, or the Sultan of Turkey. His kingdom is imperium in imperio. He issues thunders from the Salt Lake home, which, notwithstanding their ludicrousness, cause trembling in the halls of government. His burley bravadoes excite our risibility, but they are full of threatenings which make our rulers uneasy, for, should the Mormons rally around their high priest, in resistance to the federal authority, it would take the whole army to reduce them to submission.

But there is a prospect of the solution of the matter at last. It promises to solve itself. There is discord at Salt Lake. The women are "whining," as brother Brigham tells us in his last pronunciamento. They are becoming discontented with their lot, and are beginning to exhibit symptoms of revolt against their hard lot. Having awoke from the pleasing delusion which promised "heaven right off," as the consequence of being sealed to the brothers, they are clamoring for a change of condition. They are tired of being one of many wives, and fasist, each one, on the exclusive monopoly of her lord's affections. Brigham threatens terrible things in case the disaffected females do not cease whining and reconcile themselves to their lot. But it won't do. The high priest will soon have the women buzzing around his ears like a swarm of hornets, and when once they commence buzzing, the Book of Mormon will not furnish a recipe for quieting them. Brigham may preach and fulminate against them as much as possible, but the storm will go on till the women of Salt Lake shall have conquered the right to a whole husband.

The above, taken from the St. Louis Evening News, is a fair specimen of the reasoning of many of our would-be politicians when talking about Mormonism. In regard to the wife part we have very little to say, as we entered into all the details pertaining to this matter last week; all we have to say on this subject at present is, if these very pure, virtuous, holy and chaste monogamists can keep peace in their own families and take care of their own wives, we will venture the experiment of attending to our own affairs.

Why is it that Mormonism is such a puzzle and presents such a knot of difficulties to our astute statesmen? Simply, that in their consummate ardor and in the exhuberant overflowing of their pure patriotic zeal—after regulating and keeping things so very quiet and orderly in their own State Legislatures and Congress, as well as in the various States and Territories — not having enough to do to employ their active, comprehensive, intellectual energies, they go to work to regulate that which is none of their business; and, wishing to perform works of supererogation, rush into every folly and vagary. They manufacture lies, and are horrified at the terrible details. They conjure up phantoms, and fight the ghastly monsters. They dilate upon events and circumstances that never existed but in the fitful imagination of their own bewildered brains; and, after frequent onslaughts on the sprits, gray and blue, and the vagaries of their own manufacture—after the roaring cannon, the crash of arms, and the din of war, these astute statesmen are wonderfully puzzled that there is neither the groans of the dying, the bodies of the dead, nor the cries of the wounded. What have they been fighting? Simply nothing but vagaries of their own creation. Can they point out one solitary instance of the Mormons acting unconstitutionally? We are at their defiance to do so. Whence, then, this uproar? Will these pure, patriotic, astute statesmen's cause stand the same test? We aver it will not; and we stand as prepared to prove that theirs will not, as that ours will; and we will take either the north or south side of the question. Is there any wonder, then, that such astute gentlemen are puzzled? We could teach them in a few words a lesson very easily learned, and which, if attended to, would save them a great deal of unnecessary trouble—gentlemen, "mind your own business." For the want of attention to this very small and apparently indifferent precept, you have made a Pandemonium of Congress, a Sebastopol of Kansas, and introduced discord, anarchy and confusion throughout the United States—arraying north and south against each other in the most acrimonious, revengeful and hostile array; threatening the disruption of the Union, and the destruction and downfall of one of the best constructed governments and the noblest country that ever graced the footstool of God; and though not possessing the intelligence to build, to unite, to cement, to govern—frantic and infuriate, like Samson you would only exert your strength to raze this noble edifice to the ground, even if you yourselves perish in the ruins and clothe yourselves with eternal infamy. We say, cease your insensate folly! hands off, and mind your own business. That man is a poor fool, who only exerts his strength to destroy himself.

The News informs us that "the difficulty of the subject consisted in the conflict of a plain, divine law, with the morbid expression of a new political theory," viz., squatter or popular sovereignty. Now, the difficulty of the subject consists in no such thing. There is no such conflict in existence. Polygamy is in accordance with (and not "in conflict of") a plain, divine law; and we are prepared to prove it, not only from the Bible, but from the writings of sundry orthodox divines of the christian profession. In regard to squatter or popular sovereignty being a "new political doctrine," why, it is as old as Adam; and before these gentlemen again talk about either, we would counsel them to study the foundation of empires, the strength of nations, the rights of man, American politics, and the Bible.

In regard to the power of Brigham Young, we are free to admit that he has power. Why have not our rulers the same? Simply, that notwithstanding their profundity of knowledge and great astuteness, they don't know as much. They would like the power, if they could get it; it is not for lack of a disposition on their part. Brigham Young, Mormon though he be, could teach them a lesson that would do them good; he, at least, has learned to mind his own business. He neither has Vigilance Committees, nor requires the services of Judge Lynch. He does not send out either Walkers or Kinneys; and he has no particular need of either Sharpe's rifles or border ruffians.

We have one word of advice to our astute statesmen: learn a lesson from a leaf of Brigham Young's book, and it will save you an infinite amount of trouble.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN—Having, at the termination of your last meeting, been invited, as a Mormon, to deliver the opening address to-day, and thereby to take the affirmative in the discussion, I present myself before you on the strength of that invitation, and for that purpose, humbly claiming your attention and indulgence while I present in my own plain and simple manner my view of the question before you for discussion.

I came to this Hall last Sunday to be a listener to the pro and con., and only took part in the debate from your courteous invitations to the Mormons to speak on the subject—favoring my own sense of obligation to remove any misconception of the faith I profess, or misconception of the true position of the inhabitants of Utah, from being carried to the minds of those whose object to me seemed to be the attainment of truth. Not having the acquaintance of any gentleman belonging to this society, I was entirely ignorant of the religious and political faiths of those whom I addressed, and on this my information to-day is but little advanced; I have, however, reason to believe, from seeing connected with last Sunday's meeting, the name of the "Society of Liberals," that I address gentlemen who profess a more liberal attachment to truth than to creeds, a higher appreciation of sincerity and honesty than respect for prescribed forms and rituals of worship. As I do not, therefore, anticipate that the influence of any creed will prevail in this meeting, I earnestly trust that no speaker will forget the subject and allow the time to pass unprofitably, but that everyone will set forth the best that can be said for and against Utah's admission into the Union.

Experience has, no doubt, taught us all that more frequently much of the division and discord among men arises from misconception of each other's minds than from the difficulty of understanding the truth and the right of the subject in controversy. That I may not, therefore, labor under any misapprehension of the nature of the debate, I beg to call attention to the wording of the question, and, if not out of order, should like to be informed by the gentleman in the chair, if Slavery and Polygamy are the institutions referred to?

[CHAIRMAN—Yes, sir.]

I apprehended that Polygamy and Slavery were the institutions referred to. Now, gentlemen, I have before me a copy of the Constitution of the proposed State of Deseret, in which there is no provision made for the one or the other. The inhabitants of Utah, no doubt, are acquainted with the interests of parties, north and south, on the augmentation, to one side or the other, of free or of slave States; but with them, so far as their own direct action is concerned, it is still a question for the future. So far, therefore, as the debate was expected to turn on this question, the thing does not exist in fact, neither has it yet, that I have seen, been intimated by the inhabitants of Utah that they have predilections for or against the institutions of the South. As American citizens, they reserve, however, the right to adopt or create whatever institutions on which they are unanimously agreed, keeping in harmony with the spirit and the letter of the glorious Constitution, of which every American has reason to be proud. Polygamy, the other so-called institution of Utah, is, gentlemen, permit me to say, no institution of Utah. There is great misapprehension on this subject throughout the States. The inhabitants of Utah who have, by the united and assiduous labors of hand and head, brought that Territory to what it now is, have never presumed to make for themselves laws which might in any manner infringe upon the political, social or religious rights of others that may yet share with them the soil of Utah or Deseret. Because the majority of the present inhabitants are of one religious faith, some, from want of better information, have supposed that the legislature there had passed laws favorable to the protection and to the development of that religion; but no such measures have been adopted nor once desired. On that subject the Constitution of the proposed State of Deseret is very explicit. Section 3, Article II. reads as follows:

"All men shall have a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences; and the General Assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or to disturb any person in his religious worship or sentiments, and all persons demeaning themselves peaceably, as good members of this State, shall be equally under the protection of the laws; and no subordination or preference of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law, nor shall any religious test be ever required for any office of trust under this Constitution."

So far, then, as legislation on religion is concerned in Utah, it amounts to a solemn declaration that religion is between the creature and the Creator, and the law shall protect every person in the free exercise thereof; and, gentlemen, permit me to say, that every sentiment for the liberty of conscience finds a hearty response in the bosoms of the inhabitants of that Territory—a response which takes birth in the horrid cruelties they themselves have suffered in the almost unremitting persecution they had for years endured at the hands of their pious christian friends, whose love for the salvation of Mormon souls made itself manifest in the desolation they spread around Mormon habitations.

In Utah at the present moment there are many persons of different faiths. True, the majority are of one faith, and very probably the majority of the inhabitants of that Territory will, for some time to come, be of one faith; but it yet may be otherwise. The present inhabitants, therefore, who framed that Constitution from which I have made that extract, have probably had in view the contingencies which might yet arise to change the majority to the minority, as well as now to proclaim to the wide world that where they dwell conscience shall be slave to none—worship the unrestricted homage of the heart—and obedience to every law, human or divine, shall there be protected so long as it does not infringe upon the rights of others.

Marriage is, by the inhabitants of Utah and by religious people generally, regarded as a Divine institution, and as religionists have in the interpretation of Divine law arrived at very different conclusions, and are by their conscience bound to adhere to those conclusions in the fear of God, the Utonians have decreed that in consequence thereof no law shall be by them established favorable to the one or prejudicial to the other. Monogamists, Shakers and Polygamists may therefore exist in Utah, each following his own faith, and in the words of the glorious Constitution for which your fathers fought, struggled and died—be protected in the free exercise thereof.

The opposition to Utah's admission into the Union is, with some gentlemen here, I presume, as it is with many others, an opposition founded on the mistaken notion that Polygamy is an Institution established by law. My object thus far has, therefore, been to remove any misunderstanding on the true position of the inhabitants of that Territory which now presents itself at the doors of Congress for admission as a Sovereign State.

It being, then, understood that neither Polygamy nor Slavery are institutions of Utah, the real question now is: Shall citizens of the United States be deprived of their political rights because by their religious faith, sincere, sober and conscientious, they differ in their family organizations and marriage relationship to others, who for the moment "have the will and power to make their fellow mourn"? Gentlemen, divest yourselves of prejudice, look at the facts, and I apprehend no other conclusion than what is favorable to Utah. It may be very convenient for religious bigots who are prone to gratify a morbid feeling of revenge on those who have demasked their hypocrisy, to seek to clothe the subject with mysteries, talk about the awful what's to come, and in holy enthusiasm for their grand-mothers cloak, long for the torch and faggot, but for men, Republicans, Democrats, to be found hesitating to extend justice to the inhabitants of Utah is unworthy of the sons of noble sires who have fought for the liberty they now enjoy. Let me repeat then, gentlemen, the subject is simply: Shall one portion of the citizens of the United States deprive another portion of citizens of their political rights because of their religious faith when that faith hinders in nothing the parties from discharging their political obligations to the general government? That is the true position of the question.

It is every day more evident that the subject we now discuss is destined to become one of interest throughout the United States. Editors, religious and political, have for some time back shown that the question was upon their minds, but the greater business of the late election for the moment, cast it aside, but now that the election is next to over, Congress about to re-assemble and the Delegates of Utah ready to lay before the elect of the nation the constitution of the State of Deseret the interest becomes more apparent. Placed in a position where I have daily opportunity of seeing the press, North, South, East and West, religious and political, I can perceive that it is with no common interest that the Utah question is viewed. Gentlemen, I do not vauntingly purpose to ascribe to the inhabitants of Utah such a high position as to command the interest and attention of the great minds of this great nation, but it has probably been the experience of us all that often-times simple facts, unlooked for, out-of-the-way facts have by circumstances been clothed with an importance which have tested the soundness of principles, institutions, the justice and potency of governments. In this view, then, the question for discussion here to-day is destined to occupy the attention not only of the leading spirits of the nation in a legislative capacity, but it is destined to become a subject of interest in distant nations, onlookers, as they are, at the working of the greatest Democratic government that ever existed. Our pious friends make short work of it—the inhabitants of Utah are by them, without remorse, consigned to a warm climate, beyond the ken of our geographical information, and the Territory to utter desolation, but sober, earnest politicians look for this subject to test the great principle of Democracy—the Sovereignty of the people.

Let each person in this hall enquire in his own mind how much he is prepared to allow another to dictate to him in what he shall believe and what he shall practice, and that measure is precisely that which the inhabitants of Utah intend to accept—and no more, they shall never bow.

"Should Utah be admitted as a State"? I answer yes! and no logical reason can be urged to the contrary, when the true character of that people is known. Believing in the power of circumstances and the fortunes of Providence I shall not be lavish in my praises. I shall not therefore say that as patriotic a people as the Utonians cannot be found—all the citizens of the United States have not yet been tested; but unhesitatingly I do say that a more patriotic people is not within the limits of this great nation. The Fourth of July never passes in Utah without a demonstration from the heart that shews the deep reverence of the people for July 1776. The light of that morning is saluted by the roar of cannon, and sleep, by the warm impulses of a gladsome heart, flies, the spell that bound all in silence is broken; men, women and children hastily prepare to honor the auspicious day. The men who signed the Declaration of Independence are not by them merely eulogised as patriots, but with their peculiar views in an over-ruling Providence in the great events of nations, the inhabitants of Utah reverence their memories as men inspired by the God of Justice, Washington and the heroes of the revolution are ranked with their greatest favorites, the Constitution the offspring of inspiration. Such are their sentiments, what has been their conduct? No man can point to one instance of their disaffection to the General Government.

Had I time I should be glad to instance acts of devotion that would satisfy the most incredulous, if any such be here, that the inhabitants of that Territory are a people religiously attached to the Constitution of their country, and are determined that though they may have to suffer through prejudice that no ground of accusation to justify that shall be found in their conduct. One instance may not be untimely—When in Indian Territory, living in tents and wagons, helpless and sick generally, the government, of which Mr. Polk was President, made a demand on them for 500 men, to take part in the Mexican war. Col. Kane shall relate how the demand was met:—

"The call could hardly have been more inconveniently timed. The young, and those who could best have been spared, were then away from the main body, either with pioneer companies in the van, or, their faith unannounced, seeking work and food about the north-western settlements, to support them till the return of the season for commencing emigration. The force was, therefore, to be recruited from among fathers of families, and others, whose presence it was most desirable to retain.

"There were some, too, who could not view the invitation without jealousy. They had twice been persuaded by (State) Government authorities in Illinois and Missouri, to give up their arms on some special appeals to their patriotic confidence, and had then been left to the malice of their enemies. And now they were asked, in the midst of the Indian country, to surrender over five hundred of their best men for a war march of thousands of miles to California, without the hope of return till after the conquest of that country. Could they view such a proposition with favor?

"But the feeling of country triumphed. The Union had never wronged them: 'You shall have your battalion at once, if it has to be a class of our elders,' said one, himself a ruling elder. A central 'mass meeting' for council, some harangues at the more remotely scattered camps, an American flag brought out from a storehouse of things rescued, and hoisted to the top of a tree mast, and in three days the force was reported, mustered, organized, and ready to march."

The "Ruling Elder" alluded to was His Excellency Governor Young; of their patriotism, further need not be said.

It has been said during this debate, particularly by one gentleman, Mr. Walker, that I had dodged the question on Polygamy and Slavery, by appealing to the Constitution of the proposed State of Deseret. I beg to assure him and any others who may share his opinion that with all due deference to them the accusation has no foundation. It is already stated that Slavery did not exist in fact, neither was Polygamy an institution of Utah, but an institution of the Church, and I may here say that not only have I not "dodged" the real controversy between the inhabitants of Utah and the United States, but I can assure the gentlemen present that the Utonians have nothing to "dodge," neither do they ask any favor from Congress. They have pursued the ordinary constitutional means, adopted by all Territories, of telling the parent government that they are now ready to assume the responsibility of maintaining their own government and are willing to meet, and can meet, all the obligations which the maintainence of a free and Sovereign State imposes, but whether Congress deals justly and impartially with them or not, is a matter on which they are entirely indifferent.

I have not followed speakers into the discussion of Polygamy or into the origin of Mormonism as neither belong to the debate, I have, therefore, contented myself with simply contradicting what I know to be unfounded, and shall occupy the few minutes of my time in laying before you statements of the moral condition of that people, which now asks for admission into the Union. This I deem the more necessary as the favorable quotations from Capt. Stansbury's work, on the moral condition of that people, cited by Dr. Hull in his opening address last Sunday, have been questioned and sneered at. The writer from whom I am about to extract is Mr. S. N. Carvalho, the artist that accompanied Col. John C. Fremont in his last expedition across the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Carvalho's work was evidently published with the view of helping Mr. Fremont to the White House: he, therefore, takes great care to relate the worst he could against Polygamy, and thereby strengthen the plank of the Republican platform inimical to that institution. His opinions and his theology are to me no more than mine is probably to him, but his statements of what he witnessed favorable to the Mormons may, I think, considering his oft expressed hostility to their faith, be received without fear. I shall therefore begin with the artist's account of Great Salt Lake City on the eve of his departure:*

"During a residence of ten weeks in Great Salt Lake City, and my observations in all their various settlements, amongst a homogeneous population of over seventy-five thousand inhabitants, it is worthy of record, that I never heard any obscene or improper language; never saw a man drunk; never had my attention called to the exhibition of vice of any sort. There are no gambling houses, grog shops, or buildings of ill-fame, in all their settlements. They preach morality in their churches and from their stands, and what is as strange as it is true, the people practise it, and religiously believe their salvation depends on fulfilling the behests of the religion they have adopted."

"Towards the end of April, 1854, about ten days previous to the departure of Governor Brigham Young, on his annual visit to the southern settlement of Utah, tickets of invitation to a grand ball, were issued in his name. I had the honor to receive one of them. * *

"At the appointed hour I made my appearance, chaperoned by Gov. Young, who gave me a general introduction. A larger collection of fairer and more beautiful women I never saw in one room. All of them were dressed in white muslin; some with pink, and others with blue sashes. Flowers were the only ornaments in the hair. The utmost order and strictest decorum prevailed. Polkas and waltzing were not danced; country dances, cotillions, quadrilles, etc., were permitted. * * *

"After several rounds of dancing, a march was played by the band, and a procession formed. I conducted my first partner to the supper room, where I partook of a fine entertainment at the Governor's table. There must have been at least two hundred ladies present, and about one hundred gentlemen. I returned to my quarters at twelve o'clock, most favorably impressed with the exhibition of public society among the Mormons."

Having lived with a gentleman who was of the faith and practice of Abraham the "Father of the Faithful," Mr. Carvalho describes a little what he witnessed:

"Ezra T. Benson, one of the apostles with whom I boarded, has four wives, three are living in the same house with him, and one in a small house, a couple of rods away. He has children by all of them, and they all seemed to live very harmoniously together. I had several conversations with these ladies on the spiritual wife system, they submit to it because they implicitly believe it to be necessary to their salvation. They argue, "Cannot a father love six children? why can he not love six wives?" I must say, that during a sojourn of near three months in Salt Lake City, I never observed the slightest indications of improper conduct, or lightness, amongst them—neither by conversation or otherwise. Their young ladies are modest, and unassuming, while their matrons are sedate and stately."

On leaving for California, the artist joined the cavalcade of His Excellency Governor Young, while on his southern tour at the time he went to treat with Walker, the Indian Chief, who at that time was hostile to the whites. He says:

"I have often stopped at the top of some commanding eminence, to see this immense cavalcade, lengthened out over a mile winding leisurely along the side of a mountain, or trotting blithely in the hollow of some of the beautiful vall-ys through which we passed, to the sound of musical choruses from the whole party, sometimes ending with

"I never know what joy was,
Till I became a Mormon," to the tune of "bonny breastknots." Certainly, a more joyous, happy, free-from-care, and good-hearted people, I never sojourned among."

Of an extreme southern settlement where the Mormons have had relation with the Indians, he reports their treatment of the latter:

"Since the settlement of Cedar City, they have become more civilized; many of them live within the walls of the city. The Mormons have supplied them with clothes, and proper food. The Indians have become of very great assistance in ploughing and reaping. Several acres of ground have been placed under cultivation, and appropriated for the use of the Indians. They are now acquiring the arts of agriculture and husbandry.

"A large number of them have been baptized into the Mormon faith.

"It is really astonishing to see the sacrifices and personal privations to which these people willingly, and uncomplainingly submit. Hundreds of families who formerly lived more comfortably at home, are now contented with a mud hut, twelve to fifteen feet square, with a single room, in which they cook, eat and sleep. In some of them I have seen eight persons, including children, yet they are perfectly happy in the plan of salvation held out to them by the religion they have embraced."

Of the confidence of the people of Utah in their Governor and his reception at Parowan, he says:

"As soon as our party were descried from the observatory at Parowan, the authorities of the town, and numbers of other gentlemen, came out to welcome the arrival of his excellency, Governor Young; and I never could have imagined the deep idolatry with which he is almost worshipped. There is no aristocracy or presuming upon position about the Governor; he is emphatically one of the people: the boys call him Brother Brigham, and the elders also call him Brother Brigham. They place implicit confidence in him, and if he were to say he wanted a mountain cut through, instantly every man capable of bearing a pick-axe would commence the work, without asking any questions, or entertaining expectation of payment for services.

"He must certainly possess some extraordinary qualities, which could inspire such unlimited confidence in two hundred thousand Mormons."

Gentlemen, I have endeavored to show the real question for the United States to consider, it is not as is said shall we tolerate the establishment of Polygamy by law in one of our Territories, but shall any portion of the United States presume to dictate to the people of a Territory on their religous faith and the free exercise thereof. I have likewise laid before you a sketch of that people by no friendly hand, I ask you, then, are that people not in every particular entitled to all the immunities of citizenship in a State capacity?

*[Being limited to time in the debate two of the extracts from Mr. Carvalho's work here published have been since added.—S.]

Hon. J. M. Bernhisel.

AFTER a short visit to his friends in the city of Gotham, this gentleman returned to Washington, last Friday.

Departure.

The Destiny of Utah.

Just at present, we hear a great deal about Mormon increase and immigration; and we are only surprised that the California journals do not advert more frequently to the subject, since to the people of the Pacific coast this filling up of the fertile valleys of Utah, and the lower counties of California, by a polluted and retrograding race, is a question of far greater importance than to us of the Atlantic cities. Nevertheless, though far less liable to the baneful influences growing out of the peculiar social predilections of the Mormons, it is only the journalists of our city who attempt to combat this influence. While Great Salt Lake City is the focus of this pernicious "ism," the fact must be apparent to all who watch its progress, that it is gradually advancing to the shores of the Pacific. In San Bernardino the faith of the martyred Smith has its thousands of zealous converts, while in many of the most central agricultural districts of El Dorado State, we hear of numerous settlements of this sect, whose dogmas are so glaringly subversive of all public virtue and domestic purity. Now, while it is the fashion to treat with fraternizing kindness the prospects of this brutalized and conglomerate race, we do not hesitate to avow our desire for the total extinction of what we must regard as a gigantic system of insult to the Creator, and a fearful example of impurity to hold up to the civilized world. In fact, we deem it a duty which the men of our country owe to Society, to crush out every vestige of this portentious evil, and thus ensure the welfare of our people, and keep the fair fame of the Union beyond reproach.

The above is from the New York Courier of Nov. 30th: of the writer, be he editor, assistant, pious-contributor or penny-a-liner connected with that sheet we knew nothing till we read that paragraph. "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh" is a true sentiment. The man who could, without receiving any direct opposition from the people he attacks, deliberately, calmly write for circulation among thousands of promiscuous readers, that he is not ashamed to avow his "desire" for the "total extinction" of "a conglomerate race" of some hundreds of thousands of men, women and children, unconvicted of the violation of any law of the land where they dwell or where they have ever dwelt; men and women whose only misfortune is to have thinking brains that spurn the false, mean, contemptible, foolish, rotten systems of man-made religions; men and women with hearts courageous enough to face the sneers, the frowns, the threats of this giddy, easy of virtue generation and follow the unpopular laws of an unpopular God, we say the man who—in the 19th century, in the great Republic of North America, the Kingdom of no despot, the land of the peoples of every nation, of every color and of every creed—could proclaim his readiness, his desire "to crush out" of existence any people for their conscientious adherence to a Faith that has been honored by the wisest, the bravest and the best of men shews the emptiness of his brain and the blackness of his heart. Who is he? Let the Courier give up his name. Though it may be little interesting to the public to know who calumniates the Mormons, who recommends another edition of the St. Bartholomew massacre of 1572, it may be useful for them to know that when the editor of the Courier or some one of his acquaintance who wrote that article—the offspring of a foolish head or fiendish heart—is present that he requires attention. Let his name be published that his friends may feel his pockets and see that his pence neither reaches the price of a halter for his own neck nor a knife for his enemies. He is unsafe, he should never be permitted to roam without a keeper. Let the editor of the Courier see to publishing his name, or his own is likely to be associated henceforth with lunacy or Inquisition.

Corruption of Pupils in Public Schools.

About a week since, one of the monitors of the first class in a Public School for Girls, at the North End, says the Boston Times of the 20th ult., happened by chance to find a written note on the floor of the school, which she read, and was so astonished at the contents that she handed it to her female teacher. The note was written by one of the female pupils to another in the same class, and revealed (in language too indecent for publication) the astonishing intelligence that the writer of the note and five of her schoolmates, girls between the ages of 12 and 15 years, had been seduced, and were in the daily habit of visiting certain places and indulging in the lewdest conduct. The disclosure was most startling to the teacher, and she instantly sent for the mothers of the depraved girls. As soon as they arrived an examination was made, and the girls made full confession of everything, disclosing the particulars in regard to the manner in which they were first induced to corrupt themselves, and the motives for continuing. As the girls related the deeds which they had performed, the anguish of their mothers was most terrible.

The six girls were subsequently taken to their homes, where further and separate investigations were made, and it was pretty satisfactorily ascertained that five of the girls had been introduced to their debauchees, and influenced by the sixth girl, who, we are, informed, has been reared among vile associates, and is naturally inclined to vice. This girl has been dismissed from the school.

The girls state that they have been paid about $2 per week for their disgusting prostitution. If three men, two of them doing business on Hanover street, and the third a hackman in the employ of one of the other two, are to go unpunished, after having corrupted six school girls, by presents of trinkets and money, and attempted to ruin as many more, then we had better open the doors of our penal institutions and relapse into that semi-civilized state when men avenge their own injuries without the assistance or interposition of law.

We have the names of the three beastly scoundrels, and if no legal steps are taken to expose them, we shall assume the responsibility of doing it, in order that the public may know who to point the finger of scorn at.

We have since seen in a Boston paper that the three outrageous scoundrels called "men" have been brought before the Police Court of that city, and bound over for trial in sums of $2500, $2000 and $1200. We shall watch this case and see what value the Puritan city of a hundred churches places upon chastity. We don't wish to infer that the christianity of that holy pious city is to be held responsible for those outrageous crimes, but what would the whole Christian world have said if these abominations had been committed in Utah? Press and pulpit would have belched out "vile Mormonism down with Mormonism," and a crusade to Utah been proposed by a thousand tongues. Had it been in Utah instead of Boston, the scoundrels would never have asked for bail, and dollars could never have satisfied the father or the brother for the ruination for time and eternity of one of Adam's children. The Boston editor knowing that the horror of that crime was so benumbed in this generation, and aware of the corrupting influence of Hanover Street gold, was apprehensive that they might escape exposure and promised to do so on his own responsibility—good man, no doubt, and deserves credit for the courage of letting "the public know who to point the finger of scorn at." We shall expect that, should he ever hear of the Mormons pointing something else at such scoundrels, if any such ever get the length of Utah, he will remind his religious friends and cotemporaries that, "that semi-civilized state when men avenge injuries" to wife or daughter is nearer the mark than that kid-glove-scented-civilization in which even childish virtue can be prostituted for "presents of trinkets and money;" but when by accident the prostitution is known, the vipers caught—unredeemed bail can release, or at the worst, they may cultivate patience for a year or two in "penal institutions," during which they may read, ponder over yellow covered romances to better qualify them for their infernal abominations.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

CONGRESS has again met, and members are tooth and nail on niggerism and Kansas. Mr. Whitfield's claim to represent that Territory, has brought on the old discussion to which everything else has to give way. The members not having all taken their seats, the votes have been nearly balanced so that up to the present, it is doubtful whether he shall find a seat among the honorable gentlemen or be rejected again. President Pierce has sent in his annual and farewell Message to the Senators and Representatives. It is a document that will well repay the trouble of reading it: having no room this week, we are obliged to delay its publication till next week. Nearly the first half of the Message is devoted to the agitation of the North against Slavery. The situation of the United States is favorably reported—prosperity at home and respect abroad. Relations with New Granada are the most unsatisfactory of all and likely to lead to difficulties. Kansas is reported at peace, and praise is due to Gov. Geary and the military. Strong charges of fomenting difficulties in that Territory and of circulating exaggerated reports, for political effect, are placed at the door of the shriekers for freedom. In his Message Mr. P. says that he has not recognized Nicaragua as he is not certain whether Rivas at Leon, or Walker at Granada, is President. With the Message many find fault, and many praise it.

The spiritualists of New York city have lost a brilliant light in the death of Mr. Fairbank, assistant editor of Life Illustrated. For some time back he seems to have been more favored with intelligence from the world of spirits than his brain could well manage. To some of his friends he had lately let out great secrets about something great to be done for the conversion of the heathen Gothamites that were less favored with spiritual faith than himself, and shewed other indications of aberration of the mind. In the beginning of the week he precipitated himself from the window of his lodgings, and met almost immediate death. Mr. Fairbank seems to have been an intelligent gentleman, and much respected by all who knew him. We understand that a few Sundays ago Spiritualism was divided into two camps, and have now separate services—the religious spiritualists and the sceptical spiritualists.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE last mail from Europe brings advices from England up to the 22d Nov., but nothing of very great importance. Some slight insurrection is reported to have disturbed the tranquility of Malaga on the 18th ult. The garrison of that town was attacked by the insurgents in which five of the latter were killed and seven men of the former wounded. The Spanish authorities speedily extinguished the flame by imprisoning largely the would-be republicans and executing a few others. From Constantinople there, is no change of news. Efforts to induce the Sultan to order the dismissal of the English fleet from the Black Sea had been ineffectual. In addition to what is already there an English frigate had arrived at Constantinople and other ships were expected. The Neapolitan question has been quiet for some little time, but in a day or two would budge one way or the other, worse or better. The disquieting rumors respecting the instability of the Western Alliance were gradually changing for peace. The British government has ordered a steamer to be fitted out under efficient officers to examine thoroughly the coast of Ireland and Newfoundland, and to sound across the Atlantic between these parts to ascertain the best place for laying and landing the submarine telegraph cable. The government has further agreed to guarantee four per cent interest per annum, on the whole capital required to manufacture and lay down the cable between Newfoundland and Ireland. Contracts for the whole extent of the Atlantic cable were signed in London on Tuesday, the 19th ult. It is all to be completed and placed on board of two steamers ready for sea on or before the 31st of May next, and by the 4th of July next it is confidently expected that Great Britain and the United States will be in telegraphic communication.

Arrivals.

California.

CALIFORNIA stands where it did in geography and morals. No mail arrives without news of some atrocious murder or murders. The last mail adds to the ordinary list, an account of a big fight among rival Celestials in the interior. The accounts of the battle, so called, are so varied that extract is out of the question. They did fight, however, in their old country style on the one side, and on the other side the warfare was a little more modernized, rifles and swords being added instead of handspikes and war-clubs. The gong seems to have collected a large audience to witness the "tug of war," and Jonathan thinks did no small service in the battle, as there seemed more sound than fighting. The number of warriors are variously reported at from 1000 to 2000, and the dead within half a dozen. The wrath of one side has been expended in cutting up a rival chief into a thousand pieces.

Mr. Herbert was bitterly attacked by Mr. King, of the Bulletin, as a double murderer and a disgrace to California, whereupon Mr. Herbert wrote his card to the public, attacking, as bitterly, Mr. King. A duel was to be, but was not. Why—is for next mail. Mr. H. has returned to Congress.

Alton, Ill. Nov. 18, 1856.

Prest. Taylor—Dear Bro: I feel it my duty to comply with your request to the Elders to write to you occasionally of the prospect of the work of God, in their respective localities, I should have written before this, but have been waiting for others to do so who are better qualified for the task. Having been much interested in the correspondence published in The Mormon for some time past, I am constrained to contribute my mite though humble it may be, for I rejoice to know that there are a great number of our publications perused by many who have not the opportunity of mingling with the Saints in our scattered condition. How oft do we hear the remark made in our fellowship meetings that it is good to hear our brethren bear their testimony, and though we all know this by experience, we cannot fully appreciate the privilege, till deprived of it. By availing ourselves of your kindness in publishing correspondence, we may assist in encouraging and edifying some of our less favored bretheren, and permit me to say to those who may read this, that by a liberal circulation of The Mormon, in neighborhoods where we know some who did run well for a season, but who by reason of the darkness of their minds have turned from the truth, we place within their reach the stimulus to retrace their steps. I know of several instances where The Mormon and the Luminary have spread their light, the spark has been fanned, the fire rekindled, covenants and vows renewed, the law of God respected and the gathering hosts of Israel increased in numbers. Who is there amongst us that has tasted of the word of life, that does not feel his heart swell, his spirit burn when he reads of the progress of truth, and beholds the unfolding of the sure word of prophecy, as it is brought before him in the husky voice of Time, the uprising of misrule and discord, and the utter inadequacy of the powers that be, to give peace to this distracted earth! Oh! then, my bretheren, let us not only publish our "plain unvarnished tale," but let us work with an assiduity equal to the importance that we attach to light and truth and send them to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Wherever I meet an individual from parts of the country unknown to me, my plan is to enquire for some one in their neighborhood (and I seldom fail to obtain a name) who is a reading man, fond of the news; and on the first opportunity to procure a copy of The Mormon, or send my own to him. There are a great number of persons who never know anything about Mormonism only as presented to them through a venal press or the pulpit and by both misrepresented. Of this fact I was most forcibly reminded but yesterday, through a gentleman very innocently enquireing in my presence, "What do the Mormons believe? What are their doctrines? for I cannot find out by my papers! I take, said, he the N. Y. Herald and other Eastern papers and they are all the time "fighting the Mormons" but I'll be d——d if I can tell what for." I forwarded him a copy of The Mormon and referred him to the 4th page for a brief synopsis of what the Mormons believe. I fear my letter is growing too long, but would just say we were honored with the presence of Elders Erastus Snow & Geo. A. Smith last Sunday and, taking the countenances of their audience as an index, their words were as "apples of silver in pictures of gold." The fervent glowing appeal of Elder Snow, in the afternoon, to the Saints to "seek first the kingdom of God" will not soon be forgotten. I should like to detail but fear you will think I am a spinner. In the evening Elder Geo. A. Smith so completely demolished the authority of Christendom and her hirelings, in a way peculiar to himself that he put every body present (and there was quite a number not of us) in good humor with him and themselves.

Yours truly, Henry J. Hudson.

[Let others take the hint of Bro. Hudson and send on The Mormon it will make a stir.—Ed.

Correspondence of Hon. Geo. A. Smith.

Cincinnati Ohio Nov. 29, 1856.

Elder Taylor—Dear Sir: Elder Snow and myself took leave of Elder P. P. Pratt yesterday at St. Louis and arrived here this morning, Elder Pratt purposes remaining in and around St. Louis a few weeks; we shall pass a few days with the Saints here and proceed further East. Elder James Gemmel passed St. Louis a few days since for Texas from Fort Kearney. He reports that a heavy snow had fallen the last of October between that Fort and Fort Laramie. By the government teamsters the snow is reported to be up to the wagon, rather a big story unless it has drifted. He met Mr. Heywood and Mr. Garrish at the Blue. Mr. Tim Goodale was engaged to pilot them through a southern route to Fort Bridger. It was doubtful whether the Utah mail would go further than Kearney this fall.

Yours &c., Geo. A. Smith.

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 1.

Save fourteen absentees, all the members of the Senate were present.

The usual committee was appointed to wait on the President, and inform him that a quorum of each house had assembled, and were ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make.

A similar committee of the House acted in conjunction with that of the Senate, and in each branch a report was made that the President would communicate his annual message to-morrow to Congress about noon.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

About two hundred members of the House were present.

Mr. Hodges, of Vermont, and Messrs. Allen and Morrison, of Illinois, to fill vacancies, were qualified by taking the oath to support the Constitution.

Mr. Phelps of Mo. presented the credentials of Mr. Whitfield, and moved that he be sworn in as delegate from Kansas on the first Monday of October.

Mr. Phelps asked that the usual course be pursued.

Mr. Grow of Pa. objected, and with this began the renewal of the Kansas contest of last session, Mr. Phelps contending that as Mr. Whitfield was the only delegate from Kansas that he should be sworn in, and his credentials, if contested, sent to the Committee on Elections. Mr. Grow protested, and attacked the government, for its armed interference in the usual style of last session charges.

The question was then put—shall Mr. Whitfield be sworn in? Decided in the negative by 97 against 101.

Mr. Grow moved a re-consideration of the vote, and to lay that motion on the table.

Unsuccessful motions were here made to adjourn and for a call of the House, &c., by the friends of Mr. Whitfield, in order, as it was said, to postpone action on Mr. Grow's motion until the arrival of absentees.

At four o'clock various gentlemen paired off, hunger and fatigue serving as excuses.

The remainder of the evening was passed in summoning absentees to the bar of the House, who were ordered to be discharged from custody on the payment of the fee of the Sergeant-at-Arms, two dollars each. The members seemed full of fun and frolic, making every kind of motion for amusement. At a quarter past seven a motion to adjourn prevailed by one majority.

SENATE. Dec. 2.

The message of the President was received and read.

After the reading of the message a debate sprung up incidental to the motion to print it and the accompanying documents.

Mr. Hale attacked the position of the President, denying altogether the charges which imputed to the majority of the people of eleven States want of fidelity to constitutional obligations, and a love of the Union. He said it was untrue that they sought to usurp the power of this government.

Mr. Brown thanked the President for his fidelity in sounding the voice of warning against sectional strife, and took occasion to charge the supporters of Fremont with the intention of abolishing slavery everywhere; and in this connection alluded to the views of Messrs. Seward and Wilson.

With the Republicans justifying their course, condemning the implications against them in the Message and the Democrats sustaining President Pierce, the hours passed away and the Senate adjourned without the question on printing being taken.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House received the Message of the President, but being engaged in discussing the Whitfield case, the reading of it was postponed.

The House was engaged all the session on the subject of Whitfield's admission, doing nothing but making motions to adjourn the debate, call the house and to which Mr. Grow would not yield his motion to go on and finish his subject, and after all they adjourned without disposing of the question.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 3, 1856.

Mr. Bayard, of Del., announced in an appropriate and feeling manner the death of his late colleague, Mr. Clayton.

Messrs. Crittenden, Cass and Seward severally spoke in terms of eulogy of the deceased, alluding to his eminent public services, and as one of the remaining few who for the last quarter of a century have controlled the legislation of the country.

The usual resolutions of respect were adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The question pending was on Mr. Grow's motion to re-consider the vote by which the House refused to let Mr. Whitfield be sworn as delegate from Kansas, and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, made an unsuccessful motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union; and Mr. Cobb, of Ga., failed to obtain unanimous consent to draw for the choice of seats.

The friends of Mr. Whitfield made various motions, which were negatively decided by yea and nay votes, with a view to postponing action on Mr. Whitfield's case till next week. These proceedings were interrupted by the reception of a message from the Senate, announcing the death of Mr. Clayton.

Mr. Cullen, of Del., pronounced a panegyric and submitted resolutions, which were adopted in honor of the memory of the deceased, and to pay the customary respect. Adjourned.

FOR THE MORMON.

Happiness.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

We often find that those who are enjoying all the advantages of wealth are unhappy, weary of life or blase, which circumstance is either arising from the want of a cultivated mind, from early debaucheries, or from ill-health. I knew persons who would have parted with all their riches, if they only had received in return that happiness and serenity of mind which is so often found in the humble cottage of the poor. Hence, do not envy the delusive splendor of the rich, misery and wretchedness are frequently hovering about in their splendid mansions, with red-painted cheeks, and covered with all the glitter of fashionable pomp.

The society of objects of affection contributes a great deal to our Happiness. To know that we have friends, that there are beings around us who sympathise with us, who laugh when we laugh, and mourn when we mourn, who endeavor to surround us with the pure atmosphere of unalloyed affection, imparts unto us that Happiness, visions of which have sweetened so often our dreams. In associating with objects of endearment, the mind receives that buoyancy and hilarity so necessary in our every-day life. A man may be, as it were, carried off far away by the whirlwind of business, harassing cares and sorrows, the natural concomitants of every enterprise may assail him, but on returning to the bosom of his family or friends, all those gloomy pictures which had arisen before his mind during the dull business hours of the day, are chased away by the exhilerating rays of affection. At home, he finds at last those who watch with anxiety every emotion of his, ready to administer to him the sweet balm of sympathy and consolation; at home, he finds those beings with whom he can give vent to his feelings. There is no one, however close and reserved he may generally appear, how great a disciplinarian of his emotions he may be, but what has moments, during which he is longing to unburthen the inner-man, to reveal his feelings; and happy is he, then, when those are near him whose friendship entitles them to his confidence. But he who is without objects of endearment, who has no-one whom he can show the secret pulsations of his heart, feels lost; the long journey of life appears to him a dreary one: he looks upon himself as a link of a broken chain, gloominess overcomes him; in fact, he is liable to all those mental aberrations arising from a depression of spirits.

What can compensate for the loss of domestic and social Happiness? What can pacify the storm of feelings arising from the fathomless depths of the inner man when alone in the silent hours of a dreary long night? Imagine yourself to dwell in a magnificent mansion occupying the most gorgeous apartments, possess the magic wand of a Crœsus and have everything to satisfy the craving appetite of your senses, surround yourself with a host of parasites and sycophants, you may drown for a time the silent voice of the heart, but when those hypocritical companions are gone and you are left to yourself and your reflections, then, with new force, feelings of loneliness arise: you look at the splendid crimson hanging of your noble mansion and gaze wistfully on the brilliant objects of your luxury the memories of past happy hours cluster around you wishing that you could transform those cold marble statues of yours into living beings, in order to hear from their stony lips a word of friendship and consolation, everything appears to you dreary and desolate: you feel that you are alone—alone in the vast arena of humanity, and like the shipwrecked mariner who stands on a lonely rock in the midst of Neptune's mysterious empire, you stand by yourself, resting on the rock of your own energy, against which the furious waves of the ocean of life are dashing and breaking, and you envy the poor laborer from whose house the merry laughter of his happy family is ringing in your ears.

One of the most important psychological phenomena, is man's constant desire of being busy, of doing something: this is owing to the continual activeness of the soul. In every engagement or employment, the mind takes the lead and is uppermost active; it gives the delineation of the execution of an idea, it makes the plan, and the physical powers carry it out; and thus the body becomes subservient to the will of the mind. Only watch a child, and you will see by its actions how much its mind is working, you will also notice at the same time, the more engaged a child is in playing, the more quiet, the happier it is. Inasmuch as the nature of the soul requires a continual activeness, it is evident that this propensity like every other improves with the physical and mental developement of man; consequently a grown-up person requires a larger field of operations than a child, in order to satisfy the appetite of the soul. From the above, we infer, that employment is the necessary food for the mind, and that without it, the intellectual functions become morbid; and that the more engaged a person is, the happier, the more comfortable he feels; and the less he has to do, the less he feels well, and an entire deprivation of employment leads to insanity. Hence, those pursuits are the most beneficial to ourselves, and conducive of the greatest Happiness, which engage us the most.

In order to realize a certain amount of Happiness, it is requisite to produce a wise and judicious course of life, viz., to do everything a propos. Before you do a thing, or previous to your entering the fields of experience, balance nicely the bearings and probable results of your intended action. Know that every question has two sides; manifest and cultivate the principle of foresight and forethought, and then you will leave no gaps or weak points relative to a certain plan, and your actions will have salutary effects If you are desirous of deriving Happiness from a wise conduct, think much and speak little; think twice before you speak once, and when you speak, speak well, so that your words may be the true reflex of a beautiful and intelligent soul; never speak of what you are going to do, but do it; never tell people you are wise and circumspect, but show it by your actions. It is a correct principle, that a talkative person who broaches on every little matter of his in a lengthy way, cannot be possessed of great capacities, because such a being exercises more his tongue than the intellect. A thinker speaks little and deliberately, so as not to expose himself.

What else is conducive of Happiness? An orderly, systematic course of life. Be systematic in everything; that is to say, everything according to certain order and at a certain time, and put everything in a certain place, and be assured, that will accomplish more than by being disorderly. By cultivating the principle of systematic actions, you will be able to give an account of everything relative to your sphere, you will find your things by night and by day in a moment, you will be prepared for every emergency. Be systematic in your occupations, devote a certain amount of time to labor or work, let the sterner duties of life be counterbalanced by innocent, intellectual pleasures, and then you will fully realize the blessing of recreation, without experiencing the ennui of idlers. But what greater amount of human Happiness can be produced than by the performance of a noble action and good health? The consciousness of having acted nobly, before God and man, no matter whether we reap the results of gratitude or not, is a source of lasting Happiness unto us, which causes us to look with satisfaction at the past, and with new hope in the future.

The possesson of health enables us to enjoy extensively the blessings of a bountiful Nature, but the least disorder of our system is a source of inconvenience and pain for us. Health imparts unto us an elasticity and hilarity of spirits; ill-health makes us cross, peevish and disagreeable to ourselves and those around us. Therefore, let us do everything for the promotion of health, that we may reap the fruits of that Happiness, which is growing in the fields of intelligence, and leading to a correct knowledge of divine perfection.

DISCOURSE OF PRESIDENT YOUNG.

The principles of eternity and eternal exaltation are of no use to us, unless they are brought down to our capacities so that we practise them in our lives. We must learn the principles of government, must learn ourselves, the eternal government of our God, the interest that the Father has here on the earth and the interest that we have; then we will place our interest with the interest of our Father and God, and will have no self-interest, no interest only in his kingdom that is set up on the earth; then we will begin and apply these principles in our lives.

How shall we apply them? We must learn that we have not one farthing's worth of anything in heaven, earth, or hell, not even our own being.

We have been brought forth on this earth, organized for the purpose of giving us an opportunity of proving ourselves worthy to possess something by and bye.

We make farms, build fine houses, get possessions around us, and these we call ours, when not a dime's worth of them is either yours or mine. This is what we must learn. I have much property in my possession, and we use the terms "My farm, my house, my cattle, my horses, my carriage," &c., but the fact is, we do not truly own anything; we never did, and never will, until many long ages after this. We seemingly have property; we have gold and silver in our possession, and houses, and lands, and goods, &c. These things we are accustomed to call ours, but that is for the want of understanding.

Every man and woman has got to feel that not one farthing of anything in their possession is rightfully theirs, in the strict sense of ownership. When we learn this lesson, where will be my interest and my effort? I do not own anything—it is my Father's. How came I by my possessions? His providence has thrown them into my care; he has appointed me a steward over them, and I am his servant, his steward, his hired man, one with whom he has placed certain property in charge for the time being, that is, pertaining to the things of this world.

Says one, "it was preached thirty years ago, that nothing belongs to us, and if I have a thousand dollars, to at once give it all to the poor." That is your enthusiasm and ignorance. Were you to make an equal distribution of property to-day, one year would not pass before there would be as great an inequality as now.

How could you ever get a people equal with regard to their possessions? They never can be, no more than they can be in the appearance of their faces.

Are we equal? Yes. Wherein? We are equal in the interest of eternal things, in our God, not aside from him. We behold church property, and not one farthing of it is yours or mine. Of the possessions that are called mine, my individual property, not a dollar's worth is mine; and of all that you seem to possess, not a dollar's worth is yours. Did you ever organize a tree, gold, silver, or any other kind of metal, or any other natural production? No, you have not yet attained to that power, and it will be ages before you do.

Who owns all the elements with which we are commanded and permitted to operate? The Lord, and we are stewards over them. It is not for me to take the Lord's property placed under my charge and wantonly distribute it; I must do with it as He tells me. In my stewardship I am not to be guided by the mere whims of human folly, by those who are more ignorant than I am—not by the lesser power, but by the superior and wiser.

Those who are in favor of an equality in property say that that is the doctrine taught in the New Testament. True, the Saviour said to the young man, "Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me," in order to try him and prove whether he had faith or not. In the days of the Apostles, the Brethren sold their possessions and laid them at the Apostles' feet. And where did many of those Brethren go to? To naught, to confusion and destruction. Could those Apostles keep the church together on those principles? No. Could they build up the kingdom of those principles? No, they never could. Many of those persons were good men, but they were filled with enthusiasm, insomuch that if they owned a little possession they would place it at the feet of the Apostles' Will such a course sustain the kingdom? No. Did it, in the days of the Apostles? No. Such a policy would be the ruin of this people, and scatter them to the four winds. We are to be guided by superior knowledge—by a higher influence and power.

The superior is not to be directed by the inferior, consequently you need not ask me to throw that which the Lord has put into my hands to the four winds. If, by industrious habits and honorable deal, you obtain thousands or millions, little or much, it is your duty to use all that you have put in your possession, as judiciously as you have knowledge to build up the kingdom of God on the earth. Let this people equalize their means, and it would be one of the greatest injuries that could be done to them. During the past season those who lived their religion acted upon the principles thereof by extending the hand of charity and benevolence to the poor, freely distributing and distributing their flour and other provisions, yet I am fearful that that mode was an injury instead of a real good, although it was designed for good.

Many poor people who received flour of the brethren, if they have a bushel of wheat will sell it in the stores for that which will do them no good. My object is to accomplish the greatest good to this people. If I can by my wisdom and the wisdom of my brethren, by the wisdom that the Lord gives unto us, get this people into a situation in whichthey can actually sustain themselves and help their neighbors, it will be one of the greatest temporal blessings that can be conferred upon them. If you wish to place persons in a backsliding condition, make them idle and dilatory in temporal things, even though they may be good saints in other respects. If the whole of this people can be put in a situation to take care of themselves, individually and collectively, it will save a great many from apostatizing, and be productive of much good. I have got to wait for the Lord to dictate from day to day, and from time to time, as to what particular course to pursue for the accomplishment of so desirable a result.

Suppose that we should say that we intend to sell flour at ten dollars per hundred, would that make the people take care of themselves and their grain? It is not so very material what flour costs, nor whether the brethren sell it for three or ten cents a pound, as it is whether each will strive to secure and economise his own provisions. If you can establish the selling price of flour at one dollar a hundred, or even at thirty cents, there are some will sell all they have before night, and then beg their living of their neighbors. What course shall we pursue to produce the greatest good? We have the gospel and the ordinances of salvation, and if we can get the people to do that which will produce the greatest good, then we shall further promote the interests of the kingdom of God on the earth.

I do not like to have the Saints, those who profess to be Saints, get such extravagant confidence in our God that they will not do one thing to provide for the body, but omit securing provision enough to sustain themselves, and say, "O, I shall have as long as there are any means, or wheat, or flour; I know that Bro. Brigham will not see me suffer. Mr. storekeeper, take the little I have and give me some ribbons for it, or a nice dress, for I want the best I can get, and I know that Bro. Brigham will not let me suffer." Will this course produce good to the people? Or are they so ignorant that they do not know what course to pursue?

The grand difficulty with this community is simply this—their interest is not one. When you will have your interests concentrated in one, then you will work jointly, and we shall not have to scold and find fault as much as we are now required to do. Somebody ought to be reproved here to-day, for some of our farmers are bringing in wheat and selling it to the stores for a dollar and a half a bushel. Would they sell it that low to the poor? No, they would not, if the poor had money to pay for it. If this is the best way, the most conducive of the greatest good to this community, all right; but I cannot see any good resulting from it. I can see no good accruing to this community in maintaining a divided interest; our interest must be one throughout, in order to produce the good we desire. Many are distrustful in the providences of God, they profess faith enough to have the Lord extract a cancer from their flesh, or drive a fever from them, though they would not do a single thing for themselves; yet if they have a few bushels of grain, or five dollars, and you touch that, you touch the apple of their eye. You will run counter to the feelings of "here is my individual family; my individual substance, my individual habitation, and my individual property that I have gathered together; it is all my own—it is not yours." I know that there is great liberality among this people, and on the other hand there is much liberality like this, though I do not know that I can fully explain it to you, but I will try. A few years ago we wished to drive off the cattle not needed here, so as to leave the feed for milch cows, and there was not a man who was not heart and hand for the policy. When the time came to gather up the cattle, every man said to his neighbor, "this is one of the best possible plans for our stock, now you drive off your cattle;" so each man said to his neighbor, and thought to himself "mine will have a better chance. And in the matter of fencing, each one says to his neighbor, "you put up a good fence round your garden and herd your cattle, at the same time intending to let his own run at large. These few instances explain the feelings and conduct of some, and in what manner they are liberal. I again say that I do not wish any to take chastisement but those who need it, though most of the people are generally so righteous and liberal that they give over every part of it to their neighbors; they consider that none of it belongs to them. Some are so liberal that they will pick up my cattle on the range and butcher them, saying, "there is nothing here belonging to Brother Brigham, nor to anybody else—it is the Lord's and I will have a little beef."

I wish the people to understand that they have no interest from the Lord our God. The moment you have a divided interest, that moment you sever yourselves from eternal principles.

It is reported that many are going away: I say, gentlemen and ladies, you who wish to go to California, or to the Sates, go in welcome; I had rather you would go than stay. I wish everyone to go who prefers doing so, and if they go like gentlemen, they go with my best feelings; but if they go like rascals and knaves, they cannot have them. I have never requested but two things of those who leave—namely, to pay their debts and not steal; that is all that I have required of them. Go about your business, for I would rather you would go than stay.

The moment a person decides to leave this people, he is cut off from every object that is durable for time and eternity, and I have told you the reason why. Everything that is opposed to God and his son Jesus Christ, to the celestial kingdom and to celestial laws, those celestial laws and beings will hold warfare with, until every particle of the opposite is turned back to its native element, though it should take millions and millions of ages to accomplish it. Christ will never cease the warfare, until he destroys death and him that hath the power of it. Every possession and object of affection will be taken from those who forsake the truth, and their identity and existence will eventually cease. "That is strange doctrine." No matter, they have not an object which they can place their hands or affections upon what will not vanish and pass away That is the course and will be the tendency of every man and woman, where they decide to leave this kingdom.

They are welcome to go, and to stay where they go; I heartily wish that a great many would go, such as I can point out. Like old Lorenzo Dow, when he was trying to detect the person who had stolen an axe, he said that he could throw the stone which he had carried into the pulpit and hit the man that stole the axe; he handled the stone as though he would throw it, and the guilty person dodged, when he said that is the man. So I could throw and hit a great many that I wish to go.

I say again you that wish to go, go in peace and we would like to have you go; and those that wish to come here we like to have them come and be saints, and if they would they would stay; but if not, I like to have them leave, no matter whether they belong to the church or not.

My soul feels hallelujah, it exults in God, that he has planted this people in a place that is not desired by the wicked; for if the wicked come here they do not wish to stay, no matter how well they are treated, and I thank the Lord for it; and I want hard times, so that every person that does not wish to stay, for the sake of his religion, will leave. This is a good place to make saints, and it is a good place for saints to live; it is a place the Lord has appointed, and we shall stay here until he tells us to go somewhere else.

All I ask of the saints is to live their religion, serve their God, and recollect that their interest should be in Him and nowhere else; that the inferior must be controlled by the superior, and our efforts and affections all be concentrated in one, namely, in building up the kingdom of God to the destruction of wickedness; and may God help us to do it, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ: Amen.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation! Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit; "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés!" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu, la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

AIR—"Partant pour la Syrie."

The Gospel standard high is raised
On Zion's sacred shore,
Rejoice ye Saints our God be praised,
Satan's long reign is o'er:
The bright Millennium dawns at last,
The faithful shall be free,
Christ will reward their trials past
With immortality.

Earth to proud lovelliness restored
Shall echo back the strains
From thousand heavenly choirs pour'd,
When Christ in triumph reigns:
Refulgent in the beams of love
Their Saviour's presence given,
The Saints on earth with Saints above,
Shall share the rest of heaven.

MESSAGE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Fellow citizens of the Senate, and House of Representatives:

The Constitution requires that the President shall, from time to time, not only recommend to the consideration of Congress such measures as he may judge necessary and expedient, but also that he shall give information to them of the state of the Union. To do this fully involves exposition of all matters in the actual condition of the country, domestic or foreign, which essentially concern the general welfare. While performing his constitutional duty in this respect, the President does not speak merely to express personal convictions, but as the Executive Minister of the Government, enabled by his position, and called upon by his official obligations, to scan with an impartial eye the interests of the whole, and of every part of the United States.

Of the condition of the domestic interests of the Union, its agriculture, mines, manufactures, navigation and commerce, it is necessary only to say that the internal prosperity of the country, its continuous and steady advancement in wealth and population, and in private as well as public well-being, attest the wisdom of our institutions, and the predominant spirit of intelligence and patriotism which, notwithstanding occasional irregularities of opinion or action, resulting from popular freedom, has distinguished and characterized the people of America.

In the brief interval between the termination of the last and the commencement of the present session of Congress, the public mind has been occupied with the care of selecting, for another constitutional term, the President and Vice-President of the United States.

The determination of the persons, who are of right or contingently to preside over the administration of the Government is, under our system, committed to the States and the people. We appeal to them, by their voice pronounced in the forms of law, to call whomsoever they will to the high post of Chief Magistrate.

And thus it is that as the Senators represent the respective States of the Union, and the members of the House of Representatives the several constituencies of each State, so the President represents the aggregate population of the United States. Their election of him is the explicit and solemn act of the sole sovereign authority of the Union.

It is impossible to misapprehend the great principles which, by their recent political action, the people of the United States have sanctioned and announced.

They have asserted the constitutional equality of each and all of the States of the Union as States; they have affirmed the constitutional equality of each and all of the citizens of the United States, as citizens, whatever their religion, wherever their birth, or their residence; they have maintained the inviolability of the constitutional rights of the different sections of the Union; and they have proclaimed their devoted and unalterable attachment to the Union and to the Constitution, as objects of interest superior to all subjects of local or sectional controversy, as the safeguard of the rights of all, as the spirit and the essence of the liberty, peace, and greatness of the Republic.

In doing this, they have, at the same time, emphatically condemned the idea of organizing in these United States more geographical parties; of marshaling in hostile array toward each other the different parts of the country, North or South, East or West.

Schemes of this nature, fraught with incalculable mischief, and which the considerate sense of the people has rejected, could have had countenance in no part of the country, had they not been disguised by suggestions plausible in appearance, acting upon an excited state of the public mind, induced by causes temporary in their character, and it is to be hoped transient in their influence.

Perfect liberty of association for political objects and the widest scope of discussion, are the received and ordinary conditions of government in our country. Our institutions, framed in the spirit of confidence in the intelligence and integrity of the people, do not forbid citizens, either individually or associated together, to attack by writing, speech, or any other methods short of physical force, the Constitution and the very existence of the Union. Under the shelter of this great liberty, and protected by the laws and usages of Government they assail, associations have been formed, in some of the States, of individuals, who, pretending to seek only to prevent the spread of the institution of slavery into the present or future inchoate States of the Union, are really inflamed with desire to change the domestic institutions of existing States. To accomplish their objects they dedicate themselves to the odious task of depreciating the Government organization which stands in their way, and of calumniating, with indiscriminate invective, not only the citizens of particular States with whose laws they find fault, but all others of their fellow citizens throughout the country who do not participate with them in their assaults upon the Constitution, framed and adopted by our fathers, and claiming for the privileges it has secured, and the blessings it has conferred, the steady support and grateful reverence of their children. They seek an object which they well know to be a revolutionary one.

They are perfectly aware that the change in the relative condition of the white and black races in the slaveholding States, which they would promote, is beyond their lawful authority; that to them it is a foreign object; that it cannot be effected by any peaceful instrumentality of theirs; that for them, and the States of which they are citizens, the only path to its accomplishment is through burning cities, and ravaged fields, and slaughtered populations, and all there is most terrible in foreign, complicated with civil and servile war; and that the first step in the attempt is the forcible disruption of a country embracing in its broad bosom a degree of liberty, and an amount of individual and public prosperity to which there is no parallel in history, and substituting in its place hostile governments, driven at once and inevitably into mutual devastation and fratricidal carnage, transforming the now peaceful and felicitous brotherhood into a vast permanent camp of armed men, like the rival monarchies of Europe and Asia. Well knowing that such, and such only, are the means and the consequences of their plans and purposes, they endeavor to prepare the people of the United States for civil war by doing everything in their power to deprive the Constitution and the laws of moral authority, and to undermine the fabric of the Union by appeals to passion and sectional prejudice, by indoctrinating its people with reciprocal hatred, and by educating them to stand face to face as enemies, rather than shoulder to shoulder as friends.

It is by the agency of such unwarrantable interference, foreign and domestic, that the minds of many, otherwise good citizens, have been so inflamed into the passionate condemnation of the domestic institutions of the Southern States, as at length to pass insensibly to almost equally passionate hostility toward their fellow citizens of those States, and thus finally to fall into temporary fellowship with active enemies of the Constitution. Ardently attached to liberty in the abstract, they do not stop to consider practically how the objects they would attain can be accomplished, nor to reflect that, even if the evil were as great as they deem it, they have no remedy to apply, and that it can be only aggravated by their violence and unconstitutional action. A question, which is one of the most difficult of all the problems of social institution, political economy and statesmanship, they treat with unreasonable intemperance of thought and language. Extremes beget extremes. Violent attack from the North finds its inevitable consequence in the growth of a spirit of angry defiance at the South. Thus in the progress of events we had reached that consummation which the voice of the people has now so pointedly rebuked, of the attempt of a portion of the States, by a sectional organization and movement, to usurp the control of the Government of the United States.

I confidently believe that the great body of those, who inconsiderately took this fatal step, are sincerely attached to the Constitution and the Union. They would, upon deliberation, shrink with unaffected horror from any conscious act of disunion or civil war. But they have entered into a path which leads nowhere, unless it be to civil war and disunion, and which has no other possible outlet. They have proceeded thus far in that direction in consequence of the successive stages of their progress having consisted of a series of secondary issues, each of which professed to be confined within constitutional and peaceful limits, but which attempted indirectly what few men were willing to do directly, that is, to act aggressively against the constitutional rights of the thirty-one States.

In the long series of acts of indirect aggression, the first was the strenuous agitation, by citizens of the Northern States, in Congress and out of it, of the question of negro emancipation in the Southern States.

The second step in this path of evil consisted of acts of the people of the Northern States, and in several instances of their governments, aimed to facilitate the escape of persons held in service in the Southern States, and to prevent their extradition when reclaimed according to law and in virtue of express provisions of the Constitution. To promote this object, legislative enactments and other means were adopted to take away or defeat rights, which the Constitution solemnly guaranteed. In order to nullify the then existing act of Congress concerning the extradition of fugitives from service, laws were enacted in many States forbiding their officers, under the severest penalties, to participate in the execution of any act of Congress whatever. In this way that system of harmonious co-operation between the authorities of the United States and of the several States, for the maintenance of their common institutions, which existed in the early years of the Republic, was destroyed; conflicts of jurisdiction came to be frequent; and Congress found itself compelled, for the support of the Constitution, and the vindication of its power, to authorize the appointment of new officers charged with the execution of its acts, as if they and the officers of the States were the ministers, respectively, of foreign governments in a state of mutual hostility, rather than fellow magistrates of a common country, peacefully subsisting under the protection of one well-constituted Union. Thus here, also, aggression was followed by reaction; and the attacks upon the Constitution at this point did but serve to raise up new barriers for its defence and security.

The third stage of this unhappy sectional controversy was in connection with the organization of Territorial Governments, and the admission of new States into the Union. When it was proposed to admit the State of Maine, by separation of territory from that of Massachusetts, and the State of Missouri, formed of a portion of the territory ceded by France to the United States, representatives in Congress objected to the admission of the latter, unless with conditions suited to particular views of public policy. The imposition of such a condition was successfully resisted. But, at the same period, the question was presented of imposing restrictions upon the residue of the territory ceded by France. That question was, for the time, disposed of by the adoption of a geographical line of limitation.

In this connection it should not be forgotten that France, of her own accord, resolved, or considerations of the most far-sighted sagacity, to cede Louisiana to the United States, and that accession was accepted by the United States, the latter expressly engaged that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess"—that is to say, while it remains in a territorial condition, its inhabitants are maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, with a right then to pass into the condition of States on a footing of perfect equality with the original States.

The enactment, which established the restrictive geographical line, was acquiesced in rather than approved by the States of the Union. It stood on the statute-book, however, for a number of years; and the people of the respective States acquiesced in the re-enactment of the principle as applied to the State of Texas; and it was proposed to acquiesce in its further application to the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico. But this proposition was successfully resisted by the representatives from the Northern States, who, regardless of the statute-line, insisted upon applying restriction to the new territory generally, whether lying north or south of it, thereby repealing it as a legislative compromise, and, on the part of the North, persistently violating the compact, if compact there was.

Thereupon this enactment ceased to have binding virtue in any sense, whether as respects the North or the South; and so in effect it was treated on the occasion of the admission of the State of California, and the organization of the Territories of New Mexico, Utah and Washington.

Such was the state of this question, when the time arrived for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska. In the progress of constitutional inquiry and reflection, it had now at length come to be seen clearly that Congress does not possess constitutional power to impose restrictions of this character upon any present or future State of the Union. In a long series of decisions, on the fullest argument, and after the most deliberate consideration, the Supreme Court of the United States had finally determined this point, in every form under which the question could arise, whether as affecting public or private rights—in questions of the public domain, of religion, of navigation, and of servitude.

The several States of the Union are by force of the Constitution, co-equal in domestic legislative power. Congress cannot change a law of domestic relations in the State of Maine; no more can it in the State of Missouri. Any statute which proposes to do this is a mere nullity; it takes away no right, it confers none. If it remains on the statute-book unrepealed, it remains there only as a monument of error, and a beacon of warning to the legislator and the statesman. To repeal it will be only to remove imperfection from the statutes, without affecting, either in the sense of permission or prohibition, the action of the States, or of their citizens.

Still, when the nominal restriction of this nature, already a dead letter in law, was in terms repealed by the last Congress, in a clause of the act organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, that repeal was made the occasion of a wide-spread and dangerous agitation.

It was alleged that the original enactment being a compact of perpetual moral obligation, its repeal constituted an odious breach of faith.

An act of Congress, while it remains unrepealed, more especially if it be constitutionally valid in the judgment of those public functionaries whose duty it is to pronounce on that point, is undoubtedly binding on the conscience of each good citizen of the Republic. But in what sense can it be asserted that the enactment in question was invested with perpetuity and entitled to the respect of a solemn compact? Between whom was the compact? No distinct contending powers of the Government, no separate sections of the Union, treating as such, entered into treaty stipulations on the subject. It was a mere clause of an act of Congress, and like any other controverted matter of legislation, received its final shape and was passed by compromise of the conflicting opinions or sentiments of the members of Congress. But if it had moral authority over men's consciences, to whom did this authority attach? Not to those of the North, who had repeatedly refused to confirm it by extension, and who had zealously striven to establish other and incompatible regulations upon the subject. And if, as it thus appears, the supposed compact had no obligatory force as to the North, of course it could not have had any as to the South, for all such compacts must be mutual and of reciprocal obligation.

It has not unfrequently happened that lawgivers, with undue estimation of the value of the law they give, or in the view of imparting to it peculiar strength, make it perpetual in terms; but they cannot thus bind the conscience, the judgment, and the will of those who may succeed them, invested with similar responsibilities, and clothed with equal authority. More careful investigation may prove the law to be unsound in principle. Experience may show it to be imperfect in detail and impracticable in execution. And then both reason and right combine not merely to justify, but to require its repeal.

The Constitution, supreme as it is over all the departments of the Government, legislative, executive and judicial, is open to amendment by its very terms; and Congress or the States may, in their discretion, propose amendment to it, solemn compact though it in truth is between the sovereign States of the Union. In the present instance, a political enactment, which had ceased to have legal power or authority of any kind, was repealed. The position assumed, that Congress had no moral right to enact such repeal, was strange enough, and singularly so in view of the fact that the argument came from those who openly refused obedience to existing laws of the land, having the same popular designation and quality as compromise acts—nay, more, who unequivocally disregarded and condemned the most positive and obligatory injunctions of the Constitution itself, and sought, by every means within their reach, to deprive a portion of their fellow-citizens of the equal enjoyment of those rights and privileges guaranteed alike to all by the fundamental compact of our Union.

This argument against the repeal of the statute line in question, was accompanied by another of congenial character, and equally with the former destitute of foundation in reason and truth. It was imputed that the measure originated in the conception of extending the limits of slave-labor beyond those previously assigned to it, and that such was its natural as well as its intended effect; and these baseless assumptions were made, in the Northern States, the ground of unceasing assault upon constitutional right.

The repeal in terms of a statute, which was already obsolete, and also null for unconstitutionality, could have no influence to obstruct or to promote the propagation of conflicting views of political or social institution. When the act organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska was passed, the inherent effect upon that portion of the public domain thus opened to legal settlement, was to admit settlers from all the States of the Union alike, each with his convictions of public policy and private interest, there to found in their discretion, subject to such limitations as the Constitution and acts of Congress might prescribe, new States hereafter to be admitted into the Union. It was a free field, open alike to all, whether the statute-line of assumed restriction were repealed or not. That repeal did not open to free competition of the diverse opinions and domestic institutions a field, which, without such repeal, would have been closed against them: it found that field of competition already opened, in fact and in law. All the repeal did was to relieve the statute-book of an objectionable enactment, unconstitutional in effect, and injurious in terms to a large portion of the States.

Is it the fact, that in all the unsettled regions of the United States, if emigration be left free to act in this respect for itself, without legal prohibitions on either side, slave labor will spontaneously go everywhere, in preference to free labor? Is it the fact, that the peculiar domestic institutions of the Southern States possess relatively so much of vigor, that, wheresoever an avenue is freely open to all the world, they will penetrate to the exclusion of those of the Northern States? Is it the fact that the former enjoy, compared with the latter, such irresistibly superior vitality, independent of climate, soil, and all other accidental circumstances, as to be able to produce the supposed result, in spite of the assumed moral and natural obstacles to its accomplishment, and of the more numerous population of the Northern States?

The argument of those who advocate the enactment of new laws of restriction and condemn the repeal of old ones, in effect avers that their particular views of government have no self-extending or self-sustaining power of their own, and will go nowhere unless forced by act of Congress. And if Congress do but pause for a moment in a policy of stern coercion; if it venture to try the experiment of leaving men to judge for themselves what institutions will best suit them; if it be not strained up to perpetual legislative exertion on this point; if Congress proceed thus to act in the very spirit of liberty, it is at once charged with aiming to extend slave-labor into all the new Territories of the United States.

Of course these imputations on the intentions of Congress in this respect, conceived as they were in prejudice, and disseminated in passion, are utterly destitute of any justification in the nature of things and contrary to all the fundamental doctrines and principles of civil liberty and self-government.

While, therefore, in general, the people of the Northern States have never, at any time, arrogated for the Federal Government the power to interfere directly with the domestic condition of persons in the Southern States, but on the contrary have disavowed all such intentions, and have shrunk from conspicuous affiliation with those few who pursue their fanatical objects avowedly through the contemplated means of revolutionary change of the Government and with acceptance of the necessary consequences—a civil and servile war—yet many citizens have suffered themselves to be drawn into one evanescent political issue of agitation after another, appertaining to the same set of opinions, and which subsided as rapidly as they arose when it came to be seen, as it uniformly did, that they were incompatible with the compacts of the Constitution and the existence of the Union. Thus, when the acts of some of the States to nullify the existing extradition-law imposed upon Congress the duty of passing a new one, the country was invited by agitatators to enter into party organization for its repeal; but that agitation speedily ceased by reason of the impracticability of its object. So, when the statute restriction upon the institutions of new States, by a geographical-line, had been repealed, the country was urged to demand its restoration, and that project also died almost with its birth. Then followed the cry of alarm from the North against imputed Southern encroachments; which cry sprang in reality from the spirit of revolutionary attack on the domestic institutions of the South, and, after a troubled existence of a few months has been rebuked by the voice of a patriotic people.

Of this last agitation one lamentable feature was, that it was carried on at the immediate expense of the peace and happiness of the people of the Territory of Kansas. That was made the battle-field, not so much of opposing factions or interests within itself as of the conflicting passions of the whole people of the United States. Revolutionary disorder in Kansas had its origin in projects of intervention, deliberately arranged by certain members of that Congress which enacted the law for the organization of the Territory. And when propagandist colonization of Kansas had thus been undertaken in one section of the Union, for the systematic promotion of its peculiar views of policy, there ensued, as a matter of course, a counter-action with opposite views in other sections of the Union.

In consequence of these and other incidents, many acts of disorder it is undeniable, have been perpetrated in Kansas, to the occasional interruption, rather than the permanent suspension, of regular government. Aggressive and most reprehensible incursions into the Territory were undertaken, both in the North and the South, and entered it on its northern border by the way of Iowa, as well as on the eastern by way of Missouri; and there has existed within it a state of insurrection against the constituted authorities, not without countenance from inconsiderate persons in each of the great sections of the Union. But the difficulties in that Territory have been extravagantly exaggerated for the purposes of political agitation elsewhere. The number and gravity of the acts of violence have been magnified partly by statements entirely untrue, and partly by reiterated accounts of the same rumors or facts. Thus the Territory has been seemingly filled with extreme violence, when the whole amount of such acts has not been greater than what occasionally passes before us in single cities to the regret of all good citizens, but without being regarded as of general or permanent political consequence.

Imputed irregularities in the elections had in Kansas, like occasional irregularities of the same description in the States, were beyond the sphere of action of the Executive.

But incidents of actual violence, or of organized obstruction of law, pertinaciously renewed from time to time, have been met as they occurred by such means as were available and as the circumstances required; and nothing of this character now remains to effect the general peace of the Union. The attempt of a part of the inhabitants of the Territory to erect a revolutionary government, though sedulously encouraged and supplied with pecuniary aid from active agents of disorder in some of the States, has completely failed. Bodies of armed men foreign to the Territory have been prevented from entering or compelled to leave it. Predatory bands, engaged in acts of rapine, under cover of the existing political disturbances, have been arrested or dispersed. And every well-disposed person is now enabled once more to devote himself in peace to the pursuits of prosperous industry, for the prosecution of which he undertook to participate in the settlement of the Territory.

It affords me unmingled satisfaction thus to announce the peaceful condition of things in Kansas, especially considering the means to which it was necessary to have recourse for the attainment of the end, namely, the employment of a part of the military force of the United States. The withdrawal of that force from its proper duty of defending the country against foreign foes or the savages of the frontier, to employ it for the suppression of domestic insurrection, is, when the exigency occurs, a matter of the most earnest solicitude. On this occasion of imperative necessity it has been done with the best results, and my satisfaction in the attainment of such results by such means is greatly enhanced by the consideration, that, through the wisdom and energy of the present Executive of Kansas and the prudence, firmness and vigilance of the military officers on duty there, tranquility has been restored without one drop of blood having been shed in its accomplishment by the forces of the United States.

The restoration of comparative tranquility in that Territory furnishes the means of observing calmly, and appreciating at their just value, the events which have occurred there, and the discussions of which the government of the Territory has been the subject.

We perceive that controversy concerning its future domestic institutions was inevitable; that no human prudence, no form of legislation, no wisdom on the part of Congress, could have prevented this.

It is idle to suppose that the particular provisions of their organic law were the cause of agitation. Those provisions were but the occasion, or the pretext of an agitation, which was inherent in the nature of things. Congress legislated upon the subject in such terms as were most consonant with the principle of popular sovereignty which underlies our Government. It could not have legislated otherwise without doing violence to another great principle of our institutions, the imprescriptible right of equality of the several States.

We perceive, also, that sectional interests and party passions have been the great impediment to the salutary operation of the organic principles adopted, and the chief cause of the successive disturbances in Kansas. The assumption that, because in the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, Congress abstained from imposing restraints upon them to which certain other Territories had been subject, therefore disorders occurred in the latter Territory, is emphatically contradicted by the fact that none have occurred in the former. Those disorders were not the consequence, in Kansas, of the freedom of self-government conceded to that Territory by Congress, but of unjust interference of persons not inhabitants of the Territory. Such interference, wherever it has exhibited itself, by acts of insurrectionary character, or of obstruction to processes of law, has been repelled or suppressed by all the means which the Constitution and the laws place in the hands of the Executive.

In those parts of the United States where, by reason of the inflamed state of the public mind, false rumors and misrepresentations have the greatest currency, it has been assumed that it was the duty of the Executive not only to suppress insurrectionary movements in Kansas, but also to see to the regularity of local elections. It needs little argument to show that the President has no such power. All government in the United States rests substantially upon popular election. The freedom of elections is liable to be impaired by the intrusion of unlawful votes, or the exclusion of lawful ones, by improper influences, by violence, or by fraud. But the people of the United States are themselves the all-sufficient guardians of their own rights, and to suppose that they will not remedy, in due season, any such incidents of civil freedom, is to suppose them to have ceased to be capable of self-government.

The President of the United States has not power to interpose in elections, to see to their freedom, to canvass their votes, or to pass upon their legality in the Territories any more than in the States. If he had such power the Government might be republican in form, but it would be a monarchy in fact; and if he had undertaken to exercise it in the case of Kansas, he would have been justly subject to the charge of usurpation, and of violation of the dearest rights of the people of the United States.

Unwise laws, equally with irregularities at elections, are in periods of great excitement the occasional incidents of even the freest and best political institutions. But all experience demonstrates that in a country like ours, where the right of self constitution exists in the completest form, the attempt to remedy unwise legislation by resort to revolution is totally out of place, inasmuch as existing legal institutions afford more prompt and efficacious means for the redress of wrong.

I confidently trust that now, when the peaceful condition of Kansas affords opportunity for calm reflection and wise legislation, either the legislative assembly of the Territory, or Congress, will see that no act shall remain on its statute book violative of the provisions of the Constitution; or subversive of the great objects for which that was ordained and established, and will take all other necessary steps to assure to its inhabitants the enjoyment, without obstruction or abridgement, of all the constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, as contemplated by the organic law of the Territory.

Full information in relation to recent events in this Territory, will be found in the documents communicated herewith from the Departments of State and War.

I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for particular information concerning the financial condition of the Government, and the various branches of the public service connected with the Treasury Department.

During the last fiscal year the receipts from customs were for the first time more than $64,000,000, and from all sources $73,918,141; which, with the balance on hand up to the 1st of July, 1855, made the total resources of the year amount $92,850,117. The expenditures, including $3,000,000 in execution of the treaty with Mexico, and excluding sums paid on account of the public debt, amounted to $60,172,401; and including the latter, to $72,948,792, the payment on this account having amounted to $12,776,390.

On the 4th of March, 1853, the amount of the public debt was $69,129,937. There was a subsequent increase of $2,750,000 for the debt of Texas—making a total of $71,879,937. Of this the sum of $15,525,319, including premium, has been discharged, reducing the debt to $30,737,129; all which might be paid within a year without embarrassing the public service, but being not yet due, and only redeemable at the option of the holder, cannot be pressed to payment by the government.

On examining the expenditures of the last five years, it will be seen that the average, deducting payments on account of the public debt and ten millions paid by treaty to Mexico, has been but about $48,000,000. It is believed that, under an economical administration of the government, the average expenditure for the ensuing five years will not exceed that sum, unless extraordinary occasion for its increase should occur. The acts granting bounty lands will soon have been executed, while the extension of our frontier settlements will cause a continued demand for lands and augmented receipts, probably, from that source. These considerations will justify a reduction of the revenue from customs, so as not to exceed $48,000,000 or $50,000,000. I think the exigency for such reduction is imperative, and again urge it upon the consideration of Congress.

The amount of reduction, as well as the manner of affecting it, are questions of great and general interest; it being essential to industrial enterprise and the public prosperity, as well as the dictate of obvious justice, that the burden of taxation be made to rest as equally as possible upon all classes, and all sections and interests of the country.

I have heretofore recommended to your consideration the revision of the revenue laws, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and also legislation upon some special questions affecting the business of that department, more especially the enactment of a law to punish the abstraction of official books or papers from the files of the Government; and requiring all such books and papers and all other public property to be turned over by the outgoing officer to his successor; of a law requiring disbursing officers to deposit all public money in the vaults of the Treasury or in other legal depositories, where the same are conveniently accessible; and a law to extend existing penal provisions to all persons who may become possessed of public money by deposit or otherwise, and who shall refuse or neglect, on due demand, to pay the same into the Treasury. I invite your attention anew to each of these objects.

The army during the past year has been so constantly employed against hostile Indians in various quarters, that it can scarcely be said, with propriety of language, to have been a peace establishment. Its duties have been satisfactorily performed, and we have reason to expect, as a result of the year's operations, greater security to the frontier inhabitants than has been hitherto enjoyed. Extensive combinations among the hostile Indians of the Territories of Washington and Oregon at one time threatened the devastation of the newly-formed settlements of that remote portion of the country. From recent information, we are permitted to hope that the energetic and successful operations con-

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 13, 1856.

Missionaries from Utah.

FOR some weeks back we have announced the arrival here of Elders from Utah en route for Europe. To the previous list, two names are added this week—the last of the expected this season. Those who arrived last week are still with us, having been detained a few days waiting the departure of a good sea boat for Liverpool. At the present writing they are fixing their cabin, getting the nick-nacks for the voyage, and in a few hours after our paper is in the hands of our readers they will be on the broad expanse of waters. We have enjoyed much the passing visit of our missionary brethren, and believe the Saints here and in other places in the States through which they have passed have likewise been pleased at the opportunity they have had of making their acquaintance. Although following diversified occupations at home, and as diversified in age, in experience, in disposition, and in circumstances in life, they have passed through our midst united in spirit and breathing sentiments of high respect for each other. For such men we predict prosperous missions—if they live humbly before their God and carry out the counsels of those in authority over them. We have felt in our hearts to bless them, and to invoke the protecting care of our Father and their Father to be around them while journeying over the great Atlantic, and feel assured that to this will be joined the prayers of the Saints for a prosperous voyage.

From our earliest days we have looked forward to the fulfilment of ancient prophecy—anticipating, from faith in that sure light, the time when the spirit of the Most High would be poured out upon the humble and contrite in heart, and when He would, according to promises made to the honorable fathers in Israel, set His hand to gather His people from the nations and make for Himself a kingdom, a holy nation, zealous of good works. When we contemplate the readiness that our brethren have always manifested to visit, at any sacrifice, the nations of the earth—nations sunk low in corruption and degradation—to tell them that God has spoken, that He now commands all men everywhere to turn from sin and to obey His laws—our heart bounds with gratitude to our Creator, and our hope for a reign of righteousness at no distant day becomes daily more strong. It is cheering to see our young men devoting their early days to the propagation of the gospel, and our fathers in Israel willingly leaving their families to go and bear testimony to the divinity of that work in which they have spent the strength and vigor of their lives, and that, too, at a moment when a corrupt, venal press is scattering, by millions of copies, their lies and unfounded accusations against those very men, seeking to heap obloquy upon their heads for their conscientious, unwavering faith in God, Christ, patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, charging them with crimes, the very mention of which arouses within them virtuous indignation, nerves their arms with strength and their hearts with willingness to blot out of existence, according to the law of God, the foul and corrupt transgressors. While the Saints in Utah are calumniated by press and pulpit, and all manner of evil spoken against them, the Elders from that Territory, passing through the States on their way to other nations, are astonished at the awful degradation and corruption of this christian land. The congregations of the Saints will bear us witness that scarcely an Elder has spoken in their halls but what has expressed horror at the wanton profligacy that has been before them and around them since they came this side of the Plains. It would be well for our traducers to divest themselves of the devil, and go and reside a few months or years in Utah, and then return to these christian States, and they will require no finger to point out to them that iniquity in every shape and form stalks the streets unblushingly. Ministers and editors who calumniate Utah, listen to the voice of those who come from that land, and they will tell you that while you are fulminating your edicts of extermination against those you know not in that Territory, that all the gold in the world could never hire them to spend their lives in your midst. These men cannot walk your streets without their hearts being divided with sympathy for the poor, heart-broken, corrupt, faded and painted-up women, that your gold has seduced and your christian institutions left defenceless, and indignation against the vile scoundrels who prowl about seeking whom they may prostitute—maid or mother—and those oily-tongued, long-faced, psalm-singing hypocrites, who are always canting about polygamy, while they are scarcely approachable for the stench of their own debaucheries.

Heart-broken mothers, dishonored fathers and brothers, think of the society in which you live, and the protection it affords to the seducer of daughter or sister; and when the next vile calumniator, be he hireling editor or blinded parson, belches out outrageous stories against the "horrible polygamy" of Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, and thousands of other honorable men who keep the laws of Israel's God, enquire if the beam is not in their own eye. Tell him that in Utah no man's daughter is prostituted and left a prey to shame and remorse, that virtue cannot there be purchased for trinkets, silks, satins and gold, without the seducer's blood atoning for his guilt. Tell him, and know it, all ye ends of the earth, that, while in your christian cities your inexperienced youths can purchase from the book shelf "Courtship (prostitution) Made Easy," and be initiated into all the villainies of older heads and corrupter hearts, by which they may the more easily damn themselves and ruin their victims—that the Mormons in the nations and in Utah sing at their firesides, in the fields, in the workshops, in their sacred meetings, and in their public services, the inspirations of their own hearts in the language of one of their honored poets:

"Away, away, to the mountain dell,
The valley of the free;
Where Faith has broke the tyrant's yoke
That bound fair liberty.

No famished children there shall pine,
Nor frantic mother wild,
Ere seek to take that life away
She gave her infant child!

We'll nurse the bloom of maiden love,
In chastity when young;
There faithless boast shall never prove
A jest for ribald tongue."

Polygamy, Monogamy, and a Change of Government.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.—We find the following paragraph in the Richmond Enquirer:

"It is not improbable that the condition of things in Utah will engage the attention of Congress during the approaching session. It is high time that the anomalous institutions of that Territory were corrected by the interference of the Federal Government. The abominations of polygamy, and the outrages of a theocratic despotism, cannot shelter themselves under the panoply of Squatter Sovereignty. Whenever the principles and practices of Mormonism are discussed in Congress, the country may expect rich developments. 'Twill be better than an action of crim. con."

We second the Enquirer's suggestion. The condition of things in Utah is a disgrace to the country and the age. We do not see exactly how Congress can interfere with the 'domestic institutions' of that Territory, without violating the doctrine of non-intervention, so ostentatiously put forward in the Cincinnati platform and affirmed at the late election. But that is none of our business. The Enquirer waives that obligation, and in violation of the principle urges the active intervention of Congress in regard to these matters.

We hope its advice will be heeded. The remoteness of Utah, the peculiar character of its population, and the difficulty of enforcing regulations which Congress may adopt in regard to it, constitute very serious obstacles in the way of any effective redress. But it is none the less the duty of Congress to take some action in the matter. The foul and disgusting abominations of the social life of the Mormons of Utah should, at least, be put under the ban of law. If they cannot at once be stopped, they should, at all events, be branded and outlawed. This is the first step towards reform—and it ought to be taken without delay.

IF we were not well acquainted with the rotten headedness, barefaced corruption, and unblushing hypocrisy of the scribblers for many of the journals of the present day, we should be surprised at such emanations as the above. Wallowing in lasciviousness and corruption, clinging to prostitution, as one of their most prominent christian, monogamic institutions, with all its filthy, beastly, rotten, degrading, corrupting, and damning associations—sunk, degraded, corrupted and corrupting, will these licentious libertines, reeking from their debauch and festering in their own corruption, seize their pen with a nervous hand, and, gathering a few scattered fragments of holy emotion, blow and puff and swell about Mormon impurities, and with a pen dipped in vinegar and a heart overflowing with gall, write about a people of whose morals and social habits they are evidently as ignorant as a donkey is of mathematics; whose chastity, morality and virtue is as much superior to their own, as an angel of God is superior to Lucifer. We have met within a few weeks numbers of gentlemen from Utah who have expressed themselves as disgusted at the flagrant debauchery and licentiousness, the reckless profanity, rowdyism and immorality that has everywhere surrounded them since their arrival in the States, as well as the barefaced lying, wilful misrepresentation and abominable hypocrisy which are everywhere manifested in their journals when speaking of Utah and its inhabitants. They brand them as wilful liars and unscrupulous defamers.

In relation to the outrages of which they speak, they would show a little more wisdom if they were first to find out in what these outrages consisted. They had better next ascertain how they are preparing themselves as good christians for the society of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and other venerable men of God, by exterminating polygamists. Or are they aspiring to another heaven, and not going to take up their abode with these old fogies who were polygamists? They had better also search the Constitution of the United States, and point out that particular place in it which gives Congress power to legislate for the Territories and to interfere with men's religion, that it may act advisedly. Failing in this, they had better search out from among themselves some man, or men, with brains, if they have any such, capable of showing that Mormonism is either anti-republican or unconstitutional, or that the institutions of Utah are unscriptural, unphilosophical, immoral, or degrading.

In the absence of reason, scripture, the Constitution, philosophy, morality, right, or justice, to bear upon it, they had better, among their other shrieks for freedom, trample down all law, human and divine; rend the Constitution to fragments; erase the people's rights from the category of American immunities; proclaim popular government a humbug, and set up a despotism. For, after all, this is what they are aiming at. Congress has already unconstitutionally disfranchised every Territory of the United States. Let them go on in the good work so nobly begun, and pass all laws regulating both their religious and domestic institutions; let them enforce those laws by the bayonet. Let them thus pass on from the Territories to States; and then hurrah for an empire and despotism! a Church and State, governed by a despot, and the good old glorious times restored. We can then burn Mormons, Methodists or Presbyterians at pleasure, and light up our cities with their burning bodies; while another Nero gloats over and laughs at the sight. We shall then have need for our star chambers, our Bridge of Sighs, our guillotines and inquisitions; we shall then be enabled to incarcerate persons for having the impudence to think, and decapitate them for having the audacity to believe themselves freemen. When this auspicious term arrives, that many of our cotemporaries are so diligently seeking to push forward, if our head happens to be on, we will speak for the office of chief inquisitor for the editor of the New York Daily Times; and as a number of guillotines will be in requisition, we hope to be able to secure the office of headsman for the editor of the Richmond Enquirer and some others of the fanatical brood: hoping that they will then be enabled to gratify their sanguinary appetites.

Slander for Buncombe.

"There is a rumor that the slavery agitation will again be thrust upon Congress in connection with a bill for the admission of Utah as a State. Slavery already exists in that Territory. It is to be hoped that men of all parties will unite in refusing to listen to any application for the admission to the confederacy of the horde of vagabonds who infest Utah; fiends who openly set at defiance the laws of God and decency. One of the foulest blots on Mr. Fillmore's administration was the erection of a territorial government over Utah, and the appointment of the greatest criminal within its pestilent borders to be the representative of the government of the United States. The time has arrived when the evil must be abated, and the sooner the issue is met the better."—"Our Washington correspondence."

We clip the above precious paragraph from the New York Herald of this morning (Thursday.) As we go to press in a few hours, and have other duties to attend to connected therewith, we have scarcely time to do more than tell the Herald that his Washington correspondent is a contemptible slanderer, a paid slanderer, the most contemptible of all slanderers. He calls the inhabitants of Utah "a horde of vagabonds," "fiends who openly set at defiance the laws of God and of decency." Will that immaculate interpreter of "laws of God and of decency" name the laws that the Mormons set at defiance? Does he think that we do not know that his wrath against the Mormons is maddened to frenzy because his shallow pate cannot grasp the shadow of an outraged law of God on which he might justify the bitter animosity of his dark heart against them.

What law of "decency" is set at defiance in Utah? Name it, immaculate Washington scribbler, and tell us who gave the law, on what authority it was given, and how many keep the same law of decency out of Utah. Decency! oh shame where is thy blush! decency! well that is rich from that hireling, wholesale calumniator. A man to talk of decency that would brand a people with the epithets of "vagabonds" and "fiends," and that for pay! Of these classes there possibly may be some in Utah, the highway from the States to the Diggins, but are they Mormons?—There is more vagabondism and fiendism, as he uses such beautiful terms, within the narrow circle of his own intimate acquaintances than among all the Utonians, and more outraged law of "God and Decency" in one day and night in a circle of a hundred rods, of which his garret is the centre, than in all the Territory of Utah since Millard Fillmore acted the part of an honest patriot and friend to the Constitution, in extending even-handed justice to the Utonians. Does that correspondent not know that his calumny against the Utonians is in open contradiction to the testimony of gentlemen of the highest respectability of every political faith, and of different religious creeds, who have passed through Utah, and who have resided there and been unconnected with Mormonism. Shall the testimony of the hundreds of starving California emigrants who have been saved from death by the generous, unrequited kindness of the Utonians, be scattered to the winds? Those who have lived in close intimacy with the Utonians; who bought from and sold to them, who testify of their uprightness in commerce, shall their testimony over their own signatures, while in Utah, while in California, and when they returned to the States, be all shattered by the foul tongue of an anonymous scribbler? Decency! that befits a calumniator shut up in his Washington garret, but no gentleman, no honest man, no man in whose bosom beats an impulse tinged with self-respect would brand a people such as the Utonians—putting aside religion altogether—than whom there are none more industrious, none more generous and kind to their fellow beings, irrespective of faith.

Let Congress decide what is their authority over Territories. The Utonians can bear well what other Territories can. Anything that suits others will suit them. To that we say nothing, and to the application of Utah for admission as a slave State—if that is wanted for Buncombe to fill the hearts of her opponents with fire and fury, go it, we care nothing about it. Of the Governor of that Territory his high character cannot be tarnished by the title of "the greatest criminal within its pestilent borders." The man who wrote that is not pure enough to clean his boots or feed his pigs.

We expect Congress to act on Utah's application shortly, as the correspondent says, but we fear nothing. We have hope that there is in that honorable body sufficient uprightness to spurn the lying scribbling of correspondents, and meet the subject on its own merits.

Emigrants Expected.

Elsewhere we publish the names of upwards of two hundred Saints who are expected in this port shortly, by the packet ship Columbia.

The arrangements of the Commissioners of Emigration for the protection of the unwary, wisely forbid entrance to the "Castle Garden" to all but officials from the office to which the emigrants are consigned, we, therefore, take the earliest opportunity of notifying all who expect friends or relations, and who desire to communicate with them, whether the writers are living in or around this city or at a distance, that all letters or communications for the emigrants, addressed to this office, will be handed to them on their arrival.

In the beginning of summer the newly arrived emigrants from Europe had, through this paper, some instructions and exhortations to faithfully serve their employers and earn for themselves that reputation for honesty and industry which the Saints have always enjoyed wherever they have been located. We trust that all have so conducted themselves, wherever they have been, and in whatsoever engaged, as to deserve the consideration of their employers.

The brotherhood of the Mormons is proverbial, and what is better it is a fact. We do not consequently require to say to the Saints here: be ready to receive your brethren and sisters, and throw around them your protection on their arrival, but we wish the brethren who know of the occupations and circumstances of those coming to seek employment for them: where you have influence with your employers, and can use it honorably and with self-respect, use it for your brethren. Every man who knows of employment send on to us information, that we may, if possible, serve those who are coming.

While on this subject of employment we would say to all: be diligent and serve faithfully your employers, whether they are members of the Church or not. We have been made acquainted with the conduct of some few who have acted anything but honorably with their employers, jeopardizing their interests, and taking unwarrantable liberties with them because they were brethren, but this should not be. Service should be faithfully performed with whomsoever engaged, and if those who are at the present obliged by circumstances to serve others only knew where lay their real interest, they would find it in the faithful discharge of their obligations to those whom they serve.

We don't mean to philosophize, shew why this and because, but in this matter-of-fact world of ours interest is the chief motive power, and generally the incentive to action—humiliating as it may be to render this judgment it is so, and we can't make it anything less. Let the Saints, therefore, discharge their duties to their employers, be they who they may, and they will find that no sensible employer will let slip an opportunity of testifying his appreciation of their labors in his interest.

Letters from the Missionaries.

We have received for publication letters from the missionaries in which they have given us the outlines of their travels from St. Louis to this city, and an account of their visits to the different branches of the Church through which they have passed, which we would willingly have published but the Message of the President of the United States was "in hand" and has left us but little space at our disposition. The brethren have expressed to us their best feelings for the Saints on whom they have called, and speak highly of their kindness in refreshing them on their journey, and in ministering to them the necessary funds to cross the ocean to their fields of labor. We wish the Saints to accept through us the thanks of these brethren to whom they administered, and we add our blessings to theirs for the ready hand that has been extended to them. The missionaries are in the best of spirits, strong in the faith of Israel's God, and blest with rich confidence in the authorities of the Church who have sent them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. The blessings promised them for their journey from their homes to the border of the great waters have been realized, for which they feel thankful and praise God, His servants and the Saints. As certain as it is written that in a day to come the Lord Jesus will say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto these my brethren ye have done it unto me," so shall these words of approbation fall upon the ear of those who have helped on the great car of Salvation. We feel love and gratitude glowing in our bosoms towards the Saints for their kindness to these Elders quite as much as if we had ourself been the recipients of their liberality, and thereby do we feel assured that the Lord Jesus, our Elder Brother, and Captain of our Salvation, will feel so when he has gained the victory over the world, Death, Hell and the Devil.

Attention, Bible Missionary Board.

COL. BULLOCK informs us that he met the Gotham missionary, with the wagon load of Bibles, on the north fork of the Platte. His wagon was hauled by a portion of the Mormon Church cattle. It is hoped that he secured his three years pay before he left the States, as there is a whisper that since he got into good company on the plains and been favored with leisure to read his Bible, that his mind has undergone some slight changes. He is reported to be under the impression that he should now believe the Bible that he is about to circulate among the Mormons—even the marriage portion of it—though his new faith should cause him, as the Tar says, to "break owners." Will the Missionary Bible Society of New York see to sending out another wagon load and a few more missionaries?

Social Party.

PRESIDENT MILES requests us to announce that the Saints composing the New York branch, intend holding a Social Party on the evening of the 1st of January, at their hall, 361 Broome street.

The Saints everywhere who can make it convenient, will do will to be present and renew their acquaintances with their brethren and sisters.

We invite the Twelve who are in the States to honor us with their company: we shall be glad to see them, the presidents of conferences and of branches, likewise, who can find time to visit us.

Tickets of admission, twenty-five cents: under twelve years, twelve and a half cents. To be had of Elder Wm. J. Silver at the hall, up to the Sunday previous. Doors open at four P. M., to commence precisely at five o'clock.

Distinguished Visitors Expected.

WE have every day this week expected to see enter our sanctum the Hon. G. A. Smith and President Erastus Snow. We anticipate their being with us on Sunday. We are glad to be able to announce to the numerous friends of President P. P. Pratt that he has informed us of his attention of being with us about Christmas.

John W. Coward, Esq.

This gentleman returned last week by the Arabia from Liverpool, via Boston. The passage was rough and uncomfortable, which affected considerably his health. He arrived in this city on Monday evening. We are glad to say that his health is considerably improved.

Arrivals.

ELDERS HENRY HARRIS arrived here on the 5th inst., and Thomas Bullock on the 8th, both of Great Salt Lake City.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The agents, in this city, of the Franco-American steamship company, to which belonged the ill-fated steamer Le Lyonnais, presented Captain Neilson, of the Hamburg bark Elise, with $200 in money and a splendid silver trumpet, richly ornamented, with an appropriate inscription, describing his kindness and humanity to the rescued while bringing them from the Bremen bark Elise, which had rescued them from the open boat, to this city. His mate received likewise $50. The Captain of the Bremen bark Elise is likewise, on his return to this city, to receive a similar testimonial.

A boat belonging to Le Lyonnias was picked up by the packet ship Neptune, three days after the catastrophe, with abundance of provisions, &c., which encourage the hope that the passengers were picked up by some outward bound vessel.

Commercial men and stock-jobbers have this last week been surprised, and in no small measure uncomfortably affected, by the failure of Messrs. Jacob Little & Co., of Wall street, and Messrs. Henshaw & Son, of Boston. Their liabilities are very large, figuring high up among the millions.

A meeting of two hundred clergymen of different denominations, was held at Boston, Mass., on Monday. After a two hours' speech the meeting expressed its favorable opinion of the organization of emigration to Kansas as it had been unfolded by Mr. Thayer, regarding it as an agency of the most wonderful efficiency in the expansion of freedom, education, and the institution of the Gospel.—"Border Ruffians" call it by another name, and accord to it other powers.

It is reported that President Pierce has determined on the removal of Judge Lecompte from Kansas for his partiality and antagonism to Gov. Geary.

Members of Congress have been, as will be seen by our Congressional, passing their time in the old wrangling style, while the important business of the nation is set aside. President Pierce comes in for a large share of abuse from the "Black Republicans" for the attention he has paid to them in his message. We refrain from re-publishing the trash at Washington, but engage our friends to read the message, and judge for themselves. Of the present occupation of Congress our cotemporary, the Herald, drops a short complimentary paragraph:

"When will the United States Senate and House of Representatives finish their eternal, everlasting, never-ending, always-recurring nigger controversies, and pay some attention to the business affairs of the poor, suffering white Anglo-Saxon race? Will these distinguished washerwomen be eternally washing and scrubbing their dirty linen before thirty millions of people on this side and one hundred and fifty millions on the other side of the Atlantic? Are the two Houses never to have done with this public washing of the dirty linen of the peculiar institution of the South?"

The Herald is recovering from the spasms with which it was afflicted before the election, and veering round towards the President elect. By the fourth of March all will be well.

Mr. Whitfield has at last been acknowledged the Delegate from Kansas, and as such taken his seat among the honorable members of the House.

Mr. J. O. Harrison, of Kentucky, is appointed successor of Judge Lecompte of Kansas.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE English press is now in full blast against furnishing Russia with English gold to build her railways as they are undoubtedly intended for strategic purposes alone. Some very able articles have been published on the present monetary crises in Europe in which the condition of France is by no means flatteringly pictured, much to the annoyance of that government. M. Kossuth is busy lecturing on "The Austrian Concordat, a Compliment to the Political System of Continental Despotism—Importance of the Concordat, and its effects on Hungary—its bearing on the interest of Protestantism." M. K. has made the tour of the principal cities in Scotland, and in the north of England, and has yet, he says, upwards of a hundred requisitions to visit other towns, some of them signed by thousands of names. The old Protestant women are shaking over the echo of his lectures. "The woman on the scarlet-colored beast" haunts their vision night and day.

Railway accidents, swindling in high places, and murders fill the papers. The Times thinks the age is going backwards, so abundant of late have been the outrages and murderous attacks, even in the great christian city of London where they print bibles by the millions and christian tracts by the ton in all languages.

The Sultan of Turkey has, by the will of her most gracious Majesty, been created a "Knight of the Garter." There is some talk of Prussia purposing to send troops nearer Neuchatel, it is likewise reported that the Federal Council is willing to test the claims of the King by the suffrage of the Canton, but he won't accept the offer.

By late accounts from Constantinople it appears that 600 wooden houses had been destroyed by fire at Pera. The authorities and the Sisters of Charity had taken charge of the families, who were left without an asylum. The catatrosphe at Rhodes, occasioned by the lightning having struck the immense store of gunpowder which was placed in the vaults belonging to the Ancient Knights, destroyed the whole Turkish quarter so completely that only three children were saved.

MINERSVILLE, PA., Dec. 4, 1856.

DEAR BRO. TAYLOR: I take up my pen this morning to inform you that I arrived at this place in company with Elder Cannon on Monday last, being quite indisposed on my arrival. Since then I have been a part of the time scarce able to sit up, having contracted a severe cold, oppression on the breast, sore legs, pain in my system, &c.; however, I feel not to complain or murmur at affliction, for that has been my lot, more or less, since I first made my appearance on this stage of action. We read that "Jesus was made perfect through suffering," and the servant ought to be willing to endure what the master has undergone; therefore let me bear with humility and meekness whatever afflictions may come upon me, for in the midst of them all I can lift up my heart in prayer and praise, and rejoice in the gospel of truth and in the hope and promise of eternal life, and enjoy the spirit of Him who dwells on high, and which gives peace, joy and consolation that the world knows not, neither can affliction or the destroyer take away.

I had purposed visiting all the Branches of the Church in this region, but my indisposition will prevent it, and other places I have to visit admonish me to hasten. Under these circumstances, Elder Cannon left here on Tuesday morning last to visit the Branches at Pixton Ferry, Columbia, &c. I have tarried here, and expect, if I am able, to hold meeting here next Sabbath, when all the Branches in this district are expected to attend, they having been notified to this effect.

Elder Snediker, from Utah, an humble and good man, is laboring through this District, comforting and teaching the Saints, and now and then baptising an honest soul into the Kingdom of God; but priestcraft here, as well as everywhere else, has taken strong hold; sects are as numerous as they were in the days of Jesus, and as holy and prayerful, (see Mat. xxiii.)

Minersville is a town of several thousand inhabitants, with as many different sects and worships as the Ephesians ever had, not worshipping the Goddess Diana, but, like them, worshipping an "Unknown God," "without body, parts, or passions," and railing out against their Mother, the old lady on the scarlet-colored beast. Indeed, old Babylon is firmly bound in bundles ready for the burning; but let them oppose and resist the truth, as Jannes and Jambres, the priests of Baal, did Moses, and they will find, when too late, that their god cannot hear them, (having no ears,) and that their sacrifices will not be acceptable unto the "true and living God," the God of the Saints. They are fighting for their bread, too lazy to work, but not ashamed to beg. Howl, howl, ye hireling shepherds, the Lord God will soon spoil your pastures; and may I live to proclaim truth, have power to battle with the devil and hireling priests.

I expect, if circumstances will permit, to be in Delaware some time next week; however, I shall keep you advised of my labors and whereabouts. My kind regards to yourself, Bros. Stenhouse, George, Dulin, Miles, &c. Peace be with you all.

As ever, yours, &c.,
W. I. APPLEBY.

[We are extremely sorry to learn of the Judge's indisposition, but trust that he will endeavor to preserve his health, and that the Saints will minister to him kindly. We hope to have the pleasure of greeting the Judge in good health on his return.—ED.]

Correspondence of the President of the French Mission.

4 UNITY TERRACE, St. Heliers, Jersey,
November 8th, 1856.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE—Dear Bro.: It affords me great pleasure to renew my correspondence with you, as I learn through THE MORMON that you are still in New York. I have heard but little from my old friends since they crossed the Atlantic, but I trust you will find a little leisure to communicate with one who has been your fellow-laborer in the valleys and mountains of Switzerland and on the fertile plains of sunny Italy.

You will be pleased to learn that we are progressing in the work of the Lord. We keep trimming the branches, and adding some now and again by baptism. I baptized two persons on the Island of Guernsey, the other week, one of whom had been a Methodist preacher for nine years. A few days ago, I ordained him to the office of Priest, that he might preach Mormonism. We baptize occasionally on this island. The work is progressing nicely in Paris among the Germans. Twelve persons have lately been baptized there, and others are investigating the work. Three persons were also baptized at Havre, a short time since. I purpose to visit the churches in France, very shortly, and hope to strengthen and build up the Saints.

I received a letter to-day from Elder Hubert, of Paris, in which he speaks of the work in Switzerland. He says: "I have recently received a letter from Zurich—all goes well and the brethren are making great progress: there are about three hundred members of the Church in that Canton. To-day I have received a letter from Elder J. J. Ruban, of Geneva, and he informs me that things move well, both in Switzerland and in Italy. He tells me that Prest. John L. Smith had been recently to Zurich, accompanied by Elder Ursenbach. Bro. Ruban tells me that he is travelling Elder for the Cantons de Vaud at Neufchatel. Elder Francis, is still in Turin, Piedmont."

I believe that Bro. Francis has a prospect of soon baptizing at Turin.

As for myself, I have plenty of up-hill work, but I don't feel like flinching or mourning, and I hope I never shall. Mormonism is to me, continually increasing in value, and I firmly trust that I may always be found true to its interests. I quite anticipate having the privilege of going West next season, and hope we shall cross the plains together.

Sister Keaton, Elder Horman and a host of others of your acquaintance in Jersey, join me in kindest regards to yourself and Sister Stenhouse. As ever, I remain yours affectionately,
G. D. KEATON.

We are always pleased to learn of the progress of the work of the Lord in the nations, and no doubt our readers will join with us in praying for prosperity to attend the labors of our Elders in foreign nations, where the means of propagating the truth are so limited by reason of the tyranny of rulers, the abridgement of personal liberty, and the gagging of the press.—[ED.

Thirty-fourth Congress,-Second Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4, 1856.

Mr. Comegyns, of Delaware, appointed to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Clayton, appeared and took his seat.

The credentials of Mr. Foot, elected by the Vermont Legislature for six years, were presented by Mr. Collamer.

The motion to print 15,000 extra copies of the President's message and accompanying documents was then taken up.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, of Alabama, said the motion had always been submitted in similar cases. He thought it would have been agreed to without objection. He was pained to see this occasion seized upon to arraign the President for the manner in which he had performed his constitutional duty of communicating to Congress, from time to time, such facts and suggestions as he might deem necessary or expedient. He believed the message contained a truthful account of the circumstances connected with the establishment of the Missouri compromise, and the subsequent events growing out of that act. If the President had failed to do this, he would have been derelict to his duty. There were proper occasions, on which Senators who dissented from his opinions as expressed in that document, might express their views with great propriety, but this was not a suitable occasion to renew this agitating discussion. Since, however, those who are in a minority in this body had seen proper to launch their invectives against the chief magistrate, and had taken this opportunity to do so, he felt it to be his duty as the mover of this order to print, to say something in reply. Mr. F. condemned the revival of the battle between North and South, and complimented Mr. Pierce on his official course.

Mr. Wade, of Ohio, charged the President with re-opening the controversy.

Mr. Butler, of S. C., justified the President for introducing the Northern agitation in the message, and concluded with saying that when the North should succeed in electing a President to carry out their measures without regard to the Constitution, that the Union would be no longer desirable.

Mr. Benjamin, of La., concluding, said, after the Presidential election I felt like the schoolboy at vacation, after studying the classics; "thank God," he exclaimed, "I have got through the Greeks and Romans;" and I thanked God I got through speaking through the Presidential election. [Laughter.] Other Senators, however, have different tastes, and in order that they may have time to prepare for the discussion of so grave a question as that now pending, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Cries—"Good idea"—"agreed."

Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker announced the standing committees. They are nearly the same as those of the first session. The only changes in the principal committees are Mr. Oliver, of Missouri, on elections, instead of Mr. Savage; Mr. Howard, on ways and means, instead of Mr. Billinghurst; Mr. Fuller, of Maine, on commerce, instead of Mr. McQueen; Messrs. Garnett and McQueen on Revolutionary claims, instead of Messrs. Smith, of Virginia, and Fuller, of Maine; Mr. Allen, instead of Mr. Bell, on agriculture; Messrs. Sherman and Cadwallader on foreign, instead of Messrs. Bayley and Matteson; Mr. Smith, of Virginia, on Territories, instead of Mr. Richardson; Mr. Hodges, on roads and canals, instead of Mr. Hughston. Mr. Matteson has been appointed chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, vice Mr. Meacham, deceased.

The question of Mr. Whitfield's admission as delegate from Kansas was resumed.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, proposed that the further consideration of the subject be postponed till Tuesday, when it shall be formally acted on, and no motion thereafter relative to it to be in order.

Mr. Granger, of New York, wished to offer a resolution appointing Daniel Waldo as Chaplain.

Mr. Phelps, of Mo., suggested that members should forthwith proceed to draw for the choice of seats.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., and his friends insisted on proceeding with the Whitfield case.

The yeas and nays were frequently taken on motions, made by Whitfield's advocate to adjourn, for a call of the House, &c., their desire being to stave off present action thereon.

Mr. Humphrey Marshall, of Ky., claimed his constitutional right to have the President's annual message read, but the Speaker overruled his demand on the ground that Whitfield's case had priority. Mr. Marshall appealed from the Speaker's decision, pending which the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Dec. 5.

Mr. Phelps moved as a test question, that there be a call of the House. Two hundred and eighteen members answered to their names.

The House voted on the pending question, viz., Mr. Grow's motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House on Monday refused to consent that Whitfield be sworn as delegate from Kansas. Decided in the negative by one hundred and eight against one hundred and eleven.

It now being clearly ascertained that Whitfield's friends were in the majority, Mr. Jones of Tenn. moved the previous question.

Mr. Giddings moved a call of the house, amid cries of "Good," "Who's absent?" "What's the use of that?" and "Better that 'Republicans' now play the game commenced by the Democrats."

Mr. Stanton appealed to gentlemen to draw for seats.

A voice from the Democratic side—"We have the majority now and want to vote."

Mr. Matteson moved an adjournment.

Decided in the negative.

By general consent the further consideration of the whole subject was postponed till Tuesday.

Mr. McMullen called for the reading of the President's Message.

The Speaker decided that the motion was out of order.

The resolution submitted by Mr. Stanton to draw for seats, being regularly before the House, was adopted. According to the method prescribed all the seats were vacated—the members retiring without the bar. As the Clerk drew each name, written on a piece of paper from a box, which many gentlemen demanded should be well shaken, the members severally made their selection; seating themselves to secure possession.

Much laughter was occasioned by Mr. Whitfield's name being first drawn. Some of his friends expressed satisfaction by huzzas, clapping of hands and waving of hats. Several on the other side exclaimed, "What business had his name in the box," and "he has no right to select a seat." The speaker interposed in support of this last expression; the question of his admission as delegate from Kansas being undecided.

The drawing of seats was concluded, and the House adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. Dec. 8.

Mr. Pearce, of Md., submitted a list of standing committees, which was adopted, substantially the same as those of last session. Mr. Pratt is appointed on Foreign Relations instead of Mr. Clayton deceased. Mr. Foster on Public Lands supplies a similar vacancy, Mr. Bigler on Commerce instead of Mr. Hamlin.

On motion of Mr. Clay a resolution was adopted, that two chaplains, of different denominations, shall be elected, who shall interchange weekly. Rev. Stephen P. Hill, a Baptist minister, of Washington, was elected.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion to print extra copies of the President's message and accompanying documents.

Mr. Bigler, of Pa., defended the President's message, asserted that the principles of the "mis-called" Republicans, and the Know-Nothings had been defeated by the election of Mr. Buchanan, and the doctrine of squatter sovereignty established.

Mr. Wade, of Ohio, inquired whether Mr. Buchanan believed the people in their Territorial state have power to admit or exclude slavery at their own will.

Mr. Bigler replied he could not speak on that point for Mr. Buchanan, but was perfectly willing to give his own views on that question. He was of opinion that the people, through their local Legislature, had that power—so far, however, as this involved the Constitutional question, the Senate had no power to decide it, and individual opinions were of little consequence.

Further debate of the same character. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The President's annual message was read.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. He regarded the document as one of the most extraordinary ever emanating from an executive. It was, in his opinion, a budget of inconsistencies, containing serious charges against a large portion of the people of the North, which have no foundation whatever in fact, which he could prove. Mr. C. endeavored to justify the Republicans and condemn the President, which led to an animated rankling discussion. Adjourned.

SENATE. Dec. 9.

Mr. Rusk, of Texas, introduced a bill granting further time to the creditors of Texas to present their claims.

The motion pending was to print the President's message and accompanying documents.

Mr. Collamer, of Vt., said when he began his term of service in the Senate, he entertained the conviction that the questions pertaining to the business before the body were the only legitimate subjects of discussion, but he soon found that other and more experienced Senators held different opinions. They thought that there were more important duties devolving upon them than listening to the petitions, redressing the grievances, and enacting laws for the government of the people, and they therefore undertook to guide and prepare the public mind. His own opinion was, that the public mind should prepare itself, and not receive its direction from the debates or action of either house of Congress. He thought these bodies should rather be the echo of public sentiment than the formers of it, for that was, in fact, transforming the Senate from a legislative assembly into an arena of political debate. It seemed he was entirely mistaken in his ideas, for it was not for a moment to be supposed that the practice of all these old and experienced Senators was founded upon an erroneous theory. He would, however, confess that all his previous views were completely overturned. He found that on those questions which were before Congress, as proper subjects of debate, it took a very latitudinarian range. Much that was said here was not said to produce an effect on the minds of members or with the expectation of changing their votes, but speeches were made, to use a common phrase, for "buncombe."

Mr. C. spoke at length about the President's message, and condemned his accusations of the North.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Smith, of Tenn., in reply to the remarks of Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, and Mr. Sherman, made yesterday, said, if they had confined themselves to making excuses for their defeat he would not have thought proper to respond. He saw in Mr. Sherman's speech an effort to unite all the opposing elements, North and South, against the democracy in the next Presidential election. He saw also a back down from all the positions heretofore taken by the republican party, in this House, relative to the question of slavery. The scheme will not succeed. The other gentleman, Mr. Campbell, had stated that the great principle of the Nebraska bill, the repeal of the Missouri compromise, and the policy of the present administration had been condemned by 300,000 votes. So far from this, as he proceeded to show, they have been overwhelmingly approved. The people of the country, he maintained, are opposed to sectionalism, as was shown in the result of the Presidential election. As to Mr. Buchanan's principles, they are embodied in the restrictions of the National Democratic Convention.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the special order—the Whitfield case—and reconsidered the vote by which the House on Monday refused to allow Mr. Whitfield to be sworn as delegate from Kansas, by 111 against 168.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., moved that the whole question be referred to the Committee on Elections.

The motion was rejected by 7 majority.

The oath was then ordered to be administered, by 112 against 108.

Mr. Whitfield advanced and took the oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported bills making appropriations for the support of the military academy and the payment of invalid pensions. Adjourned.

SENATE. Dec. 10.

Mr. Clay, of Ala., introduced a bill supplementary to the act of August, 1854, to graduate and reduce the price of public lands to actual settlers and cultivators.

Mr. Bigler, of Pa., opened again the debate on the President's message. Messrs. Trumbull and Pugh followed.

Mr. Wilson, of Mass., remarked that he desired to speak on this subject, but yielded the floor to Mr. Cass.

Mr. Cass said he proposed to allude to a few points which had been raised in the course of the discussion, and would take occasion to do so to-morrow. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Washburn, of Me., was not inclined to favor the motion pending to print an unusual number of copies of the President's message, for the reason that it was full of calumnious misrepresentations of that great and growing, and soon to be the dominant party of the Republic, and contained statements which, in his judgment, were devoid of truth and full of sophistry.

The debate on the message was animated, but nothing in fact more than the old stereotyped nigger discussion of the last session, and Republicans attacking the Democracy, and in turn being attacked, each as the worst enemies of the Union. Adjourned.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

ducted there will prevent such combinations in future, and secure to those Territories an opportunity to make steady progress in the development of their agricultural and mineral resources.

Legislation has been recommended by me on previous occasions to cure defects in the existing organization, and to increase the efficiency of the army, and further observation has but served to confirm me in the views then expressed, and to enforce on my mind the conviction that such measures are not only proper but necessary.

I have, in addition, to invite the attention of Congress to a change of policy in the distribution of troops, and to the necessity of providing a more rapid increase of the military armament. For details of these and other subjects relating to the army, I refer to the report of the Secretary of War.

The condition of the Navy is not merely satisfactory, but exhibits the most gratifying evidences of increased vigor. As it is comparatively small, it is more important that it should be as complete as possible in all the elements of strength; that it should be efficient in the character of its officers; in the zeal and discipline of its men; in the reliability of its ordnance and in the capacity of its ships. In all these various qualities the navy has made great progress within the last few years. The execution of the law of Congress, of Feb. 28, 1855, "To Promote the Efficiency of the Navy," has been attended by the most advantageous results. The law for promoting discipline among the men is found convenient and salutary. The system of granting an honorable discharge to faithful seamen on the expiration of the period of their enlistment, and permitting them to re-enlist after a leave of absence of a few months, without cessation of pay, is highly beneficial in its influence.

The apprentice system recently adopted is evidently destined to incorporate into the service a large number of our countrymen hitherto so difficult to procure. Several hundred American boys are now on a three years' cruise in our national vessels, and will return well trained seamen. In the ordnance department there is a decided and gratifying indication of progress creditable to it and to the country. The suggestions of the Secretary of the Navy, in regard to further improvement in that branch of the service, I commend to your favorable action.

The new frigates ordered by Congress are now afloat, and two of them in active service. They are superior models of naval architecture, and with their formidable battery add largely to public strength and security.

I concur in the views expressed by the Secretary of the Department in favor of a still further increase of our naval force.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior presents facts and views in relation to internal affairs, over which the supervision of his department extends, of much interest and importance.

The aggregate sales of the public lands during the last fiscal year amount to nine million two hundred and twenty-seven thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight acres; for which has been received the sum of $8,821,414. During the same period there have been located, with military scrip and land warrants, and for other purposes, thirty million one hundred thousand two hundred and thirty acres, thus making a total aggregate of thirty-nine million three hundred and twenty-eight thousand one hundred and eight acres. On the 30th of September last surveys had been made of sixteen million eight hundred and seventy-three thousand six hundred and nine-nine acres, a large proportion of which is ready for market.

The suggestions in this report in regard to the complication and progressive expansion of the business of the different bureaus of the Department; to the pension system; to the colonization of Indian tribes, and the recommendations in relation to various improvements in the District of Columbia, are especially commended to your consideration.

The report of the Postmaster General presents fully the condition of that department of the Government. Its expenditures for the last fiscal year were $10,407,868; and its gross receipts $7,620,801—making an excess of expenditure over receipts of $2,787,046. The deficiency of this department is thus $744,000 greater than for the year ending June 30, 1853. Of this deficiency, $330,000 is to be attributed to the additional compensation allowed Postmasters by the act of Congress of June 22, 1854. The mail facilities in every part of the country have been very much increased in that period, and the large addition of railroad service, amounting to seven thousand nine hundred and eight miles, has added largely to the cost of transportation.

The inconsiderable augmentation of the income of the Post Office Department under the reduced rates of postage, and its increasing expenditures, must, for the present, make it dependent to some extent upon the Treasury for support. The recommendations of the Postmaster General in relation to the abolition of the franking privilege, and his views on the establishment of mail steamship lines, deserve the consideration of Congress. I also call the special attention of Congress to the statement of the Postmaster General respecting the sums now paid for the transportation of mails to the Panama Railroad Company, and commend to their early and favorable consideration the suggestions of that officer in relation to new contracts for mail transportation upon that route, and also upon the Tehuantepec and Nicaragua routes.

When my last annual message was transmitted to Congress two subjects of controversy, one relating to the enlistment of soldiers in this country for foreign service, and the other to Central America, threatened to disturb good understanding between the United States and Great Britain. Of the progress and termination of the former question you were informed at the time, and the other is now in the way of satisfactory adjustment.

The object of the Convention between the United States and Great Britain of the 19th of April, 1850, was to secure, for the benefit of all nations, the neutrality and the common use of any transit-way, or interoceanic communication, across the Isthmus of Panama, which might be opened within the limits of Central America. The pretension subsequently asserted by Great Britain, to dominion or control over territories, in or near two of the routes, those of Nicaragua and Honduras, were deemed by the United States, not merely incompatible with the main object of the treaty, but opposed even to its express stipulations. Occasion of controversy on this point has been removed by an additional treaty, which our Minister at London has concluded, and which will be immediately submitted to the Senate for its consideration. Should the proposed supplemental arrangement be concurred in by all the parties to be affected by it, the objects contemplated by the original Convention will have been fully attained.

The treaty between the United States and Great Britain, of the 5th of June, 1854, which went into effective operation in 1855, put an end to causes of irritation between the two countries, by securing to the United States the right of fishery on the coast of the British North American Provinces, with advantages equal to those enjoyed by British subjects. Besides the signal benefits of this treaty to a large class of our citizens engaged in a pursuit connected to no inconsiderable degree with our national prosperity and strength, it has had a favorable effect upon other interests in the provision it made for reciprocal freedom of trade between the United States and the British Provinces in America.

The exports of domestic articles to those provinces during the last year amounted to more than twenty-two millions of dollars, exceeding those of the preceding year by nearly seven millions of dollars; and the imports therefrom, during the same period, amounted to more than twenty-one millions—an increase of six millions upon those of the previous year.

The improved condition of this branch of our commerce is mainly attributable to the above-mentioned treaty.

Provision was made in the first article of that treaty, for a commission to designate the mouths of rivers to which the common right of fishery, on the coast of the United States and the British Provinces, was not to extend. This commission has been employed a part of two seasons, but without much progress in accomplishing the object for which it was instituted, in consequence of a serious difference of opinion between the Commissioners, not only as to the precise point where the rivers terminate, but in many instances as to what constitutes a river. These difficulties, however, may be overcome by resort to the umpirage provided for by the treaty.

The efforts perseveringly prosecuted since the commencement of my administration, to relieve our trade to the Baltic from the exaction of sound dues by Denmark, have not yet been attended with success. Other Governments have also sought to obtain a like relief to their commerce, and Denmark was thus induced to propose an arrangement to all the European Powers interested in the subject; and the manner in which her proposition was received, warranting her to believe that a satisfactory arrangement with them could soon be concluded, she made a strong appeal to this Government for temporary suspension of definite action on its part, in consideration of the embarrassment which might result to her European negotiations by an immediate adjustment of the question with the United States. This request has been acceded to, upon the condition that the sums collected after the 16th of June last, and until the 16th of June next, from vessels and cargoes belonging to our merchants, are to be considered as paid under protest and subject to future adjustment. There is reason to believe that an arrangement, between Denmark and the maritime powers of Europe on the subject, will be soon concluded, and that the pending negotiation with the United States may then be resumed and terminated in a satisfactory manner.

With Spain no new difficulties have arisen, nor has much progress been made in the adjustment of pending ones.

Negotiations entered into for the purpose of relieving our commercial intercourse with the Island of Cuba of some of its burdens, and providing for the more speedy settlement of local disputes growing out of that intercourse, have not yet been attended with any results.

Soon after the commencement of the late war in Europe, this Government submitted to the consideration of all maritime nations two principles for the security of neutral commerce; one, that the neutral flag should cover enemies' goods, except articles contraband of war; and the other, that neutral property on board merchant vessels of belligerents should be exempt from condemnation, with the exception of contraband articles. These were not presented as new rules of international law; having been generally claimed by neutrals, though not always admitted by belligerents. One of the parties to the war—Russia—as well as several neutral powers, promptly acceded to these propositions; and the two principal belligerents, Great Britain and France, having consented to observe them for the present occasion, a favorable opportunity seemed to be presented for obtaining a general recognition of them both in Europe and America.

But Great Britain and France, in common with most of the States of Europe, while forbearing to reject, did not affirmatively act upon the overtures of the United States.

While the question was in this position, the representatives of Russia, France, Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, and Turkey, assembled at Paris, took into consideration the subject of maritime rights, and put forth a declaration containing the two principles which this Government had submitted, nearly two years before, to the consideration of maritime powers, and adding thereto the following propositions: "Privateering is and remains abolished," and "blockades, in order to be binding, must be effective, that is to say, maintained by a force, sufficient really, to prevent access to the coast of the enemy;" and to the declaration thus composed of four points, two of which had already been proposed by the United States, this Government has been invited to accede by all the powers represented at Paris, except Great Britain and Turkey.

To the last of the two additional propositions—that in relation to blockades—there can certainly be no objection. It is merely the definition of what shall constitute the effectual investment of a blockaded place, a definition for which this Government has always contended, claiming indemnity for losses where a practical violation of the rules thus defined has been injurious to our commerce. As to the remaining article of the declaration of the Conference of Paris, "that privateering is and remains abolished," I certainly cannot ascribe to the powers represented in the Conference of Paris any but liberal and philanthropic views in the attempt to change the unquestionable rule of maritime law in regard to privateering. Their proposition was doubtless intended to imply approval of the principle that private property upon the ocean, although it might belong to the citizens of a belligerent State, should be exempt from capture, and had that proposition been so framed as to give full effect to the principle, it would have received my ready assent on behalf of the United States.

But the measure proposed is inadequate to that purpose. It is true that if adopted, private property upon the ocean would be withdrawn from one mode of plunder, but left exposed, meanwhile, to another mode, which could be used with increased effectiveness. The aggressive capacity of great naval powers would be thereby augmented, while the defensive ability of others would be reduced. Though the surrender of the means of prosecuting hostilities by employing privateers, as proposed by the Conference of Paris, is mutual in terms, yet, in practical effect, it would be the relinquishment of a right of little value to one class of States, but of essential importance to another and a far larger class. It ought not to have been anticipated that a measure, so inadequate to the accomplishment of the proper object, and so unequal in its operation, would receive the assent of all maritime powers. Private property would be still left to the depredations of the armed cruisers.

I have expressed a readiness on the part of this Government, to accede to all the principles contained in the declaration of the Conference of Paris, provided that relating to the abandonment of privateering can be so amended as to effect the object for which, as is presumed, was intended, the immunity of private property on the ocean from hostile capture. To effect this object, it is proposed to add to the declaration that "privateering is and remains abolished," the following amendment: "And that the private property of subjects and citizens of a belligerent on the high seas, shall be exempt from seizure by the public armed vessels of the other belligerent, except it be contraband." This amendment has been presented not only to the powers which have asked our assent to the declaration to abolish privateering, but to all other maritime States. Thus far it has not been rejected by any, and is favorably entertained by all which have made any communication in reply.

Several of the Governments, regarding with favor the proposition of the United States, have delayed definitive action upon it, only for the purpose of consulting with others, parties to the Conference of Paris. I have the satisfaction of stating, however, that the Emperor of Russia has entirely and explicitly approved of that modification, and will co-operate in endeavoring to obtain the assent of other powers; and that assurances of a similar purport have been received in relation to the disposition of the Emperor of the French.

The present aspect of this important subject allows us to cherish the hope that a principle so humane in its character, so just and equal in its operation, so essential to the prosperity of commercial nations, and so consonant to the sentiments of this enlightened period of the world, will command the approbation of all maritime powers, and thus be incorporated into the code of international law.

My views on the subject are more fully set forth in the reply of the Secretary of State, a copy of which is herewith transmitted, to the communications on the subject made to this Government, especially to the communication of France.

The Government of the United States has at all times regarded with friendly interest the other States of America, formerly, like this country, European colonies, and now independent members of the great family of nations. But the unsettled condition of some of them, distracted by frequent revolutions, and thus incapable of regular and firm internal administration, has tended to embarrass occasionally our public intercourse, by reason of wrongs which our citizens suffer at their hands, and which they are slow to redress.

Unfortunately it is against the Republic of Mexico, with which it is our special desire to maintain a good understanding, that such complaints are most numerous; and although earnestly urged upon its attention, they have not as yet received the consideration which this Government had a right to expect. While reparation for past injuries has been withheld, others have been added. The political condition of that country, however, has been such as to demand forbearance on the part of the United States. I shall continue my efforts to procure for the wrongs of our citizens that redress which is indispensable to the continued friendly association of the two republics.

The peculiar condition of affairs in Nicaragua in the early part of the present year, rendered it important that this Government should have diplomatic relations with that State. Through its Territory had been opened one of the principal thoroughfares across the Isthmus connecting North and South America, on which a vast amount of property was transported, and to which our citizens resorted in great numbers, in passing between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States. The protection of both required that the existing power in that State should be regarded as a responsible Government; and its minister was accordingly received. But he remained here only a short time. Soon thereafter the political affairs of Nicaragua underwent unfavorable change and became involved in much uncertainty and confusion. Diplomatic representatives from two contending parties have been recently sent to this Government; but with the imperfect information possessed, it was not possible to decide which was the Government de facto; and, awaiting further developments, I have refused to receive either.

Questions of the most serious nature are pending between the United States and the Republic of New Granada. The Government of that Republic undertook a year since to impose tonnage duties on foreign vessels in her ports, but the purpose was resisted by this Government as being contrary to existing treaty stipulation with the United States, and to rights conferred by charter upon the Panama Railroad Company, and was accordingly relinquished at that time, it being admitted that our vessels were entitled to be exempt from tonnage duty in the free ports of Panama and Aspinwall. But the purpose has been recently revived on the part of New Granada, by the enactment of a law to subject vessels visiting her ports to the tonnage duty of forty cents per ton; and although the law has not been put in force, yet the right to enforce it is still asserted, and may at any time be acted on by the Government of the Republic.

The Congress of New Granada has also enacted a law during the last year which levies a tax of more than $3 on every pound of mail matter transported across the Isthmus. The sum thus required to be paid on the mails of the United States would be nearly $2,000,000 annually, in addition to the large sum payable by contract to the Panama Railroad Company. If the only objection to this exaction were the exorbitancy of its amount, it could not be submitted to by the United States.

The imposition of it, however, would obviously contravene our treaty with New Granada, and infringe the contract of that Republic with the Panama Railroad Company. The law providing for this tax was, by its terms, to take effect on the first of September last, but the local authorities on the Isthmus have been induced to suspend its execution, and to await further instructions on the subject from the Government of the Republic. I am not yet advised of the determination of that Government. If a measure so extraordinary in its character, and so clearly contrary to treaty stipulations and the contract rights of the Panama Railroad Company, composed mostly of American citizens, should be persisted in, it will be the duty of the United States to resist its execution.

I regret exceedingly that occasion exists to invite your attention to a subject of still graver import in our relations with the Republic of New Granada. On the 15th day of April last, a riotous assemblage of the inhabitants of Panama committed a violent and outrageous attack on the premises of the railroad company, and the passengers and other persons in or near the same, involving the death of several citizens of the United States, the pillage of many others, and the destruction of a large amount of property belonging to the railroad company. I caused full investigation of that event to be made, and the result shows satisfactorily that complete responsibility for what occurred attaches to the government of New Granada. I have, therefore, demanded of that government that the perpetrators of the wrongs in question should be punished; that provision should be made for the families of citizens of the United States who were killed, with full indemnity for the property pillaged or destroyed.

The present condition of the Isthmus of Panama, in so far as regards the security of persons and property passing over it, requires serious consideration. Recent incidents tend to show that the local authorities cannot be relied on to maintain the public peace of Panama, and there is just ground for apprehension that a portion of the inhabitants are meditating further outrages, without adequate measures for the security and protection of persons or property having been taken, either by the State of Panama, or by the general government of New Granada.

Under the guarantees of treaties, citizens of the United States have, by the outlay of several millions of dollars, constructed a railroad across the Isthmus and it has become the main route between our Atlantic and Pacific possessions, over which multitudes of our citizens and a vast amount of property are constantly passing—to the security and protection of all which, and the continuance of the public advantages involved, it is impossible for the government of the United States to be indifferent.

I have deemed the danger of the recurrence of scenes of lawless violence in this quarter so imminent as to make it my duty to station a part of our naval force in the harbors of Panama and Aspinwall, in order to protect the persons and property of the citizens of the United States in those ports, and to insure to them safe passage across the Isthmus. And it would, in my judgment, be unwise to withdraw the naval force now in those ports, until, by the spontaneous action of the Republic of New Granada, or otherwise, some adequate arrangement shall have been made for the protection and security of a line of interoceanic communication so important at this time, not to the United States only, but to all other maritime States both of Europe and America.

Meanwhile, negotiations have been instituted by means of a special commission, to obtain from New Granada full indemnity for injuries sustained by our citizens on the Isthmus, and satisfactory security for the general interests of the United States.

In addressing to you my last annual message, the occasion seems to me an appropriate one to express my congratulations in view of the peace, greatness and felicity which the United States now possess and enjoy. To point you to the state of the various departments of the Government, and of all the great branches of the public service, civil and military, in order to speak of the intelligence and the integrity which pervades the whole, would be to indicate but imperfectly the administrative condition of the country, and the beneficial effects of that on the general welfare. Nor would it suffice to say that the nation is actually at peace at home and abroad; that its industrial interests are prosperous; that the canvas of its mariners whiten every sea; and the plow of its husbandmen is marching steadily onward to the bloodless conquest of the continent, that cities and populous States are springing up, as if by enchantment, from the bosom of our western wilds, and that the courageous energy of our people is making of these United States the great republic of the world. These results have not been attained without passing through trials and perils, by experience of which, and thus only, nations can harden into manhood.

Our forefathers were trained to the wisdom which conceived, and the courage which achieved independence, by the circumstances which surrounded them, and they were thus made capable of the creation of the Republic. It devolved on the next generation to consolidate the work of the Revolution, to deliver the country entirely from the influences of conflicting transatlantic partialities or antipathies, which attached to our colonial and revolutionary history, and to organize the practical operation of the constitutional and legal institutions of the Union. To us, of this generation, remains the not less noble task of maintaining and extending the power of the United States. We have at length reached that stage of the national career in which the dangers to be encountered, and the exertions to be made, are the incidents, not of weakness, but of strength. In our foreign relations we have to attemper our power to the less happy condition of other Republics in America, and to place ourselves in the calmness and conscious dignity of right by the side of the greatest and wealthiest of the empires of Europe. In our domestic relations, we have to guard against the shock of the discontents, the ambitions, the interests, and the exuberant, and, therefore, sometimes irregular impulses of opinion, or of action, which are the natural product of the present political elevation, the self reliance and the restless spirit of enterprise of the people of the United States.

I shall prepare to surrender the Executive trust to my successor, and retire to private life with sentiments of profound gratitude to the good Providence which, during the period of my administration, has vouchsafed to carry the country through many difficulties, domestic and foreign, and to enable me to contemplate the spectacle of amicable relations between ours and all other governments, and the establishment of constitutional order and tranquility throughout the Union. Correspondence from Col. Thomas Bullock.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9, 1856.

ELDER JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Brother: I am thankful to Almighty God, that he has preserved my life while crossing the rugged mountains, wide prairies and sandy deserts from Great Salt Lake City, to Florence, N. T., and especially for bringing me in safety through the shallow, snaggy, muddy, crooked, troubled Missouri River, and over the roads travelled by the Iron Horse, and that I have now an opportunity of writing a portion of my experience to you.

On my arrival at St. Louis, Prests. Erastus Snow and George A. Smith, called the missionaries together in the Luminary-office, and scattered them according to their several situations and necessities; those who had means, were sent direct to their field of labor, others were sent to visit the neighboring branches to raise means; while I was retained in St. Louis to make out a report of all the tithing received in the St. Louis Conference since that Stake was organized. I was busily engaged for a number of days in this service, and did not complete it until very early on the morning of Dec. 1st. In the evenings, and during the Sabbaths I had the privilege of speaking to the Saints and bearing my testimony to the truth of the work of God in these the last days, which caused those who were not Israel to be mad. In less than four hours after finishing that which was required of me, I was on my route for Vincennes, Indianapolis, Pittsburg and Philadelphia, where I arrived on Thursday, Dec. 4, having to borrow half a dollar to pay my expenses to the house of Elder Samuel Harrison. I was counselled by him to stay until after Sunday, and I visited a room full of Saints the same evening, and attended three meetings on Sunday; in the morning I preached and bore my testimony; in the afternoon, Elder George A. Smith gave a brilliant discourse; and in the evening, Elder Erastus Snow preached, giving a brief expose of the doings and actions of Gov. Young in Utah; afterwards a collection was made towards carrying Elder Bullock to Liverpool.

I arrived in this city yesterday afternoon, and was happy to learn that Elders Browning, Brown, Pierce, Tippitts, Page and Harris were here, they had their passage to Liverpool engaged on board the ship Guy Mannering, which is expected to sail on Friday next. Having sold two buffalo robes (being part of my bedding) in St. Louis, I expect I shall be able to start with them, if so, I shall be glad, for it is about as hard to find where I have been travelling an honest soul seeking after truth, as it would be to expect to find wheat ears on the fields in Great Salt Lake county next spring, after the little birds had picked up during the fall, winter and early spring, what had been left of the gleaning by the Saints this fall, and that, too, after the crop had been pulled by the owner to save all. So every Saint may see that the prospect of gathering many more of the honest in heart out the nation where the blood of Prophets, Patriarchs and Saints is crying to the Lord God of Israel for vengeance upon the heads of a priest-ridden generation, is very faint indeed. Thus the Scripture is being literally fulfilled, for "Narrow is the way that leadeth to eternal life, and few there be that find it," while "Broad is the way that leadeth unto death, and many there be that go in thereat;" the light has taken its departure from the States and fled to the mountains, which leaves the entire nation in darkness, discord, evil surmisings and wickedness in high places, while the people amuse themselves in seduction, (not caring whether they are the wives or daughters of their nearest or dearest friends,) whoreings, abominations, mobbings, murders, from the embryo infant in the womb, to the grey-haired veteran just verging on the grave, gambling, and robberies, while the torch of the incendiary lights the wretches in their seductive midnight revels: thus, thus, is old Babylon ripening for the day of burning, and may God speed the day.

If there are any persons in the United States who are honest in heart with themselves, who are seeking to do the will of God on Earth, who desire to live their religion, and be saved in the Kingdom of God, I exhort you to gather out to Deseret, the vales of the West, obey the light of truth and revelation, and prepare yourselves for the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ: to the remainder, I say, farewell.

I remain, Brother Taylor, your Brother in the Gospel of Jesus Christ,

THOMAS BULLOCK.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la piété, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Judgments of God.

BY MISS KATE J. REDDING.

"Judgment shall begin at the house of the Lord, and if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the wicked and the sinner appear."

The earth with foul corruption groans,
The reign of blood is nearly o'er;
Soon, still shall be oppression's moans,
Heaven's vengeance shall all rights restore.

Famine and death go hand in hand,
Dire plagues o'er all creation sweep,
Till nations own our God's command,
And His just laws His Israel keep.

Yet not in Babel's haughty land,
Where sin maintains a sovereign sway,
Will God with unrelenting hand,
Commence His vengeance of to-day.

Behold His house—on yonder shore,
His people ruled by Prophet-voice
Plague dwells—The God whom Saints adore,
Chastens the city of His choice.

In mercy chastens, we are sure,
That Saints may rise from trial's blast
As gold made seven times more pure,
And meet for Zion's reign at last.

If then the Church His scourge shall know,
Where shall the sinners' troubles cease?
No refuge offers here below,
And death to him brings no release.

SERMON,

By Prest. Brigham Young, Bowery, G. S. L. C., Aug. 31, 1856.

REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.

From the Deseret News, of Sept. 17th, 1856.

I APPEAR before you to bear my testimony to the truth of "Mormonism," that Joseph Smith, Jr., was a Prophet called of God, and that he did translate the Book of Mormon by the gift and power of the Holy Ghost. This same testimony all can bear, who have received and continue to retain the Spirit of the Gospel.

We are happy to hear, from our brethren who have returned from the fields of their labor, it rejoices our hearts, and we like to see their faces. I know how they feel when they return home, for I have felt many times, in returning to the Saints, as though the privilege of beholding their faces was a feast to overflowing; my soul has been full. I rejoice all the time, and I can understand why Bro. Clinton has rejoiced so exceedingly; it is because the lightning and thunder are in him, and because he gives vent to his feelings. Bro. Robins' calling has been different, of such a nature that the thunder and lightning in him have lain dormant, to a certain degree, and he has not enjoyed himself so well as he would, had he been sent solely to preach and build up churches.

Let me reduce this to your understandings. Right here, in our midst, many who gather from foreign lands, who have undergone all the toil, labor and hardship that it is possible for their nature to sustain on their journey, after they arrive in these valleys begin to sink in their spirits, neglect their duties, and in a little time do not know whether "Mormonism" is true or not. Take the same persons and keep them among the wicked, and they will preserve their armor bright, but it has become dull and rusty here; this is the cause of so many's leaving these valleys. The seas are so calm, and the vessel is wafted over them so smoothly, and in a manner so congenial to the feelings of the people, that they forget that they are in Zion's ship. This is the main reason of so many's leaving for the States, California, and other places. Send those persons among their enemies, among those who will oppose "Mormonism," among those who will oppose the truth, and let them be continually persecuted, and they will know very quickly whether they are "Mormons" or not, for they must go to the one side or the other. But the condition of society here, and the feelings of the people, are so different from those of the wicked, that many glide smoothly along, forget their religion and their God, and finally think that this is not the place for them, and go away.

I will now state that I am thus far perfectly satisfied with the labors of the brethren who have returned from their missions this season and have come on the stand to-day, and at other times; I am highly gratified with the doings and labors of those Elders.

With regard to Bro. John Taylor, I will say that he has one of the strongest intellects of any man that can be found; he is a powerful man, he is a mighty man, and we may say that he is a powerful editor; but I will use a term to suit myself, and say that he is one of the strongest editors that ever wrote. Concerning his financial abilities, I have nothing to say; those who are acquainted with the matter know how "THE MORMON" has been sustained. We sent Bro. Taylor, and other brethren with him, to start that paper without purse or scrip, and if they had not accomplished that object, we should have known that they did not trust in their God, and did not do their duty.

Let me call your reflections to the days of Joseph; here are some of the Twelve, here are the Seventies and High Priests, and members of the High Council, and several who have been long in the Church: did any of you ever receive any support from the Church, while on your missions in the days of Joseph? Were you all to answer, you would say that you do not know the time.

I came into this Church in the spring of 1832. Previous to my being baptized, I took a mission to Canada at my own expense; and from the time that I was baptized until the day of our sorrow and affliction, at the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum, no summer passed over my head but what I was travelling and preaching, and the only thing I ever received from the Church, during over twelve years, and the only means that were ever given me by the Prophet, that I now recollect, was in 1842, when Bro. Joseph sent me the half of a small pig that the brethren had brought to him; I did not ask him for it; it weighed 93 pounds. And that fall, previous to my receiving that half of a pig, Bro. H. C. Kimball and myself were engaged all the time in pricing property that came in on tithing, and we were also engaged in gathering tithing; and I had an old saddle valued at two dollars presented to me, and Bro. Heber was credited two dollars in the Church books for one day's services, by Bro. Willard Richards, who was then keeping those books. Bro. Heber said, "blot that out, for I don't want it." I think it was crossed out, and so was the saddle, for I did not want it, even had it been given to me. These were the only articles I ever received in the days of Joseph, as far as I can recollect.

I have travelled and preached, and at the same time sustained my family by my labor and economy. If I borrowed one hundred dollars, or fifty, or if I had five dollars, it almost universally went into the hands of Bro. Joseph to pay lawyers' fees and to liberate him from the power of his enemies, so far as it would go. Hundreds and hundreds of dollars that I have managed to get, to borrow and trade for, I have handed over to Joseph when I came home. That is the way I got help, and it was good for me; it learned me a great deal, though I had learned, before I heard of "Mormonism," to take care of number one.

For me to travel and preach without purse or scrip, was never hard; I never saw the day, I never was in the place, nor went into a house, when I was alone, or when I would take the lead and do the talking, but what I could get all I wanted; though I have been with those who would take the lead and be mouth, and been turned out of doors a great many times, and could not get a night's lodging. But when I was mouth, I never was turned out of doors; I could make the acquaintance of the family, and sing to them and chat with them, and they would feel friendly towards me; and when they learned that I was a "Mormon" elder, it was after I had gained their good feelings.

When the brethren were talking about starting a press in New York, and how it has been upheld, I did wish to relate an incident in my experience. In company with several of the Twelve, I was sent to England in 1839. We started from home without purse or scrip, and most of the Twelve were sick; and those who were not sick when they started, were sick on the way to Ohio; Bro. Taylor was left to die by the road-side, by old Father Coltrin, though he did not die. I was not able to walk to the river, nor so far as across this block, no, not more than half as far; I had to be helped to the river, in order to get into a boat to cross it. This was our situation. I had not even an overcoat; I took a small quilt from the trundle-bed, and that served for my overcoat, while I was traveling to the State of New York, when I had a coarse satinet overcoat given to me. Thus we went to England, to a strange land to sojourn among strangers.

When we reached England we designed to start a paper, but we had not the first penny to do it with. I had enough to buy a hat and pay my passage to Preston; for from the time I left home, I had worn an old cap which my wife made out of a pair of old pantaloons; but the most of us were entirely destitute of means to buy even any necessary article.

We went to Preston and held our conference, and decided that we would publish a paper. Bro. Parley P. Pratt craved the privilege of editing it, and we granted him the privilege. We also decided to print three thousand hymn books, though we had not the first cent to begin with, and were strangers in a strange land. We appointed Bro. Woodruff to Herefordshire, and I accompanied him on his journey to that place. I wrote to Bro. Pratt for information about his plans, and he sent me his prospectus, which stated that when he had a sufficient number of subscribers and money enough in hand to justify his publishing the paper, he would proceed with it. How long we might have waited for that I know not, but I wrote to him to publish two thousand papers, and I would foot the bill. I borrowed two hundred and fifty pounds of Sister Jane Benbow, one hundred of Bro. Thomas Kington, and returned to Manchester, where we printed three thousand hymn books and five thousand Books of Mormon, and issued two thousand Millennial Stars monthly, and in the course of the summer printed and gave away rising of sixty thousand tracts. I also paid from five to ten dollars per week for my board, and hired a house for Bro. Willard Richards and his wife, who came to Manchester, and sustained them; and gave sixty pounds to Bro. P. P. Pratt to bring his wife from New York. I also commenced the emigration in that year.

I was there one year and sixteen days, with my brethren the Twelve; and during that time I bought all my clothing, except one pair of pantaloons which the sisters gave me in Liverpool, soon after I arrived there, and which I really needed. I told the brethren, in one of my discourses, that there was no need of their begging, for if they needed anything, the sisters could understand that. The sisters took the hint, and the pantaloons were forthcoming.

I paid three hundred and eighty dollars to get the work started in London, and when I arrived home in Nauvoo, I owed no person one farthing. Bro. Kington received his pay from the books that were printed; and Sister Benbow, who started to America the same year, left names enough of her friends to receive the two hundred and fifty pounds, which was paid them, notwithstanding I held her agreement that she had given it to the Church.

We left two thousand five hundred dollars worth of books in the office, paid our passages home, and paid about six hundred dollars to emigrate the poor who were starving to death, besides giving away the sixty thousand tracts; and that, too, though I had not a sixpence when we first landed in Preston, and I do not know that one of the Twelve had.

I could not help thinking that if I could accomplish that much in England, in that poor, hard country, it could not be much of a job for a man to establish a paper in New York. I thought that to be one of the smallest things that could be; I could make money at it. We sent Bro. George Q. Cannon, one of Bro. Taylor's nephews, to California, over a year ago last spring, to print the Book of Mormon in the Hawaiian language. He has printed a large and handsome edition of that book; has published a weekly paper and paid for it; has paid for the press and type, and paid his board and clothing bills, though he had not a farthing to start with, that is, he went without purse and scrip, so far as I know, as did also Bros. Bull and Wilkie who went with him.

It was one of the smallest labors that I could think of to establish a paper and sustain it in St. Louis, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, or any of the eastern cities. I wish to say this much, for the information of those who think it a great task to establish and sustain a paper; though I am not aware that any of the brethren think so.

I will relate another incident, which occurred during our journey to England. Bro. George A. Smith accompanied me to New York city, and we had not money enough to pay the last five miles' fare.

We started from New Haven in a steamboat, and when we left the boat, I hired passage in the stage to New York; the captain of the steamboat happened to be in the same stage.

When we left the coach, I said to the captain: will you have the kindness to pay this gentleman's passage and mine. I had no conversation with him during the day, only in interchanging the common and usual compliments; but when we left him, he greeted us cordially, and said that he had paid our stage fare with the greatest pleasure, and shook our hands as heartily as a brother, saying, "May God bless and prosper you in your labors."

In five minutes we were in the house with Parley P. Pratt, who had moved to that city the Fall before. As soon as those of the Twelve who were appointed on that mission to England came in, we concluded that we would not go among the Branches, but seek out and preach to those who had not an opportunity for hearing the gospel.

Accordingly we separated and went into many parts of the State of New York, Long Island and New Jersey, and some went into the city of Philadelphia.

After we had got through the regular meetings, we proposed to the brethren, if any of them wished to have meetings in their private houses, and would tell us when and where, that we would meet with them.

It was not more than a week or ten days before we had been in fifty different places in New York city and the surrounding country, and those who came to hear us invited their neighbors; and thus we preached and baptized, and soon gathered means enough to defray the expense of our passage to England, principally from those who were the fruits of our own labors.

Though the people in the States are daily becoming more hardened against the truth, yet if I was in New York this day, and it was my business to be there, I would not be there long before I would have many Elders preaching through the different parts of that city; I would have them preaching in the English, Danish, French, German and other languages. And soon would have Elders dispersed all over the State, and would raise up new friends enough to sustain me, that is, if the Lord would help me, and if he did not, I would leave.

That is the way we have travelled and preached, but now we do a great deal for our missionaries, for they gather money on tithing; this coure tends to shut up every avenue for business here.

We do not receive cash on tithing from abroad, because our missionaries are so liberal and feel so rich that they gather every dollar that can be scraped up, and then come here and have it credited to such and such individuals on tithing, without handing over the money.

This course hedges up the work at head quarters. Did I have that privilege? No, never; and men should not have it now. If a paper should be published, brethren ought to have wisdom enough to sustain themselves and the paper, and they can do it.

I do not wish to find fault with our missionaries, but many of them now live on cream and short-cake, butter, honey, light-biscuit and sweet-meats, while we had to take the butter-milk and potatoes. That kind of fare was good enough for us, but now it is short-cake and cream, light-biscuit, butter and honey, and sweet-meats of every kind, and even then some of them think that they are abused.

I see some here who did not have as good fare as butter-milk and potatoes; I see some of the brethren who have been to Australia, the East Indies, &c. When I returned from England, I said it is the last time I will travel as I have done, unless the Lord specially requiree me to do so; for if we could ride even as comfortably as Bro. Woodruff once rode on one of the Mississippi steamboats we considered ourselves well off. All the bed he had was the chines of barrels, with his feet hanging on a brace, and he thought himself well off to get the privilege of riding in any shape, to escape constant walking.

How do they go now? They take the first cabins, cars and carriages. I wish to see them cross the plains on foot, and then have wisdom enough to preach their way to the city of New York, and there in the same manner, to get money to cross the ocean. But no, they must start from here with a full purse, and take broad-cloth from here, or money to buy it in the States, and hire first cabin passages in the best steamers; and after all this many think it is hard times.

I want to see the elders live on butter-milk and potatoes, and when they return be more faithful. But they go as missionaries of the kingdom of God, and when they have been gone a year or two many of them come back merchants, and how they swell, "how popular 'Mormonism' is, we can get trusted in St. Louis ten thousand dollars as well as not, and in New York Bro. Brigham's word is so good that we can get all the goods we want; 'Mormonism' is becoming quite popular." Yes, and so are hell and the works of the devil.

When "Mormonism" finds favor with the wicked in this land, it is gone into the shade; but until the power of the Priesthood is gone, "Mormonism" will never become popular with the wicked. "Mormonism" is not one farthing better than in the days of Joseph.

The hand of the Almighty is over mankind, and "Mormonism" is hid from them; they do not know anything about it. The Lord deals with this people, and draws them into close quarters, and makes them run the gauntlet, and tries their faith and feelings. He draws them into diverse circumstances to prove whether they believe in Jesus Christ or not; and if need be he will let the enemy persecute us and destroy many of us; he will let them take our substance and drive us from our homes. Was "Mormonism" popular with those who have formerly persecuted, killed and driven us? Yes, as much so as it is at this day.

The hand of the Almighty is over the wicked, and he handles them according to his good pleasure, as he does the Saints. His hand is over us, and his hand is over them. But there is a thick mist cast before their eyes, so they do not discern the truth of "Mormonism." Do you wonder that they are mad, when they see the progress of truth? I do not.

The different political parties are in opposition. One party says, "we are republicans, and are opposed in principle to all who are not of our party." Can the various parties be reconciled? No. Each party wishes to elect a President of the United States. We design to elect Jesus Christ as our President, and the wicked wish to elect Lucifer, the Son of the Morning, and swear that they will have him; and we declare that we will serve Jesus Christ, and he shall be our President.

Do you think that the democrats and republicans have made friends? No, they are just as much opposed to each other now as ever they were, and the devil is just as much opposed to Jesus now as he was when the revolt took place in heaven. And as the devil increases his numbers by getting the people to be wicked, so Jesus Christ increases his numbers and strength by getting the people to be humble and righteous. The human family are going to the polls by and by, and they wish to know which party is going to carry the day.

When you see mild weather, when all is smooth and our religion is becoming popular, the Lord is casting mist before the eyes of the wicked, and they do not see nor understand what will take place at the polls when the day of voting comes. Those who vote for Jesus will be on the right hand, and those who vote for Lucifer on the left; one part will be right and the other wrong. We calculate that we are right, and we are going to vote for the Sovereign we believe in; and when He comes behold he will go into the chair of state and take the reins of government. Do you suppose the wicked will feel bad about it? That is what they are afraid of all the time.

They may kill the bodies we have, they may strive to injure us, but when the day of the great election comes, as the Lord Almighty lives, we shall gain our President, and we anticipate holding office under him. Do you blame the wicked for being mad? No. They desire to rule, to hold the reins of government on this earth; they have held them a great while. I do not blame them for being suspicious of us; men in high standing are suspicious of us, hence, the frequent cry, "treason, treason, we are going to have trouble with the people in Utah." What is the matter? Wherein can they point out one particle of injury that we have done to them?

True we have more wives than one, and what of that? They have their scores of thousands of prostitutes, we have none. But polygamy they are unconstitutionally striving to prevent; when they will accomplish their object is not for me to say. They have already presented a resolution in Congress that no man, in any of the Territories of the United States, shall be allowed to have more than one wife, under a penalty not exceeding five years imprisonment, and five hundred dollars fine. How will they get rid of this awful evil in Utah? They will have to expend about three hundred millions of dollars for building a prison, for we must all go into prison. And after they have expended that amount for a prison, and roofed it over from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to the summit of the Sierra Nevada, we will dig out and go preaching through the world. (Voice on the stand: What will become of the women, will they go to prison with us?) Bro. Heber seems concerned about the women's going with us; they will be with us, for we shall be here together. This is a little amusing.

Bro. Robbins, in his remarks, said, that the Constitution of the United States forbids making an ex post facto law. The presenting of the resolution alluded to shows their feelings, they wish the Constitution out of existence, and there is no question but that they will get rid of it as quickly as they can, and that would be by ex post facto law, which the Constitution of the United States strictly forbids.

Bro. Robbins also spoke of what they term the "nigger drivers and nigger worshippers," and observed how keen their feelings are upon their favorite topic slavery. The State of New York used to be a slave State, but there slavery has for sometime been abolished. Under their law for abolishing slavery the male slaves had to serve until they were 28 years old, and if my memory serves me correctly, the females until they were 25, before they could be free. This was to avoid the loss of, what they called, property in the hands of individuals. After that law was passed the people began to dispose of their blacks, and to let them buy themselves off. They then passed a law that black children should be free, the same as white children, and so it remains to this day.

But at the time that slavery was tolerated in the Northern and Eastern States, if you touched that question it would fire a man quicker than anything else in the world; there was something very peculiar about it, and it is so now. Go into a slave State and speak to a man on the subject, even though he never owned a slave, and you fire up his feelings in defence of that institution; there is no other subject that will touch him so quickly. They are very tenacious and sensitive on these points, and the North are becoming as sensitive as the South. The North is slow and considerate; they have their peculiar customs; and are influenced by the force of education, climate, &c., in a manner which causes them to think twice before they act; and often they will think and speak many times before they act. The spirit of the South is to think, speak and act all at the same moment. This is the difference between the two people.

Matters are coming to such a point, the feelings of both parties are aroused to that degree, that they would as soon fight as not. But I do no wish to speak any longer in that strain, though, if you want to know what I think about the question, I think both parties are decidedly wrong.

It is not the prerogative of the President of the United States to meddle with this matter, and Congress is not allowed, according to the Constitution, to legislate upon it. If Utah was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State and we chose to introduce slavery here, it is not their business to meddle with it; and even if we treated our slaves in an oppressive manner, it is still none of their business and they ought not to meddle with it.

If we introduce the practice of polygamy it is not their prerogative to meddle with it; if we should all turn to be Roman Catholics today, if we all turned to the old Mother Church, it would not be their business to meddle with us on that account. If we are Mormons, or Methodists, or worship the sun or a white dog, or if we worship a dumb idol, or all turn Shaking Quakers and have no wife, it is not their prerogative to meddle with these affairs, for in so doing they would violate the Constitution.

There is not a Territory in the Union that is looked upon with so suspicious an eye as is Utah, and yet it is the only part of the nation that cares anything about the Constitution. What have they done in the States? Why in some places they have celebrated the fourth of July by hoisting the National flag bottom side up, making a burlesque of the celebration, but "Utah is hell and the devil." This reminds me of a circumstance that transpired in England. A boy was brushing his shoes on Sunday morning, and a priest observing him said, "What! do you brush your shoes on Sunday?" "Yes, sir; do you brush your coat?" "Yes." "Well, I suppose it is life and salvation for you to brush your coat, but hell and damnation for me to brush my shoes." That is the difference.

"Mormonism" is true, and all hell cannot overthrow it. All the devil's servants on the earth may do all they can, as Bro. Clinton has just said, after twenty-six years faithful operation and exertion by our enemies including the times when Joseph had scarcely a man to stand by him, and when the persecution was as severe on him as it ever was in the world, what have they accomplished? They have succeeded in making us an organized Territory, and they are determined to make us an independent State or Government, and as the Lord lives it will be so. (The congregation shouted amen.) I say, as the Lord lives, we are bound to become a sovereign State in the Union, or an independent nation by ourselves, and let them drive us from this place if they can; they cannot do it. I do not throw this out as a banner; you gentiles, and hickory and basswood "Mormons," can write it down if you please, but write it as I speak it.

I wish you to understand that God rules and reigns, that he led us to this land and gave us a Territorial government. Was this the design of the wicked? No. Their design was to banish us from the earth, but they have driven us into noteriety and power; we are now raised to a position where we can converse with kings and emperors.

In the days of Joseph it was considered a great privilege to be permitted to speak to a member of Congress, but twenty-six years will not pass away before the Elders of this church will be as much thought of as the kings on their thrones. The Lord Almighty will roll on the wheels of his work, and none can stop them; and they cannot drive us from these mountains, because the Lord will not suffer them to do so. I desire them to let us alone; "hands off and money down," we crave no jobs and make none. Let them attend to their own business, and we will build up Zion while they go to hell. Jesus Christ will be the President and we are his officers, and they will have to leave the ground; for they will find that Jesus has the right of soil. This they are afraid of, do you blame them? No, I do not, and you should not; let them feel bad and worry.

I have frequently told you, and I tell you again, that the very report of the church and kingdom of God on earth is a terror to all the nations, wheresoever the sound thereof goeth. The sound of "Mormonism" is a terror to towns, counties, states, the pretended republican governments, and to all the world. Why? Because, as the Lord Almighty lives and the prophets have ever written the truth, this work is destined to revolutionize the world and bring all under subjection to the law of God, who is our law-giver.

I am still governor of this Territory, to the constant chagrin of my enemies; but I do not in the least neglect the duties of my Priesthood nor my office as governor; and while I honor my Priesthood I will do honor to my office as governor. This is hard to be understood by the wicked, but it is true. The feelings of many are much irritated, because I am here, and Congress has requested the President to inquire why I still hold the office of governor of the Territory of Utah; I can answer that question; I hold the office by appointment, and am to hold it until my successor is appointed and qualified, which has not yet been done. I shall bow to Jesus, my Governor, and under him, to Bro. Joseph. Though he has gone behind the vail and I cannot see him, he is my head, under Jesus Christ and the ancient apostles, and I shall go ahead and build up the kingdom. But if I was now sitting in the chair of state at the White House in Washington, everything in my office would be subject to my religion. Why? Because it teaches me to deal justice and mercy to all. I am satisfied to love righteousness and be full of the Holy Ghost, while all hell yawns to destroy me, though it cannot do it.

If I were to forsake this kingdom, the car of righteousness would roll over and crush me into insignificance; and so it will every other man that gets out of the right path. What then are we going to do? We had better stick to the ship than jump overboard, because if we stay aboard we stand a good chance to be saved, but if we jump over we shall be drowned.

Who can help all these things? I did not devise the great scheme of the Lord's opening the way to send this people to these mountains. Joseph contemplated the move for years before it took place, but he could not get here, for there was a watch placed upon him continually to see that he had no communication with the Indians. This was in consequence of that which is written in the Book of Mormon; one of the first evils alleged against him was that he was going to connive with the Indians; but did he ever do anything of the kind? No, he always strove to promote the best interest of all, both red and white. Was it by any act of ours that this people were driven into their midst? We are now their neighbors, we are on their land, for it belongs to them as much as any soil ever belonged to any man on earth; we are drinking their water, using their fuel and timber, and raising our food from their ground.

I do not wish men to understand I had anything to do with our being moved here; that was the providence of the Almighty; it was the power of God that wrought out salvation for this people; I never could have devised such a plan. What shall we do? Be still and know that the Lord is God; and let all people be silent and know that the Lord Almighty reigns, and does his pleasure on the earth. What had we better do? Be submissive and passive, serve our God, and walk humbly before Him.

The same Spirit pervades the Latter Day Saints in all the world, and what the Lord designs doing here is made manifest to the brethren in different parts, and the world feels the power of it and begins to persecute. When we commence that temple you will hear the devils howl.

We are now doing but little besides taking care of ourselves, but the kingdom has got to be taken, and the Lord Jesus come to reign here. When you wonder why it is that we are building many large buildings here and the temple not going on, be silent and patient.

Here let me ask the old Saints a question. Have you ever seen a temple finished, since this church commenced? You have not. The Lord says be patient and gather together the strength of my house; then do not fret yourselves, and if you feel a little worried, be sure that you are right, and do as you are counselled.

Why do we urge this upon the people? They are only counselled to love God and do His will. You cannot point out where a man has been counselled one hair's breadth from this course, and in this we have a right to be urgent and strenuous and sharp in our remarks. Serve your God and love your religion.

I could tell you a great many lessons that I have learned in "Mormonism," but it is very seldom that I refer to past scenes, they occupy but a small portion of my time and attention. Do you wish to know the reason of this? It is because there is an eternity ahead of me and my eyes are ever open and gazing upon it, and I have but little time to reflect upon the many circumstances I have been placed in thus far during life. They are behind me, and I am thankful that I have not time to reflect on past transactions, only once in a while, when it seems almost necessary to refer to them.

May the Lord God of heaven and earth bless you, and may He preserve us and all good men and women upon the earth, and give us power to blow the gospel trump to earth's remotest bounds and gather up the honest in heart, build up Zion, redeem Israel, rebuild Jerusalem, and fill the earth with the glory and knowledge of our God, and we will shout hallelujah. Amen.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 20, 1856.

Mormonism.

We have seen some folks take great trouble to account for the progress of Mormonism. Joseph Smith, the unlettered youth, who was the first charged by heaven to progagate its principles, was so manifestly without influence among men, without the necessary means for propagandism, according to the customs and notions of men, that prophets without number predicted a speedy extinction to the new cause. In spite of sneers, contempt, and persecution, it still lives, and daily gives more and better signs of vitality. In its early days, when its progress became so apparent that contempt changed to fear, and men dreaded what before they despised, some wiseacres sought to credit one or two men of education that stood connected with it as being the soul and sinew of the cause, and sought their overthrow. Changes have come round, and they who were once esteemed the most essential to its success have passed away—some to inherit the reward of faithfulness and others to again mingle with the beggarly elements of the world. The absence of the one class or the opposition of the other has made no difference to its success—the movement is onward, onward. The strength of Mormonism lies not in an arm of flesh, but in its own truthfulness. It is made of no man, but it has made many a man. Its advocates have never raised it to what it is, but it has raised its advocates to what they are. So sensible of this fact are all wise men connected with it that they seek constantly to drink of its spirit. It is only those on whom experience is always wasted who try to impart their spirit, their wisdom, their intelligence, or, to be nearer the mark, we might say their foolishness to it. A good man who lives under its influence, who carries out its precepts in his life, will shine as a star in the firmament of God—be a beacon of light; while another, who will walk by the whisperings of his own spirit, his own preconceived notions, will ever manifest his own darkness, and be as a well without water. What man who has attained to any eminence among his brethren that knows not that in the darkest hour of trial his faith was firmer in the potency of the cause he advocated, that he relied more upon its wisdom, its spirit, for deliverance than upon the finest and fairest promises that the tongue of man could utter or the human heart devise? What man ever set forth Mormonism for the salvation of those who heard it but what relied upon its spirit to convince the judgment? We have heard fine sermons, nicely delivered, according to rule, square, and compass, but the words have fallen upon the ear and been forgotten, while the plain, clear, and unadorned principles of salvation, uttered with the eloquence of a believing heart, have lighted up our minds, warmed our souls, and clothed our tongue with praise. We are not of that school who believe that educational acquirements qualify men to preach effectively the Truth; neither are we of that class of men who think that ignorance is a better qualification for that work. While we are sensible that the Truth needs no adornment, that, like pure gold, it requires no gilding, and that no paint improves the lily or the rose, we are equally sensible that the force of Truth may be weakened by the folly of the ignorant. So varied are the opinions of men, and so apt are some to run to extremes, that we think it not amiss to say, to both learned and unlearned among the Elders, cultivate your minds, store up instruction as silver, and knowledge as choice gold, clothe your minds with a knowledge of the revelations of God, be conversant with the history of the Church, read its page with attention, profit by the experience of others, seek information from all good books, and when you speak to instruct the people let your hearts be humble before God your Father, let His spirit bring before your minds the ideas to impart to those who listen, and when you speak to edify for the salvation of the world, the upbuilding of your brethren and sisters, be assured that you will never fail, for God will glorify those who honor Him and trust in His power. To this let the Elders give heed, for they live in an evil day, with a generation of unbelievers. Human wisdom, human effort is powerless to destroy the scepticism, blindness, and bigotry that exist everywhere. Mormonism is never more powerful than when plainly spoken; the Elders should, therefore, never talk in the clouds. The instructions given through the modern Prophet have been emphatic on preaching—no man should speak in the assemblies of the Saints without the spirit of the Living God. One moment's reflection will convince all that when the glory of God is sought His spirit must lead the speaker and operate upon the hearer, else speaking is in vain. How foolish is it, then, for man to boast of his own greatness, talk of himself eternally, and forget the rock from whence he was hewn or the pit from whence he was dug. Our experience has long since taught us that all we have ever done has been through the spirit of the Lord working with us, and when that spirit has, for one cause or another, been withheld, it has been a cloudy day—a day of mourning. Revelation is a light to our feet and a lamp to our path. Let us contend for it, and live to deserve it.

Christians who have prayed long and loud to an imaginary being—without body parts and passions, seated on the top of a topless throne, whose centre is everywhere and circumference nowhere—have shut their ears to the voice of the God of Sabaoth, and in the blindness of their superstition declared that more revelation is unnecessary, that He must to them reveal no more the hidden things of His wisdom. Their ignorance, their rebellion, their forgetfulness to seek after His Holy Spirit to lead them and guide them has resulted in their division and confusion, and they now stand before the world a libel upon the name they profess. In consequence of which the more daring of men, though nothing less infatuated, point the finger of scorn at and ridicule Christianity, speak reproachfully and contemptously of the name of God, doubt His existence, or, if they admit that possibility, deny His right to dictate to them. In the midst of all this confusion the Great Author of human existence has ever looked with tender affection upon His children, but His heart has been pained to see their folly while passing through this school of experience. When He has beheld the disposition to seek after Life, His spirit has been near to encourage, but when wickedness only has been in the hearts of the children of men, when they have forgotten the source of their existence and have heedlessly dashed into iniquity, and corrupted themselves, His spirit has ceased to strive with them; still in the darkest days of iniquity He has opened up a means of deliverance for those who would abstain from evil. Whoever wants to know God and be the object of His care and compassion let him eschew the corruptions of the world, let him practice virtue, speak the truth, walk in the light and as the morning dew gives to the thirsty plant life and animation, so shall the balmy influence of the Holy Spirit of the Most High instill into his spirit intelligence that the human voice has never uttered in his ears. Whoever may think or say to the contrary, it is nevertheless the voice of heaven and of philosophy that virtue, truth and light are principles indispensable to Life and lead to glory, while vice, falsehood, and darkness are negatives which bringeth Death and leads to destruction. It may serve the purposes of certain parties to cry peace, to eulogise the institutions of the professedly wise and philanthropic, and descant on the beauties of the world in which we dwell, but no man who looks beneath the surface of things can fail to perceive that the seeds of corruption and dissolution are every where and in every thing, that human existence as it now is, is nothing but an empty bubble a struggle for appearance. Some there are who will cleave to the side of life and struggle against innumerable temptations that constantly beset the narrow way; but they are few. Long and fierce may be the combat to gain the victory over self, the world and the devil, but as certain as the aspirant for life shall battle with a courageous heart and with confidence in the wisdom and strength of Omnipotence so certain shall he prevail. It may seem cheerless to stand in the ranks of the despised, the calumniated, the hated, and the outraged, but there is a spirit in the bosom of the upright man that raises his mind to the contemplation of scenes grander than the passing scenes of daily life, something more tangible than the fading things of this subluinary existence that satisfies his soul that he struggles not in vain. There is nothing but Mormonism, in its power, that can save what good is in the world from being corrupted. Men find that honesty, honor, and uprightness is at a low value, while deceit, meanness, and villainy are rampant, and glide down the stream of time with ease and honor. Let the pure, unwavering testimony of Truth go forth among the people, and the honest in heart, who see the shoals that threaten the destruction of the bark of life, will welcome it as the mariner in distress welcomes the beacon light of safety.

Utah's Admission Again.

"A letter from Washington in the Albany Evening Journal says there is an 'evident determination to press Utah into the Union at this session, with both Slavery and polygamy.' We are a little curious to see whether the Democrats will stand up to the Squatter-Sovereignty doctrine to this extent. We have no doubt that the anxiety of the South to secure another Slave State will induce them to go a great ways towards the toleration of polygamy. But that they will actually vote into the Union a State which makes so disgusting and degrading a system the basis of its social institutions, we shall be slow to believe.

"Hitherto, so far as we have observed, no Southern press or Southern man has ventured a word in defence of polygamy in Utah. Whether they will hereafter suffer it to pass sub silentio remains to be seen. The Constitution of that State will doubtless say nothing on the subject. But the fact will be none the less certain that if she is admitted, she comes with this as one of her domestic institutions.

Unless it be a stock-jobbing-well-paying-affair it is folly to try and drive a fact into the head of the Editor of the N. Y. Daily Times. When dimes are on hand his friend the Herald has hopes of some simple twice two make four fact penetrating his wool, but, in the absence of the almighty dollar, facts and arguments, based on facts as clear as the light of noon-day, fall on the crust of his brain like so much water on a duck's back. To tell him therefore, that the Utonians have not spoken for or against slavery in their Constitution, and that Polygamy or any other principle of sacred ancient faith is not even hinted at—and can never become an institution of the Territory of Utah or the State of Deseret is of course so many words lost—but as many of our readers are likewise some of his readers, they will by our statement understand the difference between the real question before Congress and the false statements of the Daily Times and that clique of journalists. Polygamy can never become an institution of the State of Deseret. Everybody who knows anything of the Mormons knows that marriage is esteemed by that people as a holy, sacred institution—a sacrament of the Church to which none but the pure in heart should approach. Did marriage or any other sacred institution of Heaven become in Utah a civil institution, administered by the civil magistrate on Congressional authority, we fear we should soon see the Utonians as foolish and corrupt as their neighbors in Christian countries where dollars make the man, the want of them—the fellow.

Congress has no more to do with the religious institutions of the Mormons than they have to do with the religious institutions of the Chinese. There are at the present moment in the United States hundreds of thousands of sincere, honest, devout Pagans who worship the sun, moon, stars, and idols, the workmanship of human hands—and who can hinder them? North America does not belong to the House of Hapsburg, of Brunswick or of Romanoff; it belongs to the people—the people are their own sovereigns. No law can therefore be established to interfere with any domestic compact or control any religious worship, however ridiculous or absurd such may appear to others. Law to be just is for the protection of all. So long as the domestic relations or religious worship of A does not infringe upon the rights of B no law should compel A to conform in his relations and worship to suit the views and notions of B. If B is stronger than A and oppresses him, should A grow and become stronger than B, the latter may expect, if A is not actuated by a higher sense of justice, he will undoubtedly measure to him the same law in return. Authority may yet change hands.

A New Vigilance Committee.

"In Carson Valley a Vigilance Committee of Gentile settlers, or ordinary American citizens, has been formed to protect themselves against the Mormons, who appear to be commencing the same course of conduct which led to their expulsion from Nauvoo. The repeated famines at Salt Lake and the ravages of the grasshoppers have compelled many of them to leave that region and take up their residence in the fertile valleys on the eastern boundary of California."—[Bulletin.

We are not at all surprised at these "Gentile settlers" being alarmed, and betraying symptoms of uneasiness. Carson Valley is situated in the extreme western portion of Utah, and, from its proximity to the Golden State, is inhabited by many persons, latterly from the diggins; but formerly from the States. It is very probable that some of the "ordinary American citizens," now of Carson Valley, took part in the persecutions against the Mormons—or extraordinary! American citizens in former years, and now that the Mormons have some authority in those regions the guilty consciences of their persecutors betray their dread of receiving that measure of punishment which their vengeful hearts would have measured to the Mormons, had the boot been on the other leg. Knowing considerable of the Mormons in general, and by no means ignorant of the intentions of those in authority in Carson Valley, we can assure the Bulletin, and through him his friends of the new V. C. that they have nothing to fear—if they mind their own business. The Mormons have always been going to do some dreadful things, but never happened to do them; we apprehend, therefore, that the terrible what's to come so much dreaded by the Carsonians will pass away like the visions of the terrible things that the Mormons were to have done to the Missourians and Illinoisians. If the folks don't cease talking about the great things that the Mormons are going to do, we really think it possible that ere long the Mormons will believe they are somebody, and some fine clear morning when their enemies awake from their heavy slumber, if they don't, in Bible phraseology, "find themselves all dead men," they may have an opportunity of joining in the chorus with Job, in singing: "The very things we dreaded have come upon us." However, as there is always a cause for everything that exists, and some foundation for every rumor, we may inform our eastern cotemporaries who have copied from the Bulletin, that we are quite satisfied that a portion of the Gentile settlers in Carson Valley have not only formed their Vigilance Committee, but we are equally satisfied that they had something to apprehend from the Mormons. When Salt Lake City was first organized, and civil authorities constituted to administer the laws of the Territory, many pilgrims to the diggins in passing through the city took unwarrantable liberties with the property of the settlers—feeding horses and oxen at the most convenient field of corn with the most perfect indifferance. When the United States Marshall attended to the lawless, there was frequently exhibited the idea—"It is only the Mormons." When damages were asked and awarded some of them got sober, and freely paid; others more stupid to their own interests, preserved the idea: "It is only the Mormons," and found the court could add the order for imprisonment to that damages. Whether they liked the lesson or not, they learned that the Mormons go in for Law and Order. Carson Valley is frequently inhabited by horse thieves, cut throats, and murderers, who have escaped from the punishment due to their crimes in other States; and we have not the slightest doubt that such "ordinary" American citizens now require a Vigilance Committee for their own special, particular, and individual protection against the Mormons, for the latter are certain to play over again the game at Nauvoo, and that was to expose villany, and hand over to justice the guilty.

A Great Discovery.

For some weeks back we have noticed in the papers a small paragraph about some judge in Utah making a discovery that Polygamy was in opposition to some law of the United States; having believed the paragraph a hoax we have taken little or no notice of it, though we have met with it more than a score of times in our exchanges. A gentleman has just entered our sanctum with a copy of that shrivelled up affair, the N. Y. Sun, containing something we don't know well what to call it, but the Sun calls it a "Judicial Charge Against Polygamy," the authorship of which is laid to poor Judge Drummond. We have no space at our disposal to insert the twaddle that is called a charge, and believing that the judge will yet thank us for our kind consideration in omitting it, we insert only the statute (as quoted) referred to for the information of all concerned.

"If any man or woman, not being married to each other, lewdly and lasciviously associate or cohabit together; or if any man or woman, married or unmarried, is guilty of open or gross lewdness, and designedly make any open and indecent exposure of his or her person—every such person so offending shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years and not less than six months, and a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or both, at the discretion of the Court."

The fault may be ours—we may be very dull in the comprehension, but we are forced to confess our incapacity to discover anything in the above regulating marriage with one wife or with a dozen or a thousand wives. The statute to us is plain enough, or rather we might say as plain and clear as statutes are in general, and as the subject is rather delicate, we beg to be excused from further notice of it, and with remarking that in Utah the statutes for the punishment of the same offence is nearly in the same language we drop it. Did Judge Drummond cite that statute and make the reported charge to the Grand Jury at the July term of the First Judicial District Court for Utah Territory, held at Genoa, in Carson county? We must confess that we never entertained a very high opinion of the gentleman's intellectual acquirements and capacity for the bench, but we scarcely thought him simple enough to be the author of such rubbish. We have read it a second time to see if we could discover any trace of the judge in it, and are more inclined to believe that it is a forgery than to put him down at such a low estimate.

Two gentlemen from Utah being present in our office when we read it, one of them asked the other the following questions:

"Did Judge Drummond take along his wife to Utah?"

"But the Deseret News announced the 'arrival of Judge Drummond and lady.' Who was this lady?"

"A lady that he picked up in Baltimore."

"Was this the one that he used to have with him on the Bench at Fillmore, that travelled with him and that he introduced as his wife, at Independence, Salt Lake, and other places?"

"Yes."

"Does his wife know of it?"

"I am told that Mrs. Richards, of Unionville, and Mrs. Holden, of Fillmore, and Mr. McLanahan, of Provo, U. T., brother and sisters of Mrs. Drummond, have written to her on the subject, for the purpose of getting information to establish proceedings against him, under the Utah statutes against adultery."

On the above we make no comment, but we are desirous of obtaining the lady's name; and that the Judge may remember we shall explain a little. She crossed the plains to Utah at the same time that he did. She was not a Mormon, and the object she had in going there was always a subject for guessing. She boiled the coffee for herself and another, and probably was otherwise useful and accommodating. After she got to Utah she seemed to manifest a great craving for judicial lore; it probably appeared to some eccentricity; others were less kind in their surmising. She, nevertheless, would always be near the court; and where that was held, she went, even as far south at one time as Fillmore City. Perhaps that description of her may not recall her to the judge's remembrance; we shall, therefore, add something more. She was called Mrs. Drummond, but whether he married her or not is for the Judge to say. She was the lady of whom Abrahams, the Jew, had the audacity to say something that should never be mentioned, and which so roused the Judge's indignation that he sent his man, Cato, the runaway nigger that he had bought the chance of and caught, to chastise him. Cato, thinking that he had instructions to fully choke off Abrahams, and otherwise dispose of him, flourished his knife around the poor Jew, till the latter in agony begged for mercy, and finally, with sweet promises of money, unnerved Cato's arm. The Judge may remember that he and Cato were placed under arrest in Fillmore City for this outrage. And thus Judge Drummond, after getting to Carson Valley, at the extreme edge of Utah Territory, where he is beyond the reach of prosecution by his wife's friends, begins to issue his judicial bulls, and all the world wonders at the iniquity of the "Mormons!"

Departures.

Elders Thomas Bullock, James G. Browning, William Brown, John H. Tippitts, Thomas Pierce, Daniel Page, Jr., and Henry Harris, left for Liverpool, on Thursday, on board the packet-ship, Guy Mannering. The ship has been detained, for some days, much to the inconvenience of the passengers. The brethren leave in good spirits, and thank the Saints here for their kindness to them during their stay.

We wish them a prosperous voyage.

Nicaragua.

The last news from the seat of war is of more than ordinary interest. On Friday of last week the friends of Gen. Walker were elated with reports of recent victories, the intelligence of which reached the States by New Orleans. The following day intelligence, from the Tennessee, via Charleston, had a different complexion, and Walker's chances reported exceedingly doubtful. Full particulars have since been received by the arrival of the Tennessee at this port, by which we learn that Walker and his small army were in a dreadful fix. Finding it impossible to hold Granada any longer on account of the severe sickness which prevailed among the white inhabitants, and its very probable forceable occupation by the allied army, the General gave orders to Gen. Henningsen to remove the valuables and army stores, and after three days' notice to the inhabitants to remove, the torch was applied, and the greater portion of the city burned. A portion of the allied army took up a position by the side of the Lake, cutting off Gen. Henningsen's retreat, and forcing him and those under his command to take refuge in a church that still remained. They had been beseiged for some days, and as there was nothing to prevent the allies from continuing the siege, it is supposed that they will starve them into submission. Walker having gone to the island of Ometepe with the sick and wounded that had been removed from the city previous to its destruction, was perfectly helpless. He has been steaming between Virgin Bay, where he has some troops, and Granada; but the allies, by their artillery force, keep his steamboat a respectable distance from the shore, so that he can render no assistance to Henningsen.

The Nicaraguain schooner Granada, of 90 tons burthen, carrying two six-pounders and manned by twenty men, had an engagement on the 23d Nov. near the harbor of San Juan, with the Costa Rican brig "Eleventh of April," of 200 tons, carrying four nine-pounders and 114 men. After fighting two hours a shot from the Granada struck the magazine of the brig, which instantly blew up. The Captain commanding the Granada with his crew succeeding in saving forty of the enemy from a watery grave. Some died shortly after arriving on shore, and the others were liberated to return to Costa Rica.

Walker's friends have not yet given up hope, but think it possible for him to regain power and popularity; but it seems like hoping against hope. Disease had made sad havoc among his raw recruits to which are now added want of provisions and proper shelter. The sick and wounded on the Island are reported to have been nearly all massacred by the Indians inhabiting it.

Next steamer is expected to bring news of his utter defeat, as he now holds no better material position than he did when he landed with his 56 from California, and has against him in addition to his old enemies, the greater portion of those who bade him welcome and the united neighboring States. He may recover, but his chances are few.

Utah.

"I am happy to be able to inform you of the prosperous journey and safe arrival in this city of myself and the brethren with whom I was associated in crossing the plains. We were twenty-nine days from Florence to this city, arriving on Saturday, the 4th inst., in excellent health and spirits, without the loss of an animal, the breakage of a carriage, or accident of any kind to mar or delay our journey. By our early arrival we have thus had the rich privilege of being present at one of the largest, best, and most spirited conferences I ever had the honor to enjoy since associated with the Saints of the Most High. Our beloved Presidency seem inspired to lead off, and the whole people to rise en masse, with one accord, to purify themselves, renew their covenants, magnify their several callings, and unite together in rolling forth and carrying out the purposes of the Almighty, in building up His kingdom upon the earth in this momentous age.

"Presidents Young, Kimball, and Grant seem in excellent health and spirits, and all things appear to be moving on prosperously. Many changes are taking place throughout the Territory; but all denote the rapid advance of the kingdom and preparation of the people for that eventful crisis now hovering over the nations of the earth.

"Sister Taylor called upon us the day of our arrival in the city, to make inquiries of the dear ones far away. As far as I have yet been able to learn, the families of the Hon. George A. Smith, Judge Appleby, and Dr. Bernhisel were all in good health.

"Sister Felt wishes to be remembered kindly—much love is sent you by all. Please remember me with high regards to George A., the Doctor, my son George, Elders Stenhouse and Dulin, with all our friends in New York and vicinity.

"May the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon you all, is the sincere prayer of your brother and fellow-laborer in the cause of Zion,

N. H. Felt.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Walker's friends here are busy trying to raise men, money, provisions and clothing to send by the Tennessee, on the 24th. A Mass Meeting at the Tabernacle is announced for Saturday evening. Help, material help is the cry. The colored folks in some of the Southern States have been preparing for an uprising on Christmas. Some papers go in strongly for hanging the Abolitionists that are caught in the South. Mr. Huntington the Wall Street broker, is presently undergoing his trial. The weather was exceedingly wet and stormy last Sunday, causing great damage. It is now piercing cold.

Correspondence of Presid't. Ezra T. Benson.

42 Islington, Liverpool,
Nov. 26, 1856.

Pres. John Taylor—Dear Brother: In accordance with my promise when I had the pleasure of seeing you in New York on our route to England, I take up my pen to communicate with you.

I arrived at Liverpool, in company with President Pratt and the missionaries that left with us destined for Europe, on the 13th of July, all well. We were very kindly welcomed to these shores by President F. D. Richards and the brethren laboring with him in the office. Since my arrival in England I have traveled and preached through many of the Conferences in England and Wales. The Saints generally speaking are doing their utmost to spread the truth and to live their religion. At present there are not a great many coming into the Church; but I anticipate great good will result in the in-gathering of many honest-hearted souls, as soon as President Pratt's gigantic measures for circulating the printed Word among the people composing the British nation are permanently set in order throughout the various Conferences.

In some Branches of the Church the spirit of apostacy is more or less felt; and those who do not live in the light of the Holy Spirit leave and become miserable. In Manchester they are having lively times, and have had for some three months past, in consequence of some apostate spirits that have come out publicly and lectured against the doctrines of the Church and the characters of individuals that have labored faithfully in the ministry in these lands. The principal actor among these apostates is a man by the name of Hawthornthwaite, formerly an Elder in the Church, but who, I am informed, has been disaffected for some time past.

At the suggestion of President Pratt, Bro. Little and myself spent last Sunday at Manchester. Lectures were announced by placards to be delivered; but in consequence of the mob that had collected for the purpose of breaking up our meetings, we had but little chance of informing the people on the principles of our holy religion. Many intelligent persons were disgusted with the proceedings of the mob that compose an anti-Mormon society recently established in Manchester; in fact, some of their own clan expressed their feelings of shame at the conduct of their associates. In the evening several respectable men called at our lodgings and inquired the cause of the excitement that prevailed at the meetings, and also wished to be enlightened upon the doctrines of the Church and our location in the west. In conjunction with Bro. Little, I answered their enquiries to their entire satisfaction; they left us, much pleased with the interview. I have no doubt that through this excitement much good will yet result.

The Saints generally in this country are very anxious to get away to the land of Zion. I have been preaching the necessity of their saving all their surplus means which they may have on hand after their payments are made to the Church and their domestic expenses are liquidated. I believe that by their handing their pence over weekly to a treasurer appointed to receive the same in the respective Branches, that a great amount of means can be accumulated together to assist the honest poor from these lands. The people seem to take hold of this matter with deep interest.

I do not anticipate a large emigration from this country the coming season; the heavy liabilities of the P. E. Fund Co. will prevent any assistance being rendered, except what is absolutely necessary.

I have been endeavoring to effect sales of property donated by various persons in Utah to the P. E. Fund, but have only been successful in two or three instances. The wealthiest portion of the Saints have emigrated, and those who are left, that have the means, have not sufficient faith to lay hold of this matter. I presume they will yet be glad to be permitted to do something towards the deliverance of God's people, but their positions must of necessity be materially changed; they will then, if they have any of the love of the Gospel dwelling in their hearts, esteem it a privilege to assist in building up Zion. It does really seem hard for some men with a few dimes to maintain their position when they attain to one in this kingdom.

Since my arrival in this country I have visited the Scandinavian Mission, in company with Elder John Kay. We left Hull, per steamer Saxonia, for Hamburgh, on the 7th of September, and arrived via Kiel and Korsoer, at Copenhagen on the 10th of September. We were very kindly received by Pres. Hector C. Haight, Bros. Widerberg and Thomassen, who are associated with him in the office, and are faithful and good brethren, in conjunction with President Gilienquist, who has the presidency of the Copenhagen Conference. President Haight enjoys richly the spirit of his mission, and has the full faith and confidence of the Saints. We spent about six weeks, and travelled through the most of the Conferences in that Mission, visited Sweden and Jutland, and had many happy seasons with the Danish Saints.

The Saints composing the Scandinavian Mission are not of the wealthiest portion of the community, but they are rich in faith and ready and willing to do all they can to further the interests of the Kingdom. The Elders are under much restraint in preaching the gospel, are often cast into prison, whipped and scourged; but, notwithstanding this, they are determined, under all circumstances, to call upon their countrymen to repent of their sins and be reconciled to God through obedience to His laws.

Bro. Taylor, the work is onward, onward, onward, in those nations, and I say God speed it, until every honest-hearted soul is convinced of the truth, and gathered to the chambers of Israel. I anticipate there will be a ship load of Saints leaving that Mission for Utah the coming season.

Since my return from Scandinavia I have spent some of my time visiting a few Conferences in England, and have had a very agreeable visit with Bros. Daniels, Evans and Ashby, the presidency of the Welsh Mission. Things look well in Wales, and these brethren are faithful to the trust reposed in them. Bro. Daniels is busy translating Pres. Pratt's new series of tracts into the Welsh language; and all are sanguine that, with the blessing of the Lord, the time has come for many again in these lands to obey and serve those holy laws which God has revealed through his servant Joseph in this dispensation.

I anticipate leaving Liverpool on Friday for Belfast, Ireland, accompanied by Bro. W. B. Young, to spend a few days with Bro. John Scott. I shall afterwards proceed to Scotland and visit some of the Scottish Churches.

In conclusion, I will say that it affords me considerable joy and satisfaction to peruse your valuable and instructive paper. It certainly reflects great credit on its worthy editor. My prayers ascend continually in your behalf for the choicest of Heaven's blessings to rest upon you and the power of your holy Apostleship to enable you to combat successfully the enemies to the truth.

Presidents Pratt and Little, in conjunction with the brethren laboring in this office, join me in warmest love to you and those associated with you. Faithfully I remain, your friend and brother in the Kingdom of God,

E. T. Benson.

[We are much pleased to receive a communication from President Benson, and no doubt our readers share our satisfaction. We hope that, when favored with a leisure hour, he will resume his pen and contribute his quota to The Mormon. We extend the same invitation to his associates in the Presidency of the Church in Europe. Their contributions to our paper will always be very acceptable. —Ed.]

Correspondence of G. F. A. Spiller.

St. Louis, Dec. 8th, 1856.

Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse—Beloved Brother: I have just returned from a two months' tour through the counties of Calhoun, Adams, McDonough and Hancock in Iowa; visiting the Saints in Calhoun, Quincy, Nauvoo and Keokuk, in Iowa. I accompanied Elder Samuel H. B. Smith, in his visits to his relations, and formed a very agreeable acquaintance with Mrs. Sophronia McClarie, Mrs. Catherine Salisbury, and Mrs. Lucy Millikin, the three surviving sisters of Joseph, the Prophet. Also, with his four sons Joseph, Frederick, Alexander and David, likewise the widow of the Prophet—now Mrs. Bidemam. Mrs. McClarie and Mrs. Salisbury are widows. Mrs. Millikin is still enjoying the society of her excellent husband. I have never seen Joseph in the flesh, but judging from portraits, the features of Mrs. Millikin appear to me to be an excellent facsimile of Joseph's. I remained with them over two nights and they made me heartily welcome. They testified that they knew that their brother Joseph was a Prophet of God, and when I took my departure they earnestly requested me to pay them another visit as soon as I could.

The sons of the Prophet are very excellent and intelligent young men, having a gentlemanlike demeanor. They were very sociable, and I enjoyed their society very highly. Joseph, the eldest son, is about 24 years of age, and has recently married a very amiable and intelligent young lady: he treated me with marked respect and I could not feel otherwise than at home.

The Saints as a general thing, are doing well, they are strong in the faith, and, many of them are preparing to gather to Utah next spring, while others of less means are expecting to start early next spring for the settlements of the Saints in Nebraska.

As I passed through Carthage the history of that horrible tragedy that was acted on that place on the 27th of June, 1844, came horribly to my mind, and never before had a place become so hateful to my sight as Carthage. As I stood before the jail, where our beloved Prophet Joseph and Patriarch Hyrum were assassinated—because they dared to become the Lord's annointed messengers—the visions of the past came before me and I fancied that I was a witness of the revolting tragedy, and could hear the hellish yells of a fiendish maddened multitude, which heated my feelings for revenge, but which were quieted by a still small voice, apparently, sweetly whispering in my ear "Vengeance is Mine, and I will repay." With mingled feelings of sorrow and detestation I turned from the accursed spot, where two of the best and noblest of mankind were martyred, but whose names shall go down honored to posterity, from age to age, and the smoke of their blood will ever ascend to Heaven until it is avenged upon the earth.

Upon entering Nauvoo, the most prominent object that attracted my attention was the colossal ruins of the universal renowned Temple. The west side, which is a double wall, or outer court, still remains almost entire, and can be seen at a distance of several miles. Never was a crusader or pilgrim more earnest on his way to the Holy City of Jerusalem, or Mecca, than I was to visit these ruins. The Temple was built upon a beautiful eminence, and hence its ruins look down upon the deserted city in solemn grandeur and magnificence. This majestic monument of the past will ever bear record of the blood thirstiness of Christians, of the broken faith of Illinois as pledged by the Governor, and of a people, who, because of their faithfulness to their God, had to find a home a thousand miles from civilized life and among the wilds of the savage red Indians, before they could enjoy and practice the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Language fails me to cast a reflex to paper of my feelings and reflections as I moved among these ruins, where the broken links of the past and present were welded, and the living and the dead united. As I turned from the ruins with feelings of reluctance and sadness, the words of the Psalmist came to my mind as I thought on the trials of the Saints and the providence of God—"Though they walk in the midst of trouble, Thou wilt revive them; Thou wilt stretch forth Thy hand against the wrath of their enemies, and Thy right hand shall save them."

Nauvoo is now a small scattering town of about 1000 inhabitants; it was once a city of twelve miles in circumference and contained 20,000 inhabitants. In the days of Joseph the Prophet, it was noted for its busy enterprise and bid fair of rapidly becoming the emporium of the Western country, but like other locations where the people of God once dwelt, but have been driven away, it has sunk into insignificance. A gentleman remarked to me, while me were waiting for the ferry, "that Nauvoo was a very beautiful place, and an excellent location for a city, but the place was horridly dull."

In conversing with the people in different parts of the country, I find that many are very embittered towards the Saints, and they talk about cutting Mormon's throats as glibly as if they were hogs. But there are several who will listen with attention and great interest. A gentleman with whom I had conversed upon the principles of the Kingdom of God, seeing that I had no overcoat to protect me from the inclemency of the season, kindly gave me a blanket-wrapper with all that nobleness that gives unasked.

In being called to the high vocations of a teacher of mankind, I feel the weight of my responsibility, for I realize that it is no small matter to be sent forth to multiply the intelligence of the human soul, and to shape the minds of men to fulfil the purposes of their creation, and that they might approximate every moment of their lives to their destiny as the Sons of God, even to be like God. But as my earnest desire is, to be a vessel of usefulness in the Kingdom of God, I bend to the mandates of Heaven with fixed purpose to do my best to carry them out.

Sister Spiller requests you to give her kind love to Sister Stenhouse. With my kind regards to you and the Brethren in the Office, I remain faithfully in the Gospel.

GEORGE F. A. SPILLER.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 15, 1856.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE—Dear Bro.: It is with feelings of gratitude to Him who rules on high that I am privileged this morning to take up my pen to inform you that my health has so far recovered as to be able to ride in the cars from Minersville to this city, where I arrived last Saturday afternoon. I wrote Bro. Taylor my situation in my last letter, which, ere this reaches you, no doubt he will have received. Since then my health has been improving slowly, although my system is yet weak and feeble on account of the pain I have endured. I hope in a day or two more to be able to wear my boot again, as the swelling in my foot is considerably abated. I purpose leaving here (Providence permitting) on Wednesday or Thursday next for Delaware, to visit the Branches of the Church there, in company with Eld. Cannon, and return here by Christmas, and shall endeavor to be in New York by the first of January, so as to be with you to participate in the pleasure of your social party, to come off, I perceive by the advertisement, on New Year's Day.

I have known what it was to be without hope of eternal life, knowledge of the gospel principles of exaltation, what appertained to a hereafter, or for what I was created or had a being. But since the voice of eternal truth has saluted my ears and I have embraced the same, and that spirit which searcheth the deep things of God has lit up my understanding to comprehend some of the principles of salvation beyond the tomb and the objects of my creation, and the necessity of affliction, sorrow and death here, and the body returning to its mother dust until the morning of the first resurrection, I can lift up my voice in prayer and praise to Him who rules on high, in the midst of affliction, pain and distress of this mortal tabernacle, and enjoy that spirit which brings peace and joy, calm and refreshing as the gentle zephyrs of a summer's morning; for, amid all the ills of life, the Saint of God hears the voice of the good shepherd, arising above all the discordant elements that surround him, "It is I, be not afraid." But not so with him who knows not God; when he leaves this stage of action, his hopes, joys and pleasures cease and go down with him to the grave—his time has been wasted, the days of his probation are ended, "the summer is past, the harvest is ended, and his soul is not saved." Such an one, his sun sits in a dark cloud, and the night of death closes over his devoted head, full of woe and misery; while, on the other hand, the saint of God can face a frowning world and the grim destroyer—calm and collected in affliction and in the hour of death, he calmly resigns his spirit into the hands of Him who gave it, and goes down to his grave like a shock of corn fully ripe—his star sits in the ocean of life, leaving rays of glory behind it—his sun goes down in peace, to arise in glory, and receive his everlasting reward in the resurrection of the just. But I must stop, or perhaps you will think I am preaching; well, have it so, while I pen further reflections:

My limbs are sore, my head's in pain,
I feel oppress'd—cast down,
With sickness in this mortal frame,
That doth my strength confound.

I often ask, why is it so,
(For surely I can't tell,)
That I much feel affliction's woe,
While others always well?

Is it because my sins are more,
And slight his favored grace,
The chast'ning rod is on me sore,
To keep me in my place?

If it be thus, I feel resigned,
And humbly kiss the rod
Of Heaven's King, so good and kind,
My Father and my God.

Give me but grace to persevere,
And feel all's for the best,
To do the work while I am here,
And enter into rest.

My Saviour, he endured them all,
And bore the chast'ning rod,
Relieved us from our sinful fall,
And brought us back to God.

Then I'll not mourn, nor e'er complain,
But say, "Thy will be done;"
Endure by faith those aches and pains,
Until my race is run.

Lord, if it's thy will, wilt thou me heal,
And ever faithful find me;
That health and strength I yet may feel
To do the work assigned me.

As ever, yours, &c.,

W. I. APPLEBY.

[We do certainly anticipate having the Judge here at the Festival on New Year's day. His numerous friends throughout the New York Conference fully expect to meet with him on that occasion; and we trust he will so arrange business, as to gratify us with his presence, and that his health will be so much improved as to enable him to take part with his brethren.—ED.]

Items from Utah.

THE following extracts from letters addressed to the Editor of the Western Standard, and published in that paper, will, no doubt, be perused with interest by our readers:

G. S. L. CITY, Oct. 4, 1856.

Our first annual fair or exhibition of Home Manufactures and native productions closed this evening, being the third day. The exhibition was very creditable to a new territory, exhibiting almost every kind of wearing apparel, cutlery, leather, carpeting, natural curiosities, paintings, machines, all kinds of stock, fruit, grain, vegetables of every variety and of the finest qualities. The exhibition took place in the Deseret Store Buildings and was incessantly thronged during the whole three days. It would compare favorably with any thing of the kind witnessed in many of the old States.

We have partially resumed the Public Works—are hauling stone and preparing them for the setting, which we contemplate doing the ensuing season. A bastismal font has been lately finished on the Temple Block, near the endowment house, which was consecrated and dedicated on the evening of the 1st inst., upon which occasion the First Presidency and a few others were rebaptized, and which it is expected will be followed up by many others. This font will also be used for the baptisms for the dead.

Our wheat crop the past season was very good; corn light, and potatoes about an entire failure; but we think that we shall have sufficient food for all, if strict economy is practised.

There is quite a reformation springing up in many of the settlements, which we trust will increase and extend throughout the territory. A general desire to renew their covenants and live nearer to the Lord, to serve him more perfectly and to be more circumspect and alive to the interests of Zion, and her prosperity is apparent. This awakening spirit is much needed, as it is too usually the case that when the elders come home they throw off their armor, and the people too frequently follow their example; this produces a coldness or rather deadness to spiritual things, which leads into darkness, and in the end, apostacy. But now that much of the chaff of the winter's threshing floor has been floated off by the summer breezes, we trust that Saints who are such, will awake from their lethargy and lay hold with an increased faith and energy, and not only obtain but retain the Holy Ghost in their bosoms sufficiently to enable them to walk humbly before the Lord of Hosts, and render more effective service in his cause. The people have generally been too unmindful of the blessings which the Lord has been so profusely pouring out upon them. They have not sufficiently appreciated his kindness and mercy. They are now beginning to see it, and are seeking by a renewal of their covenants, to redeem themselves from these and many other evils which they have fostered until the enemy of their souls had well nigh obtained the mastery over them. But thanks be to Him who sitteth upon the throne, that he has inspired his missionaries to go forth in the strength of Israel's God and put a timely check to this great and growing evil. The home missionaries with the assistance of Bro. Jedediah M. Grant, who leads the way, have been instrumental in producing these results, which we trust will prove a lasting benefit to the Hosts of Israel. And may the Lord forgive his people of all their sins, and help them to live their religion, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

G. S. L. CITY, Oct. 7, 1856.

Our Conference commenced yesterday, (Sunday.) The day before was an interesting day; the brethren who have just arrived, made their report relative to the state of the Saints upon the plains, where they were passed, &c. Being mostly yet beyond Laramie, an immediate call was made for sixty mule and horse teams, twelve tons of flour, forty extra teamsters to help in the teams now upon the plains in the hands of inexperienced men, and a plenty of shoes, stockings, and clothing of almost every description, to keep the Saints who are coming by hand-carts warm, when they get into cold days and nights, which they will no doubt see before they get in. Most of the teams are expected to leave to day.

Yesterday, the largest congregation was assembled in the Bowery that I ever saw; and they were made glad by the testimony borne by the Elders who have returned full of the Spirit and power of God.

A general reformation is now taking place throughout this Territory. The Presidency feel full of drawing the line between the wicked and the righteous; and men that will not live their religion will find the furnace getting hotter and hotter, and their dross will be consumed.

The spirit of this conference I believe will be felt by the Saints and by the ungodly also, throughout the wide world. God grant it!

FOR THE MORMON.

A Chapter on Logic.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

IT may, perhaps, appear strange to some persons whose minds are always in nuce, to read an article on Logic. Not knowing whether philosophy is a live animal, or something to eat; they misconstrue or ridicule that science very often. Allow me to say, that I have not the least reference to the philosophical systems, theories and speculations of the past and present, but to the principles of eternal, immutable truth. As the term "Gospel" is often misapplied and used as a cloak for human institutions, so, likewise, is philosophy frequently used for a cover of erroneous ideas. What else is Mormonism, but the philosophy of the Gods, embracing all the principles leading to a knowledge, power, glory and happiness of divine perfection. People may, on account of their pigmean notions, disregard the cultivation of the mind, but they will find, that, although having the truth, they are often making inconsiderate assumptions, introduce unsound arguments, if they reject those principles by which they can learn how to confine the train of their ideas to a channel of close, correct and luminous reasoning.

As well as there are laws and principles in the physical world, in order to produce certain effects and causes, and thereby cause harmonious streams of order and beauty, to flow with an accelerated progress throughout the Universe, so is it in the mental creation, and this shows the great wisdom of that supreme Being who never deviates from the course of eternal truth, so that everything, whether organic or unorganic has the impress of His divine perfection. Hence, as the process of mental operations is carried on on certain principles, it must be of the greatest importance not only for the man of science, but for every intelligent being, who is interested in searching after truth, to know something of the mysterious mechanism, the various functions and performances of the mind, which is the acting part or quintessence of the soul; because it is by a knowledge of logical principles, that the human intellect becomes qualified for certain exertions, for self-contemplation, that is to say, for reflecting upon itself, as a being independent of the phenomenal or outward world, and further, because it capacitates the inner-man to comprehend things which come from the sphere of surrounding objects within the focus of his conceptions. A person may say, he has common-sense, he has a language sufficient to express certain apprehensions, but in despite of this assertion, which, as it emanates from his own criterion, is an arbitrary and relative proposition, he will get entangled in the ideal world, and become confused in his conceptions, without a guide through the maze of mental operations. In order to understand things and matters well, it is absolutely necessary, that all ideas, impressions and conceptions, be arranged before the inner-man in a systematic manner, that is to say, that ideas follow each other in the strictest probable order of their relationship, and then man will think and speak clearly and correctly.

Man is evidently, the most prominent being in the animal kingdom, being endowed with superior intelligence, hence, it is incumbent upon him to fill his position honorably. But although there is generally a superiority of the human mind over the brute creation, there are still certain exercises both physical and mental, which place man often on a level with the brute creation. Many of us will have noticed, that children or persons of very inferior intellects, realize things without comprehending the nature, cause or reason of the thing thus felt or grasped, this is instinct. For instance, observe children who have transgressed in something, they will feel their wrong, without having been told of it, and instinct of avoiding punishment, will cause them either to run away, or keep quiet and unobserved. The same phenomenon can be noticed among the lower animal creation. But there is one particular intellectual occupation, one particular exercise of the mental faculties which shows the wide difference existing between the human family and the brute beast, proving, thereby, man an intelligent, independent being—it is the power of reasoning. No matter in what avocations we follow, our every-day life, requires a constant exercise of the reasoning faculties. If we are desirous of making a good use of our intellect, in order to receive lasting benefits from our enterprises or engagements, we will pay the same attention to every circumstance which may possibly arise during our mortal career, as the chess-player who watches with intense anxiety, every move of his antagonist. Our life may be compared to a chess-board, on which every move is attended with certain results, whether beneficial or obnoxious, and we will be constantly employed in scheming plans, advancing propositions, in making inferences and conclusions from premises in relation to a certain object in view.

It is an established fact, that in the school of experience, we are taught principles, that we discover laws concerning Nature's hidden forces. Those discovered principles are then introduced into sciences, and thus certain rules have been deduced from scientific reasoning aided by experience. For instance, if we know from empiricism, that every ounce of food we receive into the stomach, every particle of atmospheric air we inhale, the motion of the heart and lungs, the vibrating pulsation, etc., is bringing about the chemical process of our vital fluids, and imparting thus strength and vigor to the system. Further, if we know from experience the effects that the surrounding elements have here on our bodies, and what a strict regimen of diet is required to keep up the physical equilibrium, we will endeavor to live according to the best of our knowledge. Why a person may have common-sense, but as I remarked before, that gift alone, without the assistance of certain, eternal, true principles or laws, is an unsafe guide; for instance, a person may have sense enough, but being a stranger to the effects of the atmosphere operating upon the system, and unacquainted with the principles of preventing a superabundance of certain ærial particles from entering the body, he will, when in hot climates, by no means observe the rule of living on food which is congenial to the system.

When we commence to reason, we then undertake to introduce arguments for the purpose of reflecting or contradicting statements made by another person, or in order to instruct the minds of certain individuals in relation to principles of truth, setting them forth in as clear, regular and systematic a manner as possible, trying to elucidate every point, so as to convince the antagonist. While engaged in this operation, the mind undergoes a certain process, that is to say, all his faculties are exerting themselves in proportion to their strength and practice to bring a certain principle within the compass of another person's understanding. The act of reasoning is always preceded by simple apprehension and judgement. The logician understands by a simple apprehension, the perceiving of a thing, whether abstract or concrete, through the instrumentality of the intellectual powers. These apprehensions are either incomplex, that is to say, they are the act of perceiving several unconnected, independent objects, as a "table," a "pen," a "wagon," or complex, that is to say, the apprehensions, or noticing of several connected objects, as for instance, a "vessel with soldiers," a "garden with trees. The reader can easily see, that between a "table," a "pen," a "wagon," exists no relation, or affinity whatever. The act of judging consists in comparing one object to another, trying to find a similitude or dis-similitude or disparity between those two, hence, the judgement is either affirmative, if I say, A belongs to B, they are of one sphere, they are alike, or negative, if I pronounce the compared as unlike, as for instance, L is larger than M, then L and M are heterogenious. The act of reasoning consists in forming a series of judgments, so that the following is generally the result of the preceding one. The operation of reasoning when complete, is called an argument, as, society is much corrupted, many young men move in society, many young men are corrupted. Or, if a part of N is like R, and R is like S, then only a part of N is like S. Reasoning is the act of inferring, proving. These two performances of the mind do not refer to two different things, they are the same thing, but considered in two different points of view, for instance, the road from Boston to St. Louis, and the road from St. Louis to Boston. The analysis of the operation of proving is a conclusion.

TO BE CONCLUDED.

Thirty-fourth Congress.—Second Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11, 1856.

On motion of Mr. Houston, of Texas, the Committee on Finance were ordered to inquire into the expediency of suspending the duties on sugar and molasses for a period of two years.

On motion of Mr. Seward, of New York, the bill making provision to compensate agents for paying pensions and prescribing the time and manner for settling their accounts, was made the special order for the 22d of December.

Mr. Cass, of Michigan, replied to the statement of Senator Trumbull, made the other day, that the Supreme Court had decided, through Chief Justice Marshall, that Congress possessed "all" the powers of the federal and State government relative to the Territories. This was a misrepresentation. The Senator from Illinois (Trumbull) had mistaken a dictum of the Chief Justice for a decision of the court; but even then he had not established his case. What the Chief Justice said was, that Congress possessed the "combined" powers of the federal and State government, and this referred not to the extent of jurisdiction, but to its nature. Mr. Cass reiterated his views upon the subject of popular sovereignty, contending that the grant of power in the Constitution, to Congress, over the "territory and other property of the United States" merely referred to the territory as land, and implied no jurisdiction over the people living on that land. To enforce his views Mr. Cass inquired, "If the power was derived from that provision in the Constitution, what power does Congress possess to legislate over that Territory which never belonged to the United States?" That was the question which he had put when commenting on this topic on previous occasions, but it had never been answered, and he believed it could not be.

Mr. Wade, of Ohio, asked upon what ground Mr. Cass could vindicate his own consistency in voting for bills establishing Territorial governments.

Mr. Cass replied it was the exercise of the Constitution. Mr. Madison had taken similar views upon this subject, and he (Cass) quoted him as authority. In the course of his remarks Mr. Cass referred to the report of a speech delivered by Mr. Seward in Buffalo recently, in which Southern slaveholders were stigmatised as a privileged class.

Mr. Seward stated that he had never made the speech attributed to him.

Mr. Cass was very happy to be so informed.

Mr. Hale, of N. H., obtained the floor but yielded it to Mr. Rusk.

Mr. Rusk, of Texas, said that whatever opinion might have been entertained with regard to the propriety of this discussion at its commencement, it would now be unjust to those gentlemen who have not had an opportunity to participate in it, to cut them off, by taking the question on the President's message and documents. At the same time he stated the printers were much delayed in consequence of the failure of the Senate to pass the customary orders to print. On his motion the printing was ordered. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Oliver, of Mo., presented a memorial from citizens residing on the Gadsden purchase, praying for the establishment of a Territorial government at Arazona. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Humphrey Marshall, of Ky., said he understood the position of the American and Republican parties, but that he did not believe there was a Democrat here who could make a statement which would be acquiesced in by the Democratic party North and South, on the subject of the right of the people to govern themselves in the Territories. They had the doctrine of Mr. Cass, pronounced as the principle and philosophy of the last Presidential election, and yesterday his friend from South Carolina (Keitt) declared in eloquent terms against popular sovereignty; and they are National Democrats.

Mr. Keitt, of S. C.—I discard being a National Democrat. (Laughter.)

Mr. Marshall—This shows that some of the brightest stars of the Democratic party are sectional Democrats. (Laughter.)

Mr. Keitt—That is an inference of the member from Kentucky. I say I am a Constitutional Democrat.

Mr. Marshall remarked that he wished to get at facts, so as to let the country know where the Democratic party stand. He wished to know whether Democrats agreed with the declaration of Senator Mason: that the people of the Territories, when they organize themselves, or are organized under law, are to determine for themselves whether the institution of slavery shall exist or not while a Territory.

Mr. Quitman, of Miss., said for himself that he did not believe the people of a Territory possess sovereignty of any kind until sovereignty was delegated to them as a State under the power of the constitution to admit new States—reviewed the alleged inconsistencies respecting the interpretation of the Nebraska bill relative to the people framing their own laws.

Mr. Orr, of S. C., asked Mr. Marshall whether if he had been here he would have voted for the Kansas Nebraska bill.

Mr. Marshall replied that with a Southern construction he would have voted for it, but with a Northern construction against it.

Mr. Orr did not consider the answer satisfactory. He did not believe in squatter sovereignty, nor did he believe that doctrine contained in the Nebraska bill. He saw no authority in the constitution to pass the Wilmot proviso, and could not see how Congress, not having that power, can create the authority and invest the creature with greater power than it possesses itself. Other gentlemen, however, think the Territorial Legislature is invested with the authority to prohibit or introduce slavery in the Territory. The gentleman from Tennessee struck the true point and took the wind out Mr. Marshall's sails and left him high and dry on land. Although Mr. Orr denied that squatter sovereignty exists by virtue of the Nebraska bill, it was practicably of little consequence whether it does or not. If the people do not want slavery they can decline to pass laws for its protection, and that would be just as effectual as a law passed to exclude it. Losers were privileged to be grumblers, and he congratulated the country that Kentucky had placed herself in a correct position by giving her electoral vote to the candidates of the democracy. Let the gentleman (Marshall) from that commonwealth take this home with him. There is a difference of opinion among democrats as to squatter sovereignty, and let him make the most of it.

Mr. Leitcher, of Va., said that for many years Mr. Giddings had introduced the subject of slavery in debate, giving his views at large, and quoted from the speeches of Mr. Giddings to show that the latter had advocated interference with slavery in the States, making use of language calculated to excite insurrection in common with the party with which that gentleman acted. Mr. L. further commented on the views of Messrs. Seward, Giddings, and others of the same party, to prove their sectionalism, and desire to interfere with the institutions of the South. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.

Mr. Dodd was designated as Chairman of the Committee of the District of Columbia, vice Mr. Matterson, excused; and Mr. Woodworth was appointed to fill the vacancy. The House proceeded to the consideration of the private calendar.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill providing for the payment of the legislative, executive and judicial expenses; and a bill making similar provision for the consular and diplomatic services for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Broom, from the Post Office Committee, reported a bill authorizing the Post Master General to make a contract with Cornelius Vanderbilt for carrying a mail between New York and Southampton at a compensation of $16,608 for the round trip, a provision being, that on the event of the line not making as quick time as the Cunard steamers, one thousand dollars shall be deducted for every twelve hours deficiency.

Mr. Tappan made an unsuccessful attempt to introduce a bill repealing the laws of the so called Legislature of Kansas.

Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. Dec. 15.

On motion of Mr. Jones, of Iowa, the Committee on Commerce was directed to inquire into the expediency of making a further appropriation of $30,000 for the enlargement of the Custom House and Post Office at Dubuque.

On the motion, also, of Mr. Jones, the credentials of Mr. James Harlan, Senator from Iowa, with the protest of the Senate of that State relative thereto, were taken up for consideration. Some objections were made to sending the case before the Committee on the Judiciary, as there Mr. Harlan would meet with political opponents, but on motion it was there referred.

On motion of Mr. Hale, a resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire whether any further legislation is necessary to carry into effect the act regulating the compensation of members of Congress, passed August last.

Mr. Houston, of Texas, gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill providing for the establishment of a mail route, and for carrying a semi-weekly overland mail from the Mississippi river to San Francisco.

The House bill providing for the settlement of accounts of officers of the Revolutionary war and their widows and orphans was then discussed till the adjournment.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Etheridge, of Tenn., submitted the following resolution, which was read for information:—

Resolved, That this House regard all suggestions or propositions of every kind, by whomsoever made, for a revival of the slave trade, as shocking to the moral sentiments of the enlightened portion of mankind, and that any act on the part of Congress, legislating for, conniving at or legalizing that horrid and inhuman traffic would justly subject the United States to the reproach and execration of all civilized and Christian people throughout the world.

Objection was made to the introduction of the resolution, but at last it was adopted by yeas, 152; nays 57.

Mr. Orr, of S. C., under a suspension of the rules, submitted a resolution, that it is inexpedient, unwise and contrary to the settled policy of the United States, to repeal the laws prohibiting the African slave trade.

The resolution was adopted by yeas 183, nays 8.

Mr. Washburne, of Me., asked leave to offer a resolution calling on the President to communicate a statement of the amounts of money paid and liabilities incurred for the pay and support of persons called into the service of the United States, either under the designation of militia in Kansas or as a posse comitatus, by the civil officers in that Territory, since the date of its establishment, and for witnesses and arrest, detention and trial of persons charged with treason against the United States, or with violation of the so-called laws of the Territory. Pending this the House adjourned.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? On devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Woman.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

Before this noble audience, once again
A Lyre of Zion re-resumes its strain.
Thought is a currency—Speech is design'd
To circulate the treasures of the mind.
When this Society convenes, this Hall
Is a grand reservoir, supplying all:
And constitutes an intellectual mint,
Where words are coin'd---ideas take their tint---
Where morals, arts and sciences are taught---
Mind prompting mind, and thought inspiring thought.
When last assembled, woman's worth and sphere
Were beautifully illustrated here:
And then the thought suggested to my view,
That woman's self might speak of woman too:
But not for "Woman's Rights" to plead or claim---
No! that, in Zion, I should blush to name.

I have apologies to offer here
For Gentile ladies who disclaim their sphere.
Having obtained enough of truthful light,
To see life's strange perversions of the right;
They seek with noble, yet misguided aim,
Corruption and abuses to reclaim:
But all their efforts to remove the curse
Are only making matters worse and worse.
They could as well unlock without a key,
As change the tide of man's degeneracy,
Without the holy priesthood: 'tis, at most,
Like reck'ning bills in absence of the host.

No more of this. I'll speak of woman now
When Inspiration's pow'rs, the mind endow---
Where rules are giv'n to renovate the earth---
To try all textures and to prove all worth.
And what is woman's calling? where her place?
Is she destin'd to honor? or disgrace?

The season's gone when she could set her stake
To which the will of man must bow or break---
The time is past for her to reign alone,
And singly make a husband's heart her throne:
No more she stands with sovereignty confess'd;
Nor yet a play-thing, dandled and caress'd;
Neither a dazzling butterfly or mote,
On light, etherial, balmy waves to float.
Her's is a holy calling, and her lot
With consequence most highly, deeply fraught---
"Help-meet" for man---with him she holds a key
Of present and eternal destiny.
She bends from life's illusive greatness down---
"She stoops to conquer"---serves to wear a crown.
Love, kindness, rectitude, with wisdom fraught
From woman's greatness, wheresoe'er her lot:
However great, let once her aim be pow'r,
She sinks---decreases from that hapless hour!
Aspiring brains fictitious heights create
And seek to clothe in greatness, ere they're great:
All dignity is but an idle sport,
Where goodness forms no pillar for support.

Who thro' submission, faith, and constancy,
Like ancient Sarah, gains celebrity;
And thus obtains an honorable place;
A high position may sustain and grace.

That there are rights and privileges too,
To woman's sphere, and to her duties due;
Reason and justice---truth and heav'n confirms;
But they're not held by force, nor took by storm.
If "rights" are right when they are rightly gain'd,
"Rights" must be wrong when wrongfully obtain'd:
The putting forth a hand to take the prize
Before we fairly win it, is unwise.

Let woman then, a course in life pursue
To purchase man's respect, as merit's due,
And feeling God's approval, act her part
With noble independence in her heart;
Nor change, nor swerve, nor shrink, whatever is;
Though fools may scoff---Impertinence may quiz:
Faithful, though oft in faithfulness unknown---
With no whereon to lean, but God alone.
Then by the laws which rule the courts above,
She holds the charter to a husband's love,
Which built on confidence---by virtue won,
Will amply---will abundantly atone
For what she feels at times, neglected now---
Misjudg'd and unappreciated too.
With chaff and tares, wheat may be buried low---
Gold hid in dross, where none but angels know.

Wit, youth, and beauty oft a charm impart
Which throws a magic spell around the heart;
But 'tis an influence ever prone to wane
Unless the powers of worth that charm sustain.
The jewel, confidence, is far above
The fickle streams of earth's degen'rate love.

Nature, inviolate holds certain laws---
There's no effect produc'd without a cause:
Integrity and faithfulness, through hard
And patient labor, reap their own reward.
The gains of craft will take their own light wings,
And all assumptions are but short-liv'd things.

As we move forward to a perfect state
And leave the dross degeneracies create:
Laws of affinity will closely bind
Heart unto heart---congenial mind to mind.

Life, Order---all things are in embryo,
And through experience God is teaching how
To mould---to fashion to the pattern giv'n---
To show on earth a specimen of heaven.

A calm must be preceded by a storm,
And revolutions go before reform:
Faith, practice, heads and hearts must all be tried,
To test what can and what cannot abide.
When shakings, tossings, changings, all are thro'---
All things their level find---their classes too;
A perfect government will be restor'd,
And Truth and Holiness and God ador'd,
But ere this renovating work is thro',
Woman, as well as man, has much to do:
Responsibilities, however great,
Advancing onward will increase in weight;
And she, that she receiving, may dispense,
Needs wisdom, knowledge and intelligence;
Of high refinements too, she should partake
With rich endowments; for her offspring's sake.

Queen of her household---authorized to bless---
To plant the principles of righteousness---
To paint the guideboard that thro' life will tell,
And lead instinctively to heaven or hell---
To fix the base, the fundamental part
Of future greatness in the head and heart,
Which constitutes the germ of what will be
In the high courts of immortality.

What we experience here, is but a school
Wherein the rul'd may be prepar'd to rule.
The secret and the key---the spring---the soul
Of rule---of government, is self-control.

Cloth'd with the beauties, purity reflects,
The acknowledg'd glory of "the other sex,"
From life's crude dross and rubbish will come forth
By weight of character---by strength of worth;
And thro' obedience woman will obtain
The power of reigning and the right to reign.

The Biography of a Wit.

Gilbert Abbott A'Beckett

PUNCH sustained its first serious loss in the death of Gilbert A. A'Beckett a few weeks since. The wits of a country are always few in number. A'Beckett was a man of genuine humor. Not a word in the English language was there that he did not conceive might be converted to a new meaning. The art of punning seemed with him the object of living. In very early life, when still lacking three or four years of man's estate, he was the editor of several witty peoriodicals in London. His father, a staid lawyer, was much shocked by the literary propensities of his son, and sought to bind him down in legal chains, but vainly. Gilbert broke fairly loose and became the manager of a theater. Then he was on the high road to bankruptcy. The plays innumerable that he wrote, amongst others, The Wandering Minstrels, which Burton still makes popular, and The Siamese Twins, raised more laughter than funds. People came to laugh but not to pay, and consequently Gilbert A'Beckett, before five-and-twenty years of his life had passed away, was declared a bankrupt.

A curious scene was witnessed in the Court. A'Beckett was proved to be the editor of no less than seventeen publications, not one of which was bringing him in salt. The best, by far, was Figaro in London, a weekly sheet of exquisite wit, conducted by him and Henry Mayhew, since celebrated as the author of London Labor and London Poor. A'Beckett, after cleaning his skirts from the Court of Bankruptcy, became an adaptator for the theaters, and arranged carefully from the French more than one hundred dramas. Don Cæsar de Bazan was one of these. He also wrote burlesques a la Planche with much skill, his power of double entendre serving him in good stead. At this time, love filled his bosom, and the daughter of Mr. Glossop, formerly manager of La Scala, Naples, soon became his wife. This lady possessed great musical talent, and is the composer of an opera entitled "Little Red Riding Hood," which met with some success, besides which she is the writer of innumerable compositions for the piano.

When in the year 1841, Punch came into existence, four men were chosen as its regular contributors, viz: Douglas Jerrold, Gilbert A'Beckett, Albert Smith and Mark Lemon---the latter acting as editor from that day to this. Until that hour, A'Beckett had been forced constantly to play a game of hide and seek with the bailiffs. He who, with his mercurial spirit, could so readily take off the dull, had been equally liable to be taken off by them. Sometimes disguised as a scene shifter, minus coat and vest, he would issue from the stage door, and reducing his six feet of humanity some inches by a stubborn stoop, thank his stars that he could pass for a smaller man.

At that time Douglas Jerrold and himself were probably the men most sought after in all London. In debt and in prison were their constant fate. What they writ never seized upon the public so completely as the law writ seized upon them. A'Beckett's papers in Punch concerning Mr. Dump, were almost biographical. He never felt free except when he was in confinement, and then his jovial spirit would break loose, and although his body was in limbo, his spirit would soar above the bricks and mortar that confined him.

Punch succeeded, however, chiefly owing to Jerrold's admirable papers, entitled Punch's Letters to his Son, The Story of a Feather, Mrs. Caudle, and Punch's Universal Letter Writer, not forgetting A'Beckett's Comic Blackstone and Comic History of England. At this time an extra editor was required for the Times, and A'Beckett was chosen for the post. His writings in the Times have been praised, but they always seemed to us like the efforts of a butterfly who might attempt to consort with lions. It was not in him. That force---that vigor which makes the present superior in the eyes of the multitude to that which ever was or will be---was not possessed by the lightsome writer. A'Beckett, it is said, one day when the excitement was great in England concerning the manner which paupers were treated in the Andover Union, wrote the whole of the leading columns in the Times; but this was a spasmodic effort never repeated. It was rather caused by the generous impulses of the man than his literary vigor. The Times in fact, was not for him, nor he for the Times.

This was so fully shown to be the case, that the Times' influence was exerted, and Gilbert A'Beckett obtained the appointment, worth $6000 per annum, of a metropolitan magistrate. This office he concientiously filled from 1849 until within the last two months, when death suddenly approached, and at the age of forty-five Gilbert A'Beckett had ceased to be of the earth earthly.

We have to deplore the loss of Gilbert Abbott A'Beckett, whose genius has for more than fifteen years been present in these pages; present from the first sheet, July 17, 1841, until August 30, 1856. On that day passed from among us a genial, manly spirit; singularly gifted with the subtlest powers of wit and humor; faculties ever exercised by their possessor to the healthiest and most innocent purpose. As a magistrate, Gilbert A'Beckett, by his wise, calm, humane administration of the law, gave a daily rebuke to a too ready belief that the faithful exercise of the highest and gravest social duties is incompatible with the sportiveness of literary genius. On the bench, his firmness, moderation, and gentleness, won him public respect, as they endeared him to all within their influence. "His place knows him not;" but his memory is tenderly cherished.

It may be said of Gilbert A'Beckett that his associate, Douglass Jerrold who, probably, with one other exception, (Charles Dickens,) never spared the foibles of a friend, had a kindly word for him. Of Albert Smith, Mark Lemon, and many others, Jerrold has uttered words of biting sarcasm, but he could never find it in his heart to speak lightly of A'Beckett.

Albert Smith, previous to making a fortune by his entertainment concerning his ascent of Mount Blanc, was Jerrold's particular aversion. He practised as a dentist as well as a second-hand wit, and when a member of the Garrick Club expressed surprise that Smith should be a dentist as well as a writer, Jerrold sarcastically replied: "Oh, sir, he lives by taking things out of other people's mouths."

It is due to the literary profession, in closing a notice of the career of Gilbert A'Beckett, to dwell for a moment on the fact that, as a magistrate and a writer he was equally great. Too often is it supposed that the practical man must be a dullard, or at best a mere politician. From Moses to D'Israeli the reverse is proved to be the case. Because dullards are frequently tolerated, it is presumed that dullness is synonymous with success. This is a most egregious blunder. But for genius shedding a light around which enables dullness to find its way to a position in life, dullness long ago would have sunk into its native quagmire. It is a blunder, a most gross blunder, with the world to write the epitaphs of great men. Not all the sounding sentences that ever rolled from the mouth of common-place can bury greatness, or confine it to certain limits. It must extend its influence now and forever, and it is this conviction that proves to us that, although the mortal part of Gilbert A'Beckett may be hid from the world, the bright and spiritual essence of his being will live as cheeringly as ever.

Telegraph to Cuba.

It is stated that parties have been for some time in correspondence with the Cuban and Spanish authorities for the privilege of laying a telegraph line between Cuba and the United States. It is proposed to lay a cable from the point of Cape Sable, the extreme southern point of Florida, to Havana, the distance being little over 70 miles---about the same stretch as that across the Gulf of St. Lawrence. ---[Tribune, Dec. 11.

An Arctic Adventure.

KANE'S ARCTIC EXPEDITION abounds in adventures like the following, which makes one shiver to read. Dr. Kane and an Esquimaux hunter take a trip after seals:

"I started with Hans and five dogs, all we could muster from our disabled pack, and reached the 'Pinnacly Berg' in a single hour's run. But where was the water? where were the seals? The floes had closed, and the crushed ice was all that told of our intended hunting-ground.

"Ascending a berg, however, we could see to the north and west the cloud stratus which betokens water. It ran through our battle-ground, the 'Bergy Belt,' the labyrinth of our wandering after the frozen party last winter. I had not been over it since, and the feeling it gave me was anything but joyous.

"In a couple of hours we emerged upon a plain, unlimited to the eye, and smooth as a billiard-table. Feathers of a young frosting gave a plush-like nap to its surface, and toward the horizon dark columns of frost-smoke pointed clearly to the open water. This ice was fine enough; our experience satisfied us that it was not a very recent freezing. We pushed on without hesitation; cheering ourselves with the expectation of coming every minute to the seals. We passed a second ice-growth; it was not so strong as the one we had just come over, but still safe for a party like ours. On we went at a brisker gallop, may-be for another mile, when Hans sang out, at the top of his voice, 'Pusey! puseymut! seal, seal!' At the same instant the dogs bounded forward, and as I looked up I saw crowds of gray netsik, the rough or hispid seal of the whalers, disporting in an open sea of water.

"I hardly welcome the spectacle, when I saw that we had passed upon a new belt of ice that was obviously unsafe. To the right, and left, and front, was one great expanse of snow-flowered ice. The nearest solid floe was a mere lump, which stood like an island in the white level. To turn was impossible; we had to keep up our gait. We urged on the dogs with whip and voice, the ice rolling like leather beneath the sledge-runners; it was more than a mile to the lump of solid ice. Fear gave to the poor beasts their utmost speed, and our voices were soon hushed to silence.

"The suspense, unrelieved by action or effort was intolerable. We knew that there was no remedy but to reach the floe, and that everything depended upon our dogs alone. A moment's check would plunge the whole concern into the rapid tide-way. No presence of mind or resource, bodily or mental, could avail us. The seals---for we were now near enough to see their expressive faces---were looking at us with that strange curiosity which seems to be their characteristic expression. We must have passed some fifty of them, breast-high out of water, mocking us by their self-complacency.

"This desperate race against fate could not last. The rolling of the tough salt-water-ice terrified our dogs, and when within fifty paces from the floe they paused. The left-hand runner went through; our leader, Toodlamick, followed, and in one second the entire left of the sledge was submerged. My first thought was to liberate the dogs. I leaned forward to cut poor Tood's traces, and the next minute was swimming in a little circle of pasty ice and water alongside him. Hans, dear good-fellow, drew near to help me, uttering piteous expressions in broken English; but I ordered him to throw himself upon his belly, with his hands and legs extended, and to make for the island by coggling himself forward with his jack-knife. In the mean-time---a mere instant---I was floundering about with sledge-dogs and lines in confused puddle around me.

"I succeeded in cutting poor Tood's lines, and letting him scrabble to the ice---for the poor fellow was drowning me with his piteous caresses---and made my way for the sledge; but I found that it would not buoy me, and that I had no resource but to try the circumference of the hole. Around this I paddled faithfully, the miserable ice alway yielding when my hopes of a lodgment were greatest. During this process I enlarged my circle of operations to a very uncomfortable diameter, and was beginning to feel weaker after every effort. Hans, meanwhile, had reached the firm ice, and was on his knees like a good Moravian, praying incoherently in English and Esquimaux; at every fresh crushing-in of the ice he would ejaculate, 'God!' and when I re-commenced my paddling, he re-commenced his prayers.

"I was nearly gone. My knife had been lost in cutting out the dogs, and a spare one which I carried in my trowsers-pocket was so enveloped in the wet skins that I could not reach it. I owed my extrication at last to a newly-broken team-dog, which was still fast to the sledge, and in struggling carried one of the runners chock against the edge of the circle. All my previous attempts to use the sledge as a bridge had failed, for it broke through to the much greater injury of the ice. I felt that it was my last chance. I threw myself on my back, so as to lessen as much as possible my weight, and placed the nape of my neck against the rim of the edge of the ice, and then, with caution, slowly bent my leg, and placing the ball of my mocasined foot against the runner, listening to the half-yielding crunch of the ice beneath.

"Presently I felt my head was pillowed by the ice, and that my wet fur-jumper was sliding up the surface. Next came my shoulders---they were fairly on. One more decided push, and I was launched upon the ice safe. I reached the ice-floe, and was frictioned by Hans with frightful zeal. We saved all the dogs; but the sledge, kayack, tent, guns, snow-shoes and everything besides, was left behind. The themometer at eight degrees will keep them frozen fast in the sledge till we can come and cut them out."

Kansas.

Extract of a Letter from Gov. Geary to Mr. Marcy.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
LECOMPTON, K. T., Nov. 22, 1856.

SIR: I herewith transmit to you, by the hands of Brevet Major H. H. Sibley, a copy of my executive minutes from the 17th day of October to the 21st day of November inclusive.

The minutes will furnish you a truthful history of Kansas affairs. They embrace a daily record of all my official transactions, and a full statement of any matters requiring explanation.

Fully appreciating the delicate and responsible mission confided to me by the generous partiality of the President, and knowing how liable, amid the strife and prejudice which seemed to hold undisturbed sway here, a person with the most patriotic intentions might be to misrepresentation and abuse, I adopted the custom of keeping an hourly record of all events in any manner connected with my official action, which, from time to time, I might send to you as my best vindication to the Administration and the country.

Properly to keep my Executive minutes, to answer the heavy correspondence with the Department, to prepare official dispatches, to execute missions requiring secrecy and intelligence, and perform the multifarious duties devolving upon me, owing to the anomalous condition of affairs, has occupied my whole time, assisted by industrious and intelligent Secretaries, whom the public exigencies required me to employ.

As occasion arose, I did not pause to enter into any refined analysis of the nature and extent of my authority, nor to inquire where the money would come from to reimburse necessary and imperative expenditures, but at once adopted the means best calculated to secure the desired end, and paid all expenses out of my own private resources, confiding in the justice of the Administration and Congress for reimbursement and support.

Your general instructions have been the lights by which my official action has been governed and, where the letter of instructions did not meet the crisis, I have based my action on that portion of your comprehensive despatch of the 22d of September, in which you say:

"Your prompt and vigorous attention will be directed toward those who meditate further mischief, and are disposed to obstruct your efforts to restore the supremacy of the civil authority.

"The President relies on your energy and discretion to overcome the difficulties which surround you, and to restore tranquility to Kansas. The exigencies of the affairs, as they shall be presented to you on the spot, will indicate the course of proceeding, in particular cases, calculated to such results better than any definite instructions emanating from this Department."

At so great a distance from the General Government, and so inaccessible to speedy communications from Washington, it is absolutely indispensible for the preservation of order and the protection of life, liberty and property, that the Governor of this Territory should be clothed with large discretionary powers.

When I arrived here, the entire Territory was declared by the acting Governor to be in a state of insurrection; the civil authority was powerless, and so complicated by partisan affiliations as to be without capacity to vindicate the majesty of the law, and restore the broken peace.

In this state of affairs, the most vigorous and determined action on my part seemed the the only remedy for the growing evils.

Impartial justice will ever commend itself to every American citizen worthy to bear the name.

To disband armed bodies of men assembled under color of law, and disperse others brought into antagonistic existence without authority, both inflamed by the most exciting questions, and both committing outrages which all good men must deplore, required neither hesitation nor fear.

I am most happy to inform you that, in order to claim these disturbing elements, and bring the people back to sober reason, I have not been obliged to resort to any measure unknown to the law, and not covered by the spirit and letter of my instructions.

It is also a matter of special gratification to be able to say that, since my advent here, peace has been restored, and the fierce passions of men soothed without the shedding of one drop of fratricidal blood. The peace of the Territory is now placed upon a permanent basis---all parties having at length relinquished the idea of a resort to arms, and agreeing to refer the adjustment of all political disputes to the ballot-box, or other lawful expedients.

Since my last dispatch to you, making a hasty reference to my Southern and Western tour---full particulars of which you will find in my executive minutes, from the 17th of October to the 6th of November, inclusive---I deemed it advisable, from what I saw on the spot, to send a United States Commissioner and Deputy-Marshal, accompanied by a squadron of United States Dragoons, to make inquisition of certain matters demanding attention along the Southern and Eastern portions of the Territory.

While there is profound peace here, so far as political causes are concerned, there is still a roving band of marauders, not exceeding seven, in the Southern part of the Territory who occasionally steal horses and rob families.

For the purpose of exterminating these thieves and robbers, and of affording that protection to good citizens, which the Government is bound to afford, I have issued proclamations offering reasonable rewards for the apprehension and conviction of the offenders, and have also sent the squadron with the itinerating preliminary court, in order that summary justice might at once be effected.

Nothing but the the most vigorous and decided measures can have the effect of restoring confidence, by expelling the bandit and making the citizens feel secure in their isolated homes.

A collision between Judge Lecompte and myself had occurred, the occasion of which is a source of regret to me.

A full account of the matter will be found in my minutes, to which I beg your attention.

The injudicious action of the Judge endangered the peace of the Territory and the equilibrium I was laboring night and day to preserve.

All my efforts "to restore the supremacy of the civil authority," to establish confidence of the impartial administration of justice, are fruitless and unavailing so long as the Chief Justice is permitted to "obstruct" my policy and give so just an occasion for the charge of partiallity.

Public justice, and the peace and good order of this Territory, require the position of Chief Justice to be filled by some impartial person, not complicated with past disturbances, and who will, without prejudice or favor, dispense justice and punish crime.

The subject of the sale of the "Delaware Trust Land" has, for some time past, been a source of much anxiety to me as intense feeling has been generated among the settlers on account of the uncertainty of tenures, and the danger of their being ousted from their homes.

Justice to the actual bona fide settler and the Indian seemed so clearly the legitimate policy of the Government, that I was most anxious to see such measures adopted as would most effectively secure these objects.

Solicitude for the preservation of the public peace induced me to visit Leavenworth City at the opening of the land-sales, and, upon invitation from the municipal authorities, I suggested such views, in a public speech, for the consideration of the large concourse of people assembled there from every quarter of the Union, as I thought would best effect my purpose, consistently with the policy of the Government.

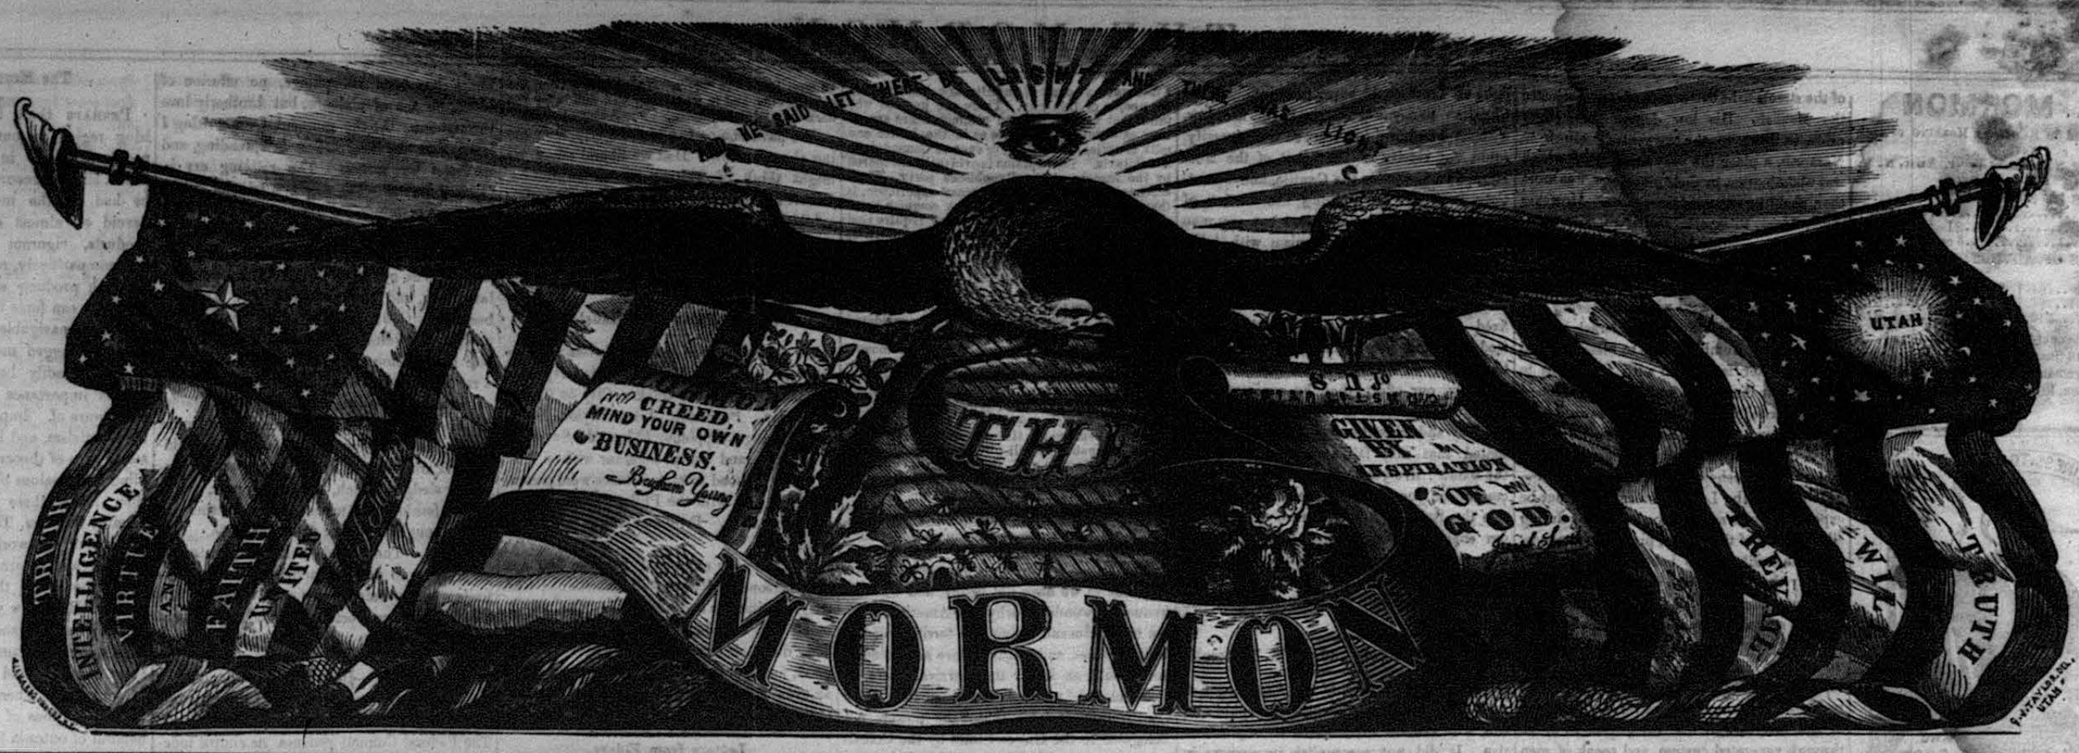
My remarks were kindly received by the people; and I am happy to inform you that no disturbance has occurred; and I have no reason to anticipate any trouble during the progress of the sales.

Nothing will so much aid the cause of peace and order, and so materially advance the substantial prosperity of this Territory, as the sale of the public lands to intelligent, industrious, and patriotic citizens. * *

With high consideration, I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

JOHN W. GEARY, Gov. of Kansas.

Hon. W. L. MARCY, Sec'y. of State.



The Oldest Man in America.

PETER NASSAU, a colored man, now a resident of Woodstock, Vt., has reached the extraordinary age of 126 years! and is doubtless the oldest living man in this country. His history has been traced out by N. Haskell, Esq., Town Clerk of Woodstock, and it appears he was born two years before Washington, was 46 years old at the date of the Declaration of Independence, and long before the second war with Great Britain broke out he had passed the Scriptural limit of life---threescore years and ten! There are some instances on record, of persons who have attained a greater age than Peter Nassau, but they are not many. The following among other names are mentioned by Dr. J. W. Draper in his admirable work on Human Physiology: Attila, 124 years; Margaret Patten, 137; the Countess of Desmond, 145; Thomas Parr, 152; Thomas Damme, 154; John Rovin, 172; his wife, 164, and Peter Torton, 185. The Englishman, Parr, who was born in 1483, married when at the age of 120, and was in the full enjoyment of his faculties, mental and physical, at the age of 140. Henry Jenkins, who died in Yorkshire, in 1670, lived 169 years.---[Boston Transcript.

The Printer.

THE printer, in his folio, heraldeth the world. Now come tidings of weddings, mummeries, entertainments, jubilees, wars, inundations, thefts, murders, massacres, meteors, comets, specters, prodigies, ship-wrecks, piracies, sea-fights, law-suits, pleas, proclamations, embassies, trophies, triumphs, revels, sports, plays; then again, as in a new shifted scene, treasons, cheating, tricks, robbers, enormous villanies of all kinds, funerals, burials, new discoveries, expeditions, now comical, then tragical matters. To-day we hear of new officers created, to-morrow of great men deposed, and then of fresh honors conferred; one is let loose, another is imprisoned; he thrives, his neighbor turneth bankrupt; now plenty, then again dearth and famine; one runs, another rides, wrangles, laughs, weeps, &c. Thus we hear such like, both public and private news.---[Old Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.

M. EMILE DE GIRARDIN has sold his interest in the Presse to M. Milhaud, the banker, after a negotiation of only three days. M. de Girardin was the founder and principal proprietor of the paper. He possessed 40-100ths of the shares, and had a salary of 30,000f. as redacteur-in-chief. The terms are---for the forty shares, 800,000f., and for the editorship, 150,000f., making together, the very handsome sum of 950,000f., which M. de Girardin will put in his pocket. After the example of persons of meaner callings, he enters into a covenant not to exercise his trade as a journalist in Paris.

"Whatever Is, Is Right."

Written for, and read before the "Literary and Musical Assembly," in the Seventies' Hall, Great Salt Lake City, April 17, 1856.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT, but then
All axioms received;
Require some certain principles,
On which to be believ'd.

With good and evil—right and wrong,
This present world is rife—
Right is not wrong—wrong is not right,
In any form of life.
If there are given rules, by which
Good is from evil, made;
'Tis well for ev'ry Saint of God,
To understand the trade.
To all who love and practice wrong,
Wrong is forever wrong;
While unto those who practice right,
Right will be right, as long:
But ev'ry wrong will be o'er-ral'd,
Resulting for the best,
To all who in life's furnaces,
Stand every trying test.

Had not Missouri in her spite
And hatred, driv'n us forth;
The sound of truth would not have spread
So widely o'er the earth.

When in Nauvoo, we were beset
With foes on ev'ry side—
The Church was grieviously oppres't—
Our Prophet crucified!
Surrounded by a murd'rous brood,
Nurs'd in corruption's nest—
The vilest offspring of the vile,
Of Satan's soul possess'd:
In spite of all their hatefulness,
Diffusing death and thrall;
We, clinging to our rightful homes—
Our lands—our earthly all;
Might have remain'd and struggled on:—
They thrust us out—we come
And found a peaceful resting place,
In this wild mountain home.
To those that play'd a treacherous part,
That is an evil day:
And they and theirs, will feel the smart
When time has pass'd away.

We've here a better Government
And more of safety too;
Than we experienc'd in our own,
Our beautiful Nauvoo.
Thus God will use the wickedness
And all the wrath of man,
To magnify His holy name,
And execute His plan:
All evil purposes and schemes,
His wisdom will o'er-rule,
And make of each of Satan's imps,
Though vile, a useful tool.
For finer work and finishing,
The polish'd tools will do:
But God wants sledges, threshing-flails,
And battle-axes too.
And when we love to do His will
With all our mind and might,
The Lamp of Life, His spirits glow,
Will show that all is right—
That ev'ry suff'ring—ev'ry ill,
And all the foes we meet:
Will serve our interest in the end,
And make our joy complete.
Offences must needs come, 'tis said:
We also further know,
There is on them by whom they come,
Pronounc'd a fearful woe.

If we are cloth'd with innocence,
And to our Cov'nants true;
What though we suffer for the wrong,
The evil-minded do?
The time will surely come when those Who've cheated in life's play;
Will find they shake an empty purse,
And yet the Bill to pay.

When e'er we feel chastisement's rod,
For wrongs ourselves have done;
We're taught our conduct to control,
And future ill to shun;
As if the shades of darkness were Converted into light;
Through reformation's handy work,
Wrong may conduce to right.
For here had plenty's ceaseless board,
Without a care, been spread;
Who would have own'd the Giver's hand,
Or known the worth of bread?
How many would, as saviors, here,
With wheat their garners stor'd,
Ere famine's cup of bitterness,
Is on the Gentiles pour'd?
But when pale hunger's meagre hand
Is on the stomach laid;
The blind discern the pencil-lines,
By wisdom's finger made.

Our father Adam, broke the law
His father gave, and thus
That blind-fold thing, degen'racy,
Has travel'd down to us.

The Saviour's pity mov'd:—He came—
Up to the fount of day,
While all the troops of darkness storm'd,
He stoop'd to mark the way;
And through the curse with all its ills—
With death and sorrow rife;
He grants to those who follow him,
The pow'rs of endless life.
And He has giv'n a perfect law—
When walking in its light;
As Saints of God, we understand,
"Whatever is, is right."

That dark, dark cloud, call'd ignorance,
Which veils the human mind;
Has clogg'd the springs of common-sense,
And press'd the judgment blind:
He who calls forth the light of day
From crude, commingling gloom;
And bright Celestial rolling spheres
From chaos' op'ning womb—
Who built the pillars of the sky—
Who counts the hosts of heav'n:
Holds ev'ry key and instrument,
By which results are giv'n.
When we, thro' fear of coming ill,
His providence distrust;
We sit in judgment on His hand,
And deem his ways unjust.
Should ought exist from which His skill
Can nothing good produce:
That is a wrong without a right—
A thing without a use:
But who indulge the thought? And who
Would impudently dare
Impeach the high imperial Court,
Or charge a failure there?
Altho' the links are intricate—
Though long may be the chain—
Though Gordian knots with us occur;
With God all things are plain.

'Tis not for us to rule the storm
Or Zion's bark to steer:
With our own duties well perform'd,
We've nothing more to fear.
What should we fear? Who guides the ship?
None but Eternal Might:
Father Himself is at the helm:
"WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT."

The Paths of the Sea.

Interesting Lecture by Lieutenant Maury.

LIEUT. MAURY delivered his interesting, instructive and novel lecture upon "The Paths of the Sea," in Dr. Hutton's church, Washington Square, on Monday evening. On being introduced to the audience by the chairman, he was greeted with loud applause, and proceeded to speak substantially as follows:

The paths of the sea are very much the work of chance and circumstances. When gold was first discovered in California, and the tide of population began to pour from the East to the West, our vessels sailed all the way round Cape Horn; they were then upwards of one hundred and eighty days on their passage. They sailed through new seas and by a course as yet little known to navigation; but becoming acquainted with the winds and seas they made the passage in one hundred and twenty days. So it was with Columbus; he sailed to the south and west, skirting his way along till he reached the continent, and that route was continued up to our declaration of independence. By that route Charleston was the half-way house between us and the Old World—our commerce flowed through South Carolina. The Carolinas were the chief commercial colonies; their exports were greater than the exports of all New England. Columbus left Spain and stood southward till he met the northwest trade winds, and wafted westward to them, he reached our shore. In 1775 Dr. Franklin crossed the ocean to England, and during that voyage discovered the difference of the temperature between the Gulf Stream and the surrounding sea. He considered it of great importance, and would not, therefore, make it known, but kept it for political purposes. The influence of this stream had often been felt, but its nature had never before been known. When Cortez came from Mexico, he put himself upon the Gulf Stream and upon its current floated his ship out of the Gulf to the open sea. But the temperature of the Stream had never been known before it was discovered by Dr. Franklin. The discovery was considered of great importance, for at that time the tables by which latitude and longitude were reckoned were very incorrect. A very large reward was offered by the British government for some correct and simple method for calculating the position of a ship at sea. This stream which stretched along our coast like a bordering band of ribbon, would tell the navigator that he was approaching the shore of a new hemisphere: and so, when outward bound, as he passed beyond it it would inform him that he was far from shore upon the broad Atlantic. The lecturer here traced the course of the Gulf Stream on the map, saying, the stream is so distinctly marked that the very line of its extent can be pointed out. Sometimes you can see half of your ship lying in the Gulf Stream and half of it without. In comparing the paths of the sea used by a former age to the paths now used we should not forget the difficulty they had to contend with then. Their ships were very clumsy and could not be well navigated or directed. Such a thing as a barometer had never been conceived of—now we are able to tell when a storm is coming on, though it is yet a long way off, by the use of that delicate feeler of the atmosphere which not only forewarns the mariner of its approach, but frequently tells him whence it comes and at how rapid a speed, thus enabling him oftentimes to get away from it entirely. One discovery, one invention, begets another, and none is begotten before it is wanted. Sea steamers would have been of no use in those times, when so little was known about navigation; but as soon as a correct system of circulation was established then the smoke of the steamers was seen upon the sea. Indeed, vessels used to get so far out of the way as not to know whether they were on the Atlantic or Pacific Ocean. I have a well authenticated history where a vessel, having sailed a long time and been driven about by high winds, the captain thought she had reached the Pacific Ocean, and so turned north. The next day he met another ship and asked where he was. The answer was, "if you keep south for a day you will reach Cape Horn." (Laughter.) Columbus sailed from Spain in the month of August; if he had attempted it in the winter he would not have discovered America—for instead of finding the trade winds to help him westward he would have found a strong northwesterly wind. With that wind in large ships he never could have arrived here in January. Indeed, on returning in that month he was almost shipwrecked. The vessels that went west, and those that went east both kept their own reckoning, and religiously noted their Sabbaths; but on meeting and comparing they found that paradox—two Sundays coming together. The Society Islands receive their reckoning from Cape Horn and the Sandwich Islands from the east of Asia; so a ship in passing from one to the other must either hitch back their time one day or hitch it up a day. If we had a telegraph line stretched from Manilla to California, thence to this city and another to India by the Persian Gulf—the Atlantic line being also completed—then if you should send a telegraph message to a correspondene in Manilla by the California and Pacific line, and another to your friend in China by the Atlantic line, and request them to inform you of the exact time at which they receive them—suppose you send the messages at 12 M., on Monday—and your friend in China, will answer, "I received your instructions twelve hours after date, or at midnight on Monday," but your correspondent at Manilla will reply, "I received your message twelve hours before the date, that is at twelve o'clock on Sunday night." It is to be hoped the third attempt of the French government to lay their lines of telegraph in the Mediterranean will be successful. When that and the Atlantic line are completed we will have the happiness of witnessing the three old continents in conversation with the new. The mariner, as he reaches the trade winds, finds himself wafted along by air the softest, sweetest, purest in the world; there is no sky more delicious, no heavens more beautiful. In the Pacific ocean the trade winds are the finest—they are perfectly developed—there is nothing to change or defect them; an open boat might float upon them as easily and safely as upon a sunny river's placid bosom. The breeze is just sufficient to keep the sails filled; it is constant and never rises or falls suddenly—a gale is unknown. Of all the lovely scenes one meets with at sea, the most enchanting are among the islands in the South Pacific, along the course of the trade winds. There sky, earth and air combine their splendors in such a harmonious whole as doubly to delight the mind and raise the heart to admiration.

The land and sea breezes are other characteristics of the sea. At Valperaiso, in the summer afternoons, there is always a strong gale blowing from the sea, the waves rise and beat against the shore, the ships drag their anchors, the promenading in the streets is stopped, and nearly every out-door pursuit is prevented. Suddenly there is a great calm—the fishermen launch their little boats upon the tide, which a moment before was angrily foaming and breaking against the shore, but now as calm as if it had never known a storm. The weather invites abroad, the ladies promenade the streets in ball costume, for now there is not wind enough to disturb the slightest curl, and all this change is so sudden that one cannot realize it. Presently, when the short twilight has scarcely passed away the stars stand out, as if held by invisible fingers, the constellations are fixed in their places, and there is beauty unsurpassed. Alone in the night watch after the sea breeze was sunk to rest, I have stood upon the deck gazing admirably upon the stars which shine with a lustre unknown to this latitude. The sky looks solid, like a vault of steel, set with diamonds; you fear to speak, lest the slightest noise shall disturb the deep profound. Glancing the eye above and around, you are dazzled with the firmament; the moon and stars stand out and do not seem to touch the vault. But at the same time the western sky is beautiful. Orion is there, and just about to go down and sup with his brother. The constellations of stars seem like holes torn in the robe of night, through which the astronomers peer into the deep beyond. No one who has never beheld these skies can have any idea of their magnificence, grandeur and beauty. But let us pass from the deep above to the deep below. The lead is let down to the bottom of the sea, and it is curious to see the work that is going on there. Beautiful coral islands are built up there; perhaps a part of one, if we could dissect it would be found to have come down the Mississippi, from the Rocky Mountains, or to have been borne upon the bosom of the great Amazon, from the tropics of South America; or, indeed, parts in that island may have come from every part of the world, by routes which if we could trace them would seem wonderfully long and strange. In the cell which one of these animalculi has built for itself we should recognize a part of the Table Rock from Niagara, and sand from the Holy Mountains. It may contain matter from the Euphrates, from the sunny plains of Southern Europe, from the battle fields of the Danube and the Nile, or from the soil of classic Italy. We know all this, because mariners have told us of the islands these corals have built up; they seem to have been at work in the sea ever since the waters were gathered together in one place; and looking at the work they have done, the islands they have built up, we have a proof of their eternal dilligence and perseverence. It appears that we had no idea of the operations that were carried on in the depths of the sea till we begin to explore it with lead and line, and now it seems a great charnel house. Everybody who has stood upon the shore of the sea has desired to fly away upon its waves and learn what there is beyond it, or if possible to dive below and learn what there is beneath it. Until recently all was conjecture about the depth and formation of the bottom of the sea; it was supposed that it might be as deep as a mountain is high; but the character of the bottom, they left that to poets' brains to picture. Some supposed it scattered over with gold, gems, anchors, dead men's bones, &c., but Brooke's lead teaches a different story; it shows that all such things are covered up and burried deep down, many feet, by shells and animalculi. Everywhere where this admirable sounding apparatus of Brooke has been, it has brought up shells and the carcasses of the dead. A single quill may bring up thousands—nay, millions of these shells; they are so small that it requires the minutest microscope to discover them; they cannot be seen when alive. The bottom of the deep is covered over with their carcases; they have obeyed the commandment which was given on the fifth day: "Multiply and bring forth abundantly." Never before now does history give an account of any attempts being made to measure the depths of the sea. Chance circumstances caused me to attempt it, and thinking it might result in good, I continued the attempt. Congress then passed an act directing the Secretary of the Navy to set apart and direct one vessel to continue these soundings for the purpose of assisting in perfecting these discoveries, and also to allow the whole navy to assist in making the investigation in so far as they could without interfering with their proper duties. In order to get at the bottom of the sea, they got some common twine and tied a thirty-two pound ball to it; then letting it down into the sea, they waited to see how much line would run out, and considered the length of that line measured the depth of the sea at that point. The twine and ball were left in the sea. As soon as the deep sea soundings were commenced, we found we were in a new field; we found that system would not do; experiment showed us that when the cannon ball was at the bottom, the twine continued to run out, and that the larger the ball the slower the twine would run. The difficulty of getting it down was not because of the increased density of the water, since that can only be compressed very slightly, but because that when the cannon ball had gone down a mile, it had to drag a mile of twine after it. Then we used the same kind of twine and the same weight of ball for every experiment, but we found sometimes that the twine would never run out. A vessel one day was sent out to take soundings, or measure the depth of the sea at a particular spot; they began at sunrise, and, as the captain was a very patient man, they stayed there till sunset, the twine still running out, so they came back and said they guessed there was no bottom there. (Laughter.) This was before we discovered the under-currents. By the use of proper leads we now know the structure of the bottom of the sea along the north Pacific, as well as along the Atlantic. The most peculiar thing in the North Atlantic is a ridge from Newfoundland to England, which is called the telegraphic plateau. The deepest point along that route is about two miles. Having learned this, we must next get some plan to prove to the people that we had reached the bottom of the sea and knew its composition and geography. We tried to bring up the shot to which the twine was fastened, but the twine was not strong enough, and if we used a larger one it was too heavy for the shot to carry down. Hence we have the invention of Brooke's excellent apparatus. (Lieutenant Maury here presented a sample of it and explained it to the audience.) The shot is hollow, with a long reed running through it; there are quills in the reed; now, the shot is left at the bottom, but the quills and reed are drawn up. The apparatus is so arranged that the moment the end of the reed—which extends six or eight inches beyond the ball—touches the bottom, the shot falls off and the rest can be easily drawn up. Provided with these instruments and facilities, a ship was sent out to the ocean to take soundings, and it discovered better than gems and pearls at the bottom of the sea—it discovered the telegraphic plateau which is to unite the Old and New World. The quills on coming up contained skeletons of sea insects of microscopic minuteness; these were sent to West Point, and particularly examined by Professor Bailey. The specimens from the calm sea, from the Gulf of Mexico, from the Gulf Stream, all evidently consist of one family and of one kind. When Professor Bailey examined the matter brought from the telegraphic plateau, he found volcanic cinders in it. We could not account for it at first; we knew that the volcanoes of South America had cast their cinders as far as Cuba; but if they came from that source we would have found them in the Gulf Stream; so it was useless to look there for an explanation. It was next suggested that those cinders lying just along the track of the European steamers might be the ashes from these boats; so Professor Bailey told me to get him some cinders from the ashpit of the Baltic and the Pacific. After giving them a careful and critical examination, he established the gratifying fact that steamboats are not volcanoes. (Laughter.) The source of these cinders still remains a mystery; but they show that the matter there lies as soft as down at the bottom of the deep sea. There is no motion nor disturbing force there. Indeed, these soundings suggest the idea that the sea like the snow cloud with its flakes in a calm, is always letting fall upon its bed showers of microscopic shells; and we may readily imagine that the "sunless wrecks" which strew its bottom are in the process of ages hid under this fleecy covering, presenting the rounded appearance which is seen over the body of the traveller who has perished in the snow storm.

The ocean, especially within and near the tropics, swarms with life. The remains of myriads of moving things are conveyed by currents, and scattered and lodged in the course of time all over its bottom. This process, continued for ages, has covered the depths of the ocean as with a mantle, consisting of organisms as delicate as the immaculate frost, and as light as the undrifted snow flake on the mountain. Wherever this beautiful sounding rod has reached the bottom of the deep sea, whether in the Atlantic or Pacific, the bed of the ocean has been found of a down-like softness. The lead appears to sink many feet deep into the ooxy matter there, which has been strained and filtered through the sea water. This matter consists of the skeletons and casts of insects of the sea of microscopic minuteness. The currents do not reach down to the bottom of the deep sea; there are no abrading agents at work there, save only the gnawing of the tooth of time; a rope of sand it stretched upon the bed of the ocean, would be a cable strong enough to hold the longest telegraphic wire that art can draw. At the bottom of the sea there is a protecting cushion of still water. We have had soundings in the Gulf Stream, and every thing at the bottom there is as still as the grave. If the stream, with its current of four miles an hour, reached to the bottom of the sea, it would have torn up or worn through the surface of the earth, and we would have gone down to the molten interior. We see in the Table Rock, at Niagara, what a small stream continually wearing away will do. The notion has prevailed that a telegraphic cable must be of great strength to resist and withstand the forces of the sea. Whereupon the conducting wire, after being coated to insulation with gutta percha, was encased in a wire hawser or cable stout enough to hold the largest "seventy-four" to her anchors. These cables were very expensive in their manufacture, bulky for stowage, unwieldy for handling, and difficult to lay. It was such a wire laid cable that the Telegraph Company lost in the laying between Newfoundland and Cape Breton, in 1855; and it is such a one—wire laid, stiff, and larger than a man's arm—that the French have twice attempted to lay in the Mediterranean, and twice lost. But now we have learned that all the obstacles interposed by the sea to the laying of submarine telegraphs lie between the surface and the depth of a few hundred fathoms below; and that these are not to be mastered by force nor overcome by the tensile strength of wire drawn ropes, but, that with a little artifice, they will yield to a mere thread. Therefore, it may now be considered as a settled principle in submarine telegraphy that the true character of a cable for the deep sea is not that of an iron rope as large as a man's arm, but a single copper wire, or a fascicle of wires, coated with gutta percha, pliant and supple, and not larger than a lady's finger A company composed of English and Americans are now at work on the submarine, Atlantic telegraph, and I hope and believe that before this time next year it will be in successful operation. The first telegraph that was ever laid down under water was across the East River, from the Merchants' Exchange to the signal station on the other side. But then there was no such thing as gutta percha known in commerce. It was laid down surrounded with a leaden tube, but the motion of the water wore it off in six months. After the discovery of gutta percha we learned the very beautiful process of insulating wires in it. Iron wires have been used to surround the gutta percha, but they are unnecessary, except near the shore or in shallow water. May the submarine Atlantic telegraph be quickly completed, and let the first message which flashes across its wires read thus:—"The people of the United States, in Congress assembled to the Princes, Potentates and Powers of the Old World send greeting: peace and good will to all nations in the world; free intercourse and commerce with all people".

Return of Rev. Dr. Livingstone to Civilization.

THE Rev. Dr. Livingstone arrived at Marseilles from Tunis on the 6th inst., and was in good health. His left arm is, however, broken and partly useless, it having been torn by a lion. When he was taken on board Her Majesty's ship Frolic, on the Mozambique coast, he had great difficulty in speaking a sentence of English, having disused it so long while travelling in Africa. He had with him a native from the interior of Africa. This man, when he got to the Mauritius, was so excited with the steamers and various wonders of civilization that he went mad, and jumped into the sea and was drowned. Dr. Livingstone has been absent from England seventeen years. He crossed the great African continent almost in the centre, from west to east, has been where no civilized being has ever been before, has made many notable discoveries of great value. He travelled in the two-fold character of missionary and physician, having obtained a medical diploma. He is rather a short man, with a pleasing and serious countenance, which betokens the most determined resolution. He continued to wear the cap which he wore while performing his wonderful travels. On board the Candia, in which he voyaged from Alexandria to Tunis, he was remarkable for his modesty and unassuming manners. He never spoke of his travels except to answer questions. The injury to his arm was sustained in the desert while travelling with a friendly tribe of Africans. A herd of lions broke into their camp at night and carried off some of their cattle. The natives in their alarm, believed that a neighboring tribe bewitched them. Livingstone taunted them with suffering their losses through cowardice, and they then turned out to face and hunt down the enemy. The doctor shot the lion, which dropped wounded. It afterwards sprang on him and caught him by the arm, and, after wounding two natives who drew it off him, it fell down dead. The wounded arm was not set properly, and Dr. Livingstone suffered excrutiating agony in consequence.—[London Times, Dec. 11.

The Accident to the Steamship America.

YESTERDAY morning the British and North American royal mail steamship America, Captain Lang, returned to this port in a disabled state, having encountered a severe gale in the channel. The America sailed from the Mersey on Saturday last, with a large number of passengers and the usual mails, for Boston. After leaving the port she met with very severe weather, but continued her course without interruption until the morning of Tuesday last, the 9th inst. She then lay to about fifty miles west of Cape Clear. While in this position she was struck by a tremendous sea, the gale raging at the time with terrible violence. The decks were completely swept, and considerable alarm was created on board, more especially among the passengers. The bulwarks were carried away as well as three boats. The steward's pantry suffered in a similar manner, a great portion of the contents being destroyed, and the fore saloon completely gutted. The vessel sustained other damage, though of minor importance. One of the the crew was badly injured, having received a compound fracture of both his legs. Others of the men were more or less bruised, but not seriously. The shock was so great as to knock the furniture about in all directions, to the great consternation of the passengers, some of whom sustained slight bruises. It is said that five seamen were carried off the vessel by the sea, but most miraculously driven back by a returning wave, only one—the man previously referred to—receiving any serious injury. Captain Lang maintained the utmost coolness and self-possession during the trying scene. Finding the vessel in such a disabled condition, he had no alternative but to put her about, in order to save the ship and passengers. This being done, he steamed direct for this port, where he arrived at an early hour yesterday morning. The America now lies in the Huskisson Dock, and will require to be laid up for some time for repairs.

A Sad Case for Monogamists.

THE following letter appears in the Morning Star—"SIR: This is the first (and probably will be the last) letter I ever wrote to a newspaper. I write to you, because I remember so well an article in your columns which referred to a 'delicate question.' Oh! God, how little I thought that question concerned me then. But it has become the delicate question. What am I to do? I am a widow, and my sister likewise, each with a child. We are willing and anxious to work at anything, but we cannot get work to do. We can undertake dressmaking, mantle-making, millinery, plain needlework and housekeeping. We can make paper models; in fact, we can do anything not decidedly menial. Both have received a good education, both have unblemished characters, both are literally starving. What are we to do? We can give unquestionable reference, and court the fullest investigation by any person inclined to help us. We have three alternatives—starvation, the degradation of the work-house for ourselves and children, or the degradation of (Oh, God! I cannot write it) what would only effect ourselves. Our maternal instincts and affections render it dangerous for us to decide on this delicate question.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 3, 1857.

"No Man Knoweth the Things of God but by the Spirit of God."

THE Kingdom of God, in its organization, mission, and destiny, is so unlike human institutions in these particulars that the most ignorant and the most intelligent of men, unconnected with it, occupy the same position—so far as the capacity of the one or the other is concerned by which either may assume to judge of its principles or movements. The learned High Priest, in the ancient capital of Judea, might sit in the seat of Moses, and the history of that great Legislator and his legitimate successors might throw round his head a halo of glory, suggesting deep reverence and the bended knee to the thousands who approached the judgment seat, but, with it all, no better was he, or the most pious of his long-praying brethren, qualified to judge of the principles of Mary's son, than the lame, rejected poor who sat at the door of the temple or at the door of the synagogues. So utterly bewildered was the human mind that even as good a man as Nicodemus could not understand the simple instructions of the greatest Teacher that ever tabernacled in flesh. The New Testament is standing evidence in support of the sentiment heading this article: no one can read that book of records without perceiving that Christ had even with his disciples the greatest difficulty to make them comprehend the principles, spirit, and mission of the Kingdom of God upon the earth. His readiness to impart instruction to his brethren was ever apparent in all his intercourse with them; but, in spite of his best will, their traditions and circumstances prevented him from communicating the burden of his soul.

As time rolled on, and the Holy Ghost the Comforter revealed the deep things of God and of eternity, brought the past to remembrance and showed things to come, the apostles and saints emerged from darkness into the fullness of the light of the work assigned them, for that generation; but with that increased light and better understanding of the doctrines they had very imperfectly understood from the lips of their elder brother, they experienced a proportionate difficulty of communicating the same to others as he had previously experienced in endeavoring to teach them. Paul's declaration that no man could say that Jesus was the Christ but by the Holy Ghost was simply a reiteration of the principle advanced to Nicodemus—even that regeneration was absolutely necessary to whomsoever would enter the Kingdom of God: a fact which the great Apostle to the Gentiles had learned in his own personal experience, both in regard to his own mind and what he had witnessed in his intercourse with others. What was set forth by Christ on this subject was not only realized by Paul and his brethren the apostles, but every man and woman that entered the Kingdom of God anciently, and comprehended anything of its principles and work, likewise understood it, and knew that as nutritious food was necessary to preserve in health the physical body, so also was the constant influence of the Holy Ghost necessary to the life of the soul hid with God in Christ. The exhortations to preserve the body pure from the contaminations of a wicked world, that the Holy Spirit might dwell therein and be a light to the mind of its possessor in the midst of surrounding darkness, were not the ravings of would-be-regarded austere moralists who wished to parade their Stoicism before the wondering, ignorant multitude; but they were the soul's deep impressions, drawn from long years of experience, that the favors of heaven could neither be received nor appreciated by those who indulged in the corruptions of a wicked, degenerate, and perverse race. With all this teaching from those who were members of the Kingdom of God, living their religion and enjoying its influence; from persons who had gained every item of information of good and evil by daily experience, in combating the influence of an opposing power, the temptations and allurements of artificial society, it is easy to understand how the pious leaders of the Jews—who, for a reputation for learning and piety, passed their time in pondering over what had been, and in praying long and loud in the corners of the streets to be better seen of men—rejected the Messiah. His low degree stung their pride, to listen to the carpenter's son from Nazareth, a place the very mention of which was abomination in their pious ears, was more than could be expected from them. However much Mary, Elizabeth, Zachariah, Simeon of Old, and many other truly honest, God-fearing persons might be comforted in their souls, by the whisperings and revelations of the Holy Spirit, and look forward with unwavering confidence to the redemption of Israel, and be ready in their humble hearts to bless God and ask no greater favor than with their eyes to behold their Redeemer, and to worship Him—even in swaddling clothes—the renowned for wisdom, long prayers, and alms-giving, who wore broad phylacteries on their garments and on their foreheads, with the inscription—"Holiness to the Lord" thereon, could not be expected to bow and acknowledge that during all the years of their daily, pious performances from the cradle of the babe of Bethlehem to the day that the Messiah confronted them for their hypocrisy, that the Lord whom they professedly served had revealed to them nothing, and that the promised Deliverer had come upon them as a thief in the night. Their reputation was at stake the moment it would be known that they held converse with a man of the people, who had even dared to break through venerated custom, and speak of men as men, though they did even sit in high places and swayed dominion over the people; a man whose plainness of speech was offensive; a man who called corruption, corruption, and ignorance and hypocrisy by their own names, and exposed them in great and small, in open enemy or in professed friend. To hear and know from the lips of the Divine Teacher, or from his apostles of equally high pretensions, his principles was almost impossible: to hear them from an enemy was certain misrepresentation. A Nicodemus might, occasionally, cultivate his acquaintance by night, but such men of rank and influence were rare—then, as now, custom and pride were the barriers to man's salvation and to a world's progress and redemption.

By the politicians of the nations where they travelled, the Apostles and leading men of the Church were charged with sedition, and with aspiring by their innovations to change society, and turn the world upside down; by the pious they were charged with setting forth strange Gods for the people to worship, and were regarded as enemies to the time-honored religion of their fathers, and by the unthinking mass who are neither one thing or another, but who have a strong leaning to the worship of fine cloth, jewelry, and corrupt pleasures, the disciples of Christ were stigmatized as the offscouring of society. A profession of the new and unpopular faith was, therefore, taking up arms against a sea of troubles. On every side there were difficulties to cope with, difficulties which none could successfully combat, but those who lived close to God and enjoyed abundantly His Holy Spirit. The miracles of Christ were great, but to us none greater than the power and wisdom displayed by the weak things he had chosen to combat the mighty and the wisdom they displayed over the wisdom of the learned.

In this and previous generations, folks calling themselves Christians, have been free in their condemnation of those who rejected the Word of God eighteen centuries ago; they have talked loudly and reprobatively of the darkness, vanity, and presumption of pious Jews, learned Greeks and Romans who imagined themselves capable of passing judgment upon that which had been revealed from heaven; that which none but the pure in heart, the humble, contrite, obedient spirit, could ever hope to learn and understand, and that, also, through the aid and constant influence of the Spirit of the Father and the Son. We presume that there is not a Christian minister, but what has frequently drubbed the traditionated Jews for their hardened hearts, ridiculed the Greek and Roman for their vanity in measuring the things of God by human wisdom, shed crocodile tears over the bundle of them, consigned them to Hell for their sins and praised God that he lived not in Judea, that his generation was blessed with Gospel light and grace, that truth might be advocated now without the dire persecution of the dark ages, that his mind was open to receive the revelations which his father had rejected, and in the next breath, mock new revelation and brand Mormonism, of which he knows nothing but by hearsay, as the imposture of the age. Politicians, too, are betimes not backward in shedding from the end of their tongues, with all the awkwardness of insincerity and unfrequency—thanks to God for the advanced morality of their generation, and, then lashing themselves into fury, and tearing their passion in rags, forget their assimulated piety and reverence, blackguard the holy ordinances the Most High ordained for His most faithful and upright servants anciently, brand with mad enthusiasm, villany and corruption those who dare to walk in their footsteps, and the people join in their chorus. Oh, hypocrites! when will you be consistent? When will you open your eyes and behold that like David before Nathan you wrath and condemnation against ancient Jews is but sealing the same curse upon your own unthinking heads? Wake up, exercise your brains, and try and discover how much more you are capable of giving a righteous judgment against Mormonism to-day, than priests, politicians and the rabble were when they cried out crucify him, crucify him! This very christianity with which you plume yourselves was once trampled under foot by those who professed as great an acquaintance with it and its founder as you who now profess to know so well and trample upon Mormonism. That generation of pious men, who spurned Christ lived to condemn their fathers; you live to condemn them, and as certain others shall live to condemn you. You tell the Jew that his traditions and pride was a veil over his soul through which the light of Truth could never penetrate. Is the Christian to-day any better! If the Jew, without humbling his heart in true sincerity, could not receive of the Spirit of the Most High, like Cornelius the Gentile, and was utterly incapable of judging the mission of Christ without that Spirit how can any man presume to judge of Mormonism with lying on his tongue and deep rooted hatred in his heart!

We enter upon another year with the fixed determination to publish the Truth, God being our helper, and what we may live to witness we know not, but this much we do know, our efforts shall be consecrated to build up the Saints in righteousness, expose the folly and wickedness of whoever so infatuated that may fall upon us. We say to the Saints: live your religion, for it is as necessary for you to be humble and pure to retain the Spirit as it was to receive it, and for our enemies we invite them to be wiser, abstain from evil, cease from calumny, for while they persevere they only expose their own wickedness and folly for Truth is mighty and will prevail.

Popular Sovereignty and the N. Y. Herald

THE New York Herald has for a length of time been strenuously advocating republicanism, with Colonel Fremont as its representative. It did not accomplish its purpose in the election of that gentleman; but it states that it did assist him to get the votes of the State. No sooner has it done this and got snugly into bed, than it finds that its bedfellow is very uneasy, rolling and tumbling about, and wanting more room, an undue proportion of the clothes, and assuming airs of rights and privileges that he thought he possessed in common with his bedfellow. He has been complaining to Jove for sometime about King Log, when, lo and behold, he has succeeded in obtaining King Stork, whose maw he complains is so capacious that New York is in danger of being swallowed by this monster monarch; hear him:

"THE REPUBLICAN SCHEME TO DISFRANCHISE THE CITY.—It cannot be too strongly impressed on the mind of the public that it is the intention of the party called Republican, if it has the power, to disfranchise the city of New York at the next session of the Legislature. Our cotemporary, the Courier and Enquirer, one of the leading organs of the party, has paraded the scheme before the public at great length, and has accompanied it with comments whose unexampled boldness, in a journal dependent upon the residents of the city for support, may well provoke remark. The argument of the Courier, and of the leaders of the party called Republican, is, that after a full and complete trial, the people of this city have been proved to be incompetent to govern themselves, and that therefore it devolves upon the State authorities to set governors over them from other parts of the State. We submit that this is a perfectly fair statement of the ground occupied by the Republican leaders. We leave it to the merchants, to the mechanics, the wholesale and retail dealers, the professional men, and the people at large to decide how far this assumption does them justice."

The above, then, is plain republican doctrine, as expressed in the Philadelphia platform and set forth in the Courier and Enquirer and the New York Herald, two of the leading Republican papers. It is true, however, that since the election of Mr. Buchanan, the Herald has a strong squinting towards apostasy, and whatever it might believe in the doctrines of Republicanism as a theory, it is strongly induced to repudiate them in practice, as the following will show:

"The plan of disfranchising a community, or withholding from it the right of self-government, is not a novelty in politics or legislation. It is on this plan that British India and the Russias are governed. If you ask Lord Canning his ideas about the hundred millions of Hindoos over whom he reigns, he will answer you in the language of the Courier, that theory and practice prove the incompetency of these people to govern themselves, wherefore he comes from England to govern them. Just in the same way, the Emperor of Russia thinks that he knows his people too well to trust them with the right of making or administering their own laws; and consequently, as the Courier says, he resorts to a source of authority which is not liable to objection, namely, himself. But it is something startlingly new and original to propose to apply this system to the metropolis of the United States, and to want to treat the people of New York as the Governor-General of India treats the Hindoos, and as Alexander treats the Poles."

But why there should be anything new or startling in applying the principle of inconsistency to govern New York any more than to any other city, state or territory, we are at a loss to determine. If, like the Hindoo millions, governed by Lord Canning, the Russian serfs, governed by Alexander, or the old colonial British rule. One hundred thousand Americans can be disfranchised simply because they happen to live in a territory of the United States, why not apply the same rule to the six hundred thousand in New York city! Numbers can make very little difference; if one hundred thousand men can be considered incompetent, and be disfranchised, why not six hundred thousand! or why not small states! If the principle is correct in one case, why not in another! If governors, judges, sheriffs, marshals, state secretaries and attorneys, can be sent to the territories without the agency of the people of these territories, and if after their mock Legislatures, Congress can annul any or all of their acts! If Congress can surreptitiously, literally and unconstitutionally disfranchise the inhabitants of the territories of Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Washington, Oregon, New Mexico and Utah, why has not the Legislature of the state of New York, the power to disfranchise the city of New York! Why, Mr. Herald, it is simply carrying out Republican principles. Why, sir, you have asked and begged and prayed and pleaded for King Stork, now don't complain if he is hungry and carries out the principles of his nature. If Congress has a right to dictate to the territories, it is only shifting the scene to put the Legislature of New York state to dictate to the city; you ought to have learned before this that only a few were born to rule, and that the rest of mankind were serfs. The idea of a popular government is fast being exploded. As the country becomes older and more advanced in experience, they begin to find out that something more substantial and intelligent is required, a la mode European, and that our new fangled notions of the people ruling themselves, is a mere chimera; but,

"There is an impression in certain quarters that a moderate amount of intelligence lurks among the people of this city. There are persons who think that information and common sense are almost as widely spread here as in the butter and milk counties of the West, or even at Canandaigua and Batavia. That opinion is evidently not shared by the leaders of the Republican party. Their sentiment, based on several years' experience, is that, on the contrary, intelligence, common sense and probity are so rare here that we require that the country people shall come in and govern us for our own protection. This may be so. We do not undertake to dispute the principle. But we will thank the Republican leaders to vouchsafe to us a little information touching the method in which this new plan of government of theirs is to be adopted. What shall hereafter be considered evidence that the people of a city or county cannot govern themselves and require pro-consuls from abroad? Shall we have a chance of governing Albany, Troy, or Syracuse? Are there any fat counties which can be disfranchised, and placed under the rule of some of our loose politicians? Is it the rule that the people of every place which votes the Democratic ticket thereby prove themselves incapable of self-government? How far does the principle go? Can Congress apply it, and declare that this or that State is incompetent to govern itself? May we hope that the time will come when the President will appoint Governors to take charge of South Carolina and Massachusetts? Or is the scheme merely intended for State purposes?"

The above questions are very sensible, just the same as we have put before, and we have frequently wondered why one American citizen or a thousand, going to a territory of the United States, and settling there according to law, should, on his or their arrival there, be disfranchised, particularly when that same Constitution declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it, to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." Like the Herald, we were of the opinion that, peradventure, the people of the territories, and especially of Utah, might perchance be able to rule themselves; but the Republicans thought not, and the Herald thought not; he entertained, until lately, the opinion of Congress in regard to the territories, that of Canning towards India and the Czar in relation to Russia. Why this change? Ah! it is your bull that has goaded my ox, and now it is—"and if and if."

"Our neighbor of the Courier will see the necessity of throwing some light on these questions. It is something so new in this country for a large community to be disfranchised and pro-consuls set over it from elsewhere, that we must be forgiven for not seeing at the first glance where the plan will tend. We are well aware of the "peculiar advantages of despotism." They have undoubtedly benefited Paris in one point of view, that is to say they have improved its looks. Do the republican leaders want to improve New York with the same nostrum? Whatever they do, we hope they will deal with us mercifully. We have been brought up as simple Republicans, and have been taught that the idea of the governments and institutions of this country was, that men should make and administer their own laws. Now, it seems, all this is wrong, and we have got to go back to the old methods which the Romans employed in their provinces, and the English tried to establish in their American colonies. Well, the lesson is a tough one, but we suppose it must be learnt; and the sooner we make our minds up to receive our masters from the country villages the better."

We will engage to answer the questions put by the Herald to the Courier, if he will answer us by what right Congress assumes to send governors, judges, secretaries, attorneys, marshals, and sheriffs to the territories to govern the people without their consent, and why and by what authority they arrogate to themselves the right to annul their legislative acts and to disfranchise them!

Polygamy in Utah.

WE publish the following for the information of our friends in Utah, that they may know how many of them have become near-sighted, cripples, deaf, &c., lately. We say—no protestations; you must believe it. It has been published both in the San Francisco and New York Heralds, and must be true—they never publish lies. No dodging now; own up; don't act the part of the Irishman, who, upon denying that he was dead, was immediately silenced by—"Sure, you are dead: dosent the docther know betther than you!" We advise you to lay still and be aisy: But with all these wives married to all these cross-eyed, near-sighted cripples, shan't we have a lot of young cripples soon? How many, "the dark and doleful future" can alone determine. What is the price of wooden legs out there? We would advise manufacturers to send out a cargo on speculation.

FILLMORE CITY, Utah, Sept. 15, 1856.

The San Francisco Herald publishes the following letter from a correspondent in Utah:

These, Mr. Editor, are sober truths, and in what they will end is for the dark and doleful future. AMICUS CURIÆ.

We have one or two of these cripples moving about us now. Had we liberal offers, we might think of getting up an exhibition. Where's Barnum! In the absence of public exhibitions our own folks here, who have had opportunities of making their acquaintance, will be able to form a pretty good estimate of newspaper correspondence from Utah.

Christmas Party at Philadelphia.

AT the moment of going to press we have received from Elder Martin Lenzi a report of the party held in the Quaker City on Christmas Day. Presidents John Taylor, P. P. Pratt, Judge Appleby, Elders J. Snediker, Welchman, and Terry, together with a host of the priesthood from a distance were present and took part with the Philadelphians on the festive occasion. President Angus M. Cannon presided.

The company numbered between 300 and 400 persons, and were well entertained with songs, recitations and addresses. The refreshments were abundant and satisfactory. Everybody did their best, and that was something good, for the pleasure of those around, and an evening of intellectual enjoyment terminated with a trip on the light fantastic toe.

Letters from Elders.

ELDER JAMES PALMER from Utah, writes us from Philadelphia, Dec. 16, that he purposed leaving for England on the 18th by the steamship City of Manchester. Bro. Palmer writes us a very lengthy, good letter, which we would have published had it not come at a time we were flooded with correspondence and articles that were waiting patiently for insertion. Bro. P. says he had been detained longer at St. Louis than he expected, was in good health, and rejoicing in the work of the Lord.

Elder Bernard Snow writes from Boston, Mass., Dec. 21, that he had been among his relations preaching considerably to them and the folks all round. He has had a good hearing, and is satisfied with his visit. Elder A. P. Shumway sailed for Liverpool on the steamer Acadia on the 17th Dec.

Arrivals.

PRESIDENT GEO. A. SMITH returned on Tuesday from Connecticut. He had spent his Christmas with the Saints of the Westport and Norwalk Branch, and reports that they had a good time of enjoyment mentally and physically.

Judge Appleby arrived from New Jersey on Wednesday morning, greatly improved in health; we have not seen him look so well for a long time. President P. P. Pratt arrived the same afternoon from Philadelphia, accompanied by Elder Harrison the President of the Branch of the Church in that city.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Tennessee sailed at her appointed hour last Wednesday for San Juan, Nicaragua, with three hundred men and two thousand dollars worth of provisions for Gen. Walker. The revenue cutter Washington lay out a little, and the U. S. steamer Arctic, was in readiness in Brooklyn Navy Yard to answer any call—if filibusterism was so glaringly seen as to call for the stoppage of the Tennessee. The friends of Walker reported that arms were sent in another direction—whether or no the steamer sailed without interruption. The following day she had her share of a furious gale, in which she broke her shaft and had to put into Norfolk, Va. The steamship James Adger sailed on Tuesday from this port with fifty more recruits, to take her cargo and passengers and proceed to San Juan. This unforseen hindrance is likely to add greatly to Walker's troubles.

Spiritualism is again accused of turning a young man's brain, and leading its victim to commit murder. Loitering about Third avenue Brooklyn, an honest Irishman invited him into his wagon to take a ride. They had only gone a short distance when he shot his unsuspecting victim through the head, and threw the body out of the wagon and drove on. On the same afternoon he was arrested in Jersey City endeavoring to sell the wagon for a saddle that he might have his riding horse fully equipped. The physicians who have examined him are of opinion that he is insane. His object, he says, one time was to have money, and he was sorry that his victim had only five cents; at other times he talks of the spirits wishing him dead.

Huntington's thirteen days trial ended on Tuesday evening. Judge Capron delivered a clear, forcible charge to the Jury, who, after a consultation of four hours and a quarter returned a verdict of guilty. The Court sentenced the prisoner to "be confined in the State Prison at Sing Sing for the term of four years and ten months,"—the full penalty of the law.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

SICILY.—The European papers recently received here give varied accounts of the uprising of the people against the authorities at Palermo. The Moniteur calls it a local affair of no magnitude, but the friends of the insurgents give a different account. Though it is very probable that the present affair has been already suppressed, the following extract from the Italia e Popolo, the organ of Mazzini, shows the spirit of the people:—"We hear from Palermo that the events we have so arduously wished for have commenced. The first steps has been most favorable, as 600 armed men were enabled to assemble at a moment's notice, led by men of talent and energy. The movement commenced at Menzojuso, about two miles from Palermo. Although at so short a distance from that city, the police were a whole day inactive. All the neighboring districts—Villafrate, Bonnira, Vicari, Cimina—have risen. Fetes, concerts, and illuminations have been held. The conduct of our brothers has been most sensible. There has been no pillage, no effusion of blood, no act of violence, but brotherly love throughout. At the moment I am writing I learn that the insurrection is spreading, and we hope for success. The rallying cry is, 'Vive l' Italia!' The flag is a tricolor, without arms or municipal device."

FRANCE.—Count Kisseleff and the whole of the Russian Legation dined with the Emperor lately. The guests remained to an unusually late hour, and after the coffee the Emperor beckoned Count Kisseleff into his private cabinet, and remained there with him tete-a-tete for two hours. The Moniteur publishes a report from the Governor General of Algeria, announcing a successful expedition against the Hamian tribes, and a skirmish with troops on the Morocco frontier. Many coachbuilders in Paris are now busily employed in preparing sledges, which, it would appear, are to be the fashion this winter, provided there is snow enough to render them available.

BADEN.—The Grand Duke has granted an amnesty to all persons condemned for participation in the armed revolt of 1848, except the chiefs of the insurrection, and individuals sentenced to infamous punishments for crimes not political.

SWITZERLAND.—Both Switzerland and Prussia solicited the good services of the Emperor Napoleon, but he declined relief for either. The Federal Council pursues its course independently, and rumor again has the Prussian army marching upon Neufchahel next spring.

ENGLAND.—England has proclaimed war against Persia, and the following is the Globe's defence of that step: "The plain facts connected with the rupture with Persia are, that in 1853 the Shah undertook not to send any expedition to Herat unless it were an expedition to succor it from foreign foes; and that he has broken his word, and sent an expedition which has laid siege to the town. The next fact is, that it is our interest to keep the Persians out of Herat, because Herat is the half-way house on the best road to the Indus; and that Herat is less likely to be used against us if it remain in the hands of the Herattees than if it were either Persian or Affghan. There is a power working by all processes, craft and force and menace, in Central Asia; creeping gradually up the frontiers of British India by these agencies, avowedly with the purpose of trying conclusions with British arms at a convenient season. Are we to stand still and take no measures of precaution, because the public cannot foresee the precise upshot of our interference? It is all very well to say let the tribes that wander over the regions between the Indus and the Caucasus fight out their quarrels without let or hindrance. We may adopt that policy; but there is another power in Asia that will not. We have a huge empire, its frontiers touch on the frontiers of many tribes. Russia has a huge empire held under the like conditions. There are only two Powers in Central Asia. Every step of Russian gain is British loss. Some such steps we can do nothing to prevent; there are others more or less overt which to a certain extent we can control, if not wholly. The question of who shall hold Herat is one; and our business now is to settle that question as solidly as it is given unto mortals to settle mundane things."

The Arctic discovery ship Resolute which sailed from this port on the 13th of Nov., under the command of Captain H. J. Harstein, arrived at Portsmouth, Eng., on the 12th of Dec. Great preparations were being made to receive Capt. Harstein, the officers and the crew accompanying him. The Resolute was despatched by the British Government in search of Sir John Franklin, and was frozen in among the iceberge; her officers and crew had to abandon her, leaving all their effects on board; she was found several months ago by the crew of a whaling vessel belonging to New London, Connecticut, having drifted about 1200 miles from the spot where she was abandoned. The sum of $40,000 was appropriated by our Government for the purpose of purchasing her from the fortunate whalers of New London—the English Government having waived all claim to her; and she has been repaired and fitted with the utmost care at the expense of our Government, with the design of restoring her to the Queen in at least as good a condition as she was in at the time the exigencies of their situation compelled her crew to abandon her.

LATEST.

By the arrival of the Niagara at Halifix, at midnight, Dec. 31st., we have advices from Europe, up to the 20th ult.

The war against Persia seems to be very unpopular in England. Large meetings were held denunciatory of the government. Bills were posted about London, warning soldiers against taking part in the "piractical invasion of Persia. The Resolute had been visited by Her Majesty and the Royal family. Capt. Hartstein, was the pink of politeness. Her Majesty sent £100 to be distributed among the crew. Great numbers of persons visited the ship after the Queen's departure. The soldier who attempted to assassinate the King of Naples was not "instantly killed," as telegraphed, but lived to be hung. Correspondence from Naples contains an account of his trial and last moments. When asked how long he had contemplated this act, he replied, "Ever since the King perjured himself." On the scaffold his demeanor was firm. The soldiers of his battalion were deeply moved, and some of them wept.

The chances of war between Switzerland and Prussia are reported greater than ever. The latter power is making great preparations. Nothing but intervention from other governments can stop them. The Emperor of France has accepted, on dit, an invitation to visit Berlin in the Spring. The brig Beauty from Jamaica, just arrived at Halifax, reports that on her outwade voyage, Nov. 9th, she picked up one of the boats of Le Lyonnais, bottom up. The accounts of the arrival of the Captain and others at Bordeaux has been contradicted and again confirmed, but we have seen nothing reliable either way.

The Mormons of Utah.

PERHAPS there is not a more unpromising region in our whole country for a people to locate in than Utah. Shut out from all intercourse except such as may be had by the most trying privations—devoid of almost everything like natural products, rigorous in climate, sterile in soil comparitively, removed from all markets for such products as the industry of its inhabitants can force from the rereluctant earth—without navigable streams, and inclosed by lofty and rugged mountains, Utah is gradually and steadily becoming an object of far greater importance than we are for the most part aware of. Impelled by the most incredible fanaticism, and living under the most absolute type of theocratic government—paying blind and zealous obedience to the behests of their leader, these people are literally performing miracles. Their missionaries are scattered over the world, and though frequently repelled with scorn and derision, return to their labors with the most astounding pertinacity. But a few years ago, and a handful of refugee men and women from Missouri were wending an untrodden path through the heart of a vast and unknown tract in search of some place where they might shelter from the persecutions of the world, and now the handful of outcasts have grown to be a powerful people, demanding admission into the Union on equal terms with the States, and setting the power and authority of the American Government at defiance.

The rapid progress and colonization of California can be accounted for on natural principles, but the advancement of Utah is almost miraculous. Thousands are flocking to their standard, from England, Germany, Australia and the United States. They have their emmissaries in all these and other countries, diligently preparing the way and making the paths straight for immigration to their great stronghold. The revenue of the Territory is expended to promote this object, and instead of being diminished, is largely increased by the added population—For industry is strictly enforced in Utah. Already they have assumed the name of a State for the Territory, and have opened up almost every branch of manufacture necessary to their subsistence, and independence from the contributions of other places. They manufacture all sorts of iron ware, cutlery, all kinds of farming implements, carpets, raise wool and make cloth, cotton fabrics of all kinds in the same manner, paper, saddlery, furniture, build steam engines—and many others. They pay great attention to raising the finest breeds of stock, poultry, etc.; they also encourage the fine arts, printing, music, etc., are handsomely patronized; and in several points they are in the advance of California, with all her boasted wealth and vast natural resources. These are facts—stern accessory facts—containing a lesson full of deep importance to our people, which they would do well to apply. Their unpromising country compels unceasing industry, and that checks the wild spirit of excitement—they have no time for it. They settled in a poor region to make it rich—to build up permanent homes, by sobriety and perseverence; they are not fevered by the plots of the gambling speculator; they offer peace, security for life and property, and assist those who are willing to go to them, and are increasing in population, with all their natural obstacles, far faster than is California, with her many natural advantages. Emmigrants to Utah go there dragging hand-carts from Missouri, containing all their world's store, while we have two lines of steamships in full operation, two other routes soon to be opened, a wagon road in prospective, and are hoping for a railroad in addition. They have settled the vast region from Great Salt Lake to within two hundred miles of our California frontiers, so that a traveller having passed that space, can sleep at one of their settlements every night.

The want of space precludes our showing the causes of these results, as compared with California; but the subject is one of deep import and merits the serious attention of all.

FOR THE MORMON.

Reminiscences of Prussia.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

The pages of history record the many remarkable and important events, the many afflicting and bloody scenes which have generally characterized the convulsive struggle of oppressed nations against the iron reign of tyranny; and it is justice that the deeds of those heroes who have taken a manly and conspicuous part in the great drama of life, and who are no more—as well as the actions of those tyrants who rode in their triumphal chariots over smoking ruins, mouldering corpses, who glutted themselves on the blood and marrow of nations, and established their fame on the tomb of empires—be faithfully conveyed to after ages, so that history may be looked upon as a mirror of the past, in which we can see the rise, progress and downfall of empires, as well as of individuals, who having talent, daring and ambition, had emerged from obscurity, and been carried by the surging waves of life for a while through the brilliant but fatal career of earthly greatness, till Nemesis hurled them back into the bosom of oblivion. While meditating upon the dilapidations and fall of tyrannic governments, my mind reverts to Prussia, my native country, the land which has caused me many a bitter pang. On retracing a few of its prominent changes, by which, from a small insignificant principality, it was enlarged into a powerful empire, I cannot help making some remarks concerning the manner in which the formidable sceptre of oppression is swayed, and authority abused, by enacting cruel and unwise laws, and producing these direful effects. From the year 1701, when Prussia was erected into a kingdom, and Frederic I. Elector of Brandenburg, was raised on a footing with kings and emperors, the movements of the Prussian government were looked upon with a suspicious eye by the other powers of the Germanic Confederation. The many jealousies, bickerings and disputes among the courtiers of the newly elected monarch, —men who were aspirers of a bold and intriguing disposition, added to the many weaknesses of the King, who was ruled by the most violent passions, and who acted generally by the impulse of the moment, without considering the consequences of his rash actions, gave rise to those cruel and barbarous deeds by which the brilliancy of the royal diadem has been soiled. Whoever is familiar with German history, knows that the domestic circle of the Prussian court in those days, was the seat of rudeness, vulgarisms and misery, in which Frederic I. delighted. It was at that time that his son Frederic II. had to endure the greatest adversities from his royal parent, between whom and his august offspring there existed the greatest animosity, so that the ties of consanguinity appeared to be totally abnegated. Frederic gave however not the slightest reason or cause for any bitter feelings from his father; on the contrary he proved a good, excellent child, who was very strict in the discharge of his filial duties, but the young prince who resembled in character more his accomplished mother, had a great predeliction for fine arts, especially music, and sciences, for a cultivation of the mind, hence he improved every opportunity to study useful books; the king however being a great enemy to every species of intellectual refinement, was bitterly opposed to his son's favorite indulgence. Frederic's outrageous behavior towards his son illustrated the fact that persons of gross ignorance and inferior capacities despise and reject often an intellectual advancement, preferring a midnight darkness of the mind to the noonday splendor of enlightened civilization. The king's ill feelings toward the crown prince increased so, that, on a certain opportunity, he was put before a court martial, and the sentence of death would have been passed upon him, if it had not been for the interference of the most influential persons of the court. It may then easily be imagined, that, if the Prussian monarch acted with such cruel severity in the sphere of his own domestic circle, very tyrannic laws were enforced on the ill-fated subjects, trampling under foot every feeling of humanity and rectitude.

The administration of justice was in the hands of unprincipled and cruel men, who in contending who should have the pre-eminence endeavored to overreach and injure one another, and in fact employed every means to obtain their end. The murmurs and complaints of the oppressed people were of no avail, and were only answered by the application of the torture. It is an historical fact, that persons who, in consequence of a lettre de cachet, had been unjustly imprisoned, were forced, when writhing under the agonizing pains of the torture, to make false statements, merely in order to be removed from the horrible inhumanity of the stretcher.

Under the auspices of so despotic an authority, the financial affairs of the nation were in a deplorable state, so that notwithstanding the exorbitant taxes which were imposed upon the people, the royal treasury was empty, and unable to meet its heavy liabilities. But as Frederic the Great, had taken the reins of government, many salutary laws were enunciated, the grievances of the people to a certain extent redressed, the punishment of the torture was abolished, and a great reform introduced in the financial department. The number of the attendants of the royal household was diminished as much as was compatible with the dignity of a monarch; in fact, that highly gifted prince did by his wise management and great economy, much for the improvement of Prussia, so that on his demise, the debts of the government were to some extent paid off; and, although he had been engaged in the Seven years' war, about $12,000,000 were left in the treasury, and an excellent army of 200,000 experienced soldiers, ready to take the field at a moment's warning. One of the curious moves of Frederick the Great, was the enactment of a law by which the King alone had a right to sell coffee. The monopoly of the coffee trade by the Crown gave rise to many ludicrous remarks and acts among the people. One day the King, on observing from a window of his residence in Potsdam, a great many persons gathering round a pillar of the castle, and was informed that by a certain mischievous painter a bill was put up, representing His Majesty as in the act of roasting and selling coffee for the accommodation of his subjects. Frederic laughed heartily at this outburst of popular joking, saying, "put that bill a little lower so that everybody can see it." The King having a great predilection for the language, manners and customs of the French nation, had quite a number of eminent men of that country at the different places of his residence, among whom were Voltaire, Massillon and others, who did a great deal for the refinement of the Court. Frederic himself was very fond of the society of intelligent, accomplished men and used his influence for the promotion of arts and sciences. Frederic the Philosopher, as he is frequently called by historians, was one of those few persons, who, like Henry IV., of France, were looked upon as the Fathers of the People. But as soon as that bright star was extinguished, his successors swayed again the sceptre of oppression, the millions of dollars that had been saved, were squandered away, and the nation once more put in bondage. One of the most revolting deeds in which the Prussian monarch took an active part, was the division of Poland in 1772 among the Emperor of Austria, Empress of Russia and the King of Prussia, by which Stanislaus, the legitimate monarchical ruler of Poland, was robbed of the greatest part of his dominions, in open violation of the most solemn treaties. Poland, that had been for centuries a bulwark against the inroads and aggressive measures of eastern barbarism and tyranny, is now deprived of its independence, of its ancient power, and by the present annexation of that ill-fated country to Russia, Prussia and Austria, the trial is made to deprive even the Poles of their language, by the introduction of the Russian and German tongues, and thus sweep the name of Poland out of existence; but whether this be accomplished, time will show.

He also stated that in consequence of Bro. J. T. Richards and Edward Partridge as his counsellors, who, upon motion, were unanimously sustained.

Moved and seconded that we uphold and sustain Brigham Young and his counsellors as the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, together with all the constituted authorities in Zion and throughout all the world. Carried unanimously.

The President then arose and stated that the remainder of the day would be occupied by the Elders in speaking. As there are several of the brethren who have lately arrived from Zion, he should be much pleased to hear from them.

Elder Alma L. Smith addressed the Conference, expressing his gratitude in meeting the brethren, and said that he felt to rejoice that he was called to come to these lands and unite his strength with the servants of God in rolling on the work in these parts. Was desirous of obtaining a speedy knowledge of the native language that he might be enabled to raise a warning voice among this people.

Elder Mitchell followed with a few remarks —bearing testimony to the blessings that the Lord had extended unto him and the rest of the brethren in their journeyings to this place.

Moved and carried that we adjourn for one hour. Singing. Dismissed by Elder Johnson.

2 o'clock, P. M.

Conference met according to adjournment and opened by singing. Prayer by Elder A. L. Smith. Singing.

Elder Joseph Smith occupied a portion of the time in speaking his feelings in regard to his labors among this people, &c. Never enjoyed himself so well in his life as he had while laboring in this mission. He also said many things encouraging to those who have lately arrived on the Islands in regard to the character and disposition of the natives. He was followed by Elders France, Brown, Wright, Rose, Young, Dowell and Partridge, who all briefly addressed the Conference, remarking particularly upon the joy and satisfaction that they felt in seeing the union and good feeling that pervaded our midst.

President Smith made some very appropriate remarks, well calculated to encourage those who have recently arrived. He exhorted all to be humble, prayerful and obedient to counsel and they could not fail to be blessed and approbated of heaven. He told the brethren to set no stakes as to what they will do and what they will not do, for we know not what a day will bring forth. Also exhorted the brethren to use every exertion to obtain a knowledge of the native language, for without it he did not believe they could fulfil a mission satisfactory to their own minds. Each one should endeavor to set a good example before the native Saints, and try to raise them from their low and degraded state.

Adjourned till Tuesday at 10 o'clock. Singing. Benediction by Elder Speirs.

TUESDAY, Oct. 7.

Conference convened pursuant to adjournment. Opened by singing. Prayer by Elder H. P. Richards. Singing.

Elder Johnson expressed his feelings in short in regard to meeting the brethren after being separated so long. He testified to the blessings of God which had been extended unto him while laboring upon these lands.

He was followed by Elders J. R. Young, Wm. W. Cluff and F. W. Hurst, who occupied a few moments in bearing their testimony to the truth of the great work of the last days. They all felt to appreciate the blessings that we enjoy in meeting together and speaking one to another concerning the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, and of transacting such business as may best subserve the interests of the same.

The President then called for the representation of the different Conferences which were given as follows:

Lanai, represented by Elder Partridge, 3 Seventies; 11 Elders; 13 Priests; 6 Teachers; 5 Deacons; 2 died. Total number of officers and members, 160.

From the reports of the Presidents of the different Conferences we learn that the Saints are at some places alive to the work and are endeavoring to live up to the requirements of the Church, while at others they are more careless and indifferent as to the things pertaining to the great work of God and their eternal salvation.

Elder S. E. Johnson submitted a report of the school upon the Island of Lanai, which was accepted. Report shows that the school had been kept up since last April. There was from 15 to 25 scholars in regular attendance, who generally progressed rapidly in the common branches of education.

He said many things encouraging to the Elders who have recently arrived on the Islands. 2 o'clock P. M.

Conference opened by singing. Prayer by Elder Speirs. Singing.

A portion of the afternoon was occupied in setting apart the Elders to their different fields of labor, after which Prest. Smith addressed the Conference at some length, giving the Elders much good instruction pertaining to their future labors upon these lands. Said he had rejoiced to see the union that has been in our midst; although we are young and inexperienced, yet, if we will put our trust in the Lord, we can do more towards establishing the reign of peace on the earth than all the learned divines in the world. He exhorted the brethren to be humble and prayerful at all times and adhere to the counsel of those who are placed over them. He gave much good advice to the Elders in regard to their walk and talk among this people. Requested each one to repair to his field of labor as soon as possible, that the native Saints may not be left too long to themselves.

Moved and carried that we adjourn our Conference till the 6th of April, 1857, to meet at such place as the Presidency shall direct. Singing. Benediction by President Smith.

Conference passed off with the best of feelings, nothing occurring to cause discord or grieve the Holy Spirit, which appeared to pervade every breast; but all apparently enjoyed the meeting, and felt to realize that although far separated from friends and the body of the Church, we are not entirely deprived of the blessings of the Almighty, which none but Latter Day Saints know how to rightly appreciate.

SILAS SMITH, President.
EDWARD PARTRIDGE, Clerk.

Revision of the Bible.

LAST night a public meeting was held upon this subject at St. Martin's Hall, Long-acre, the object being to hear an address from Mr. W. H. Black, who is well known by his connexion with the learned body of men known as the Anglo-Biblican Institute, and as assistant Keeper of the Public Records, from which office he has lately retired. Dr. Lee occupied the chair, and several of the principal persons connected with the movement were on the platform. The audience was not very numerous. Mr. Black, having been introduced to the meeting, addressed it at great length upon a question which, he said, had attracted much public attention in consequence of the recent motion in Parliament. He was one of those who supported the revision of the Bible. It was true that the present version was an authorized one, but the translation being made at a time when very little light could be thrown upon it by the learning of the age, it abounded in inaccuracies, which a more intimate knowledge of Greek and Hebrew, of Eastern manners and customs, and the researches of a long line of men illustrious for their learning had brought to light. Now, when it was considered that the translations of ordinary worldly documents were required to be made with the most scrupulous accuracy, they ought not to suffer the truths of Holy Writ, which by means of the English version of the Bible were conveyed to the ends of the earth, to be obscured by such mistranslations as it could be proved to demonstration existed. He gave a brief history of the origin of the present translation, which was was undertaken in consequence of the complaints made by the Puritans that the Scriptures were not truly translated, and it was to avoid recurrence of those complaints that King James issued the order for the translation now in use, which came out in 1611, and was ordered to be read in churches. But James had no intention to meet the views of the Puritans by that translation, and it was a little singular that, although it set aside the Geneva Bible, which was translated at the very seat of Calvanism, the King's translation was far more Calvanistic. Mr. Black continued at great length to show that the new translation was rather a revision than otherwise, and that the translators had followed many of the blunders and corruptions that had crept in, owing to the ignorance of the early printers, who often inserted supplemental words rendered necessary by the genius of the English language in the Roman text, and thus gave a divine authority to that which possessed none. Some instances of this description of alleged error he quoted, and also errors of actual mistranslation, contending that the words "of God," in the 1st Epistle of St. John, c. 3, v. 16, should be rendered "of Christ," whereby the whole meaning of the sentence was altered. Other instances were quoted, among which was the rendering of the Hebrew word in the original "borrow," when the Israelites were represented borrowing goods of the Egyptians, the right rendering being "asked," which would take away the reproach of theft alleged by infidels. There was also a remarkable instance, in which he contended that the true rendering of the striking words, "I am that I am," was "I will that I will." He accused the translators not only of perpetrating errors through ignorance, but from a spirit of morbid hatred especially to the Vulgate, the old translation of St. Jerome. He proceeded to point out many differences of the Psalms, in Job and the Prophets, in which the English version was utterly different from the Hebrew, and the passages in St. Matthew and the Epistles opposed to the Greek. He enlarged very much upon the great extent of ignorance of the learned languages in the early part of the 17th century. Incidentally alluding to Lord Shaftesbury, he accused him of prejudicing this question, and expressed his surprise that that noble Lord should wish to see the people pay a blind reverence to our translation of the Scriptures, however inefficient that translation might be. The specific charges against that translation were that the marginal readings, which were preferable to the text, were not printed in the common editions; was often wrong so as to alter the sense; the text was cut up and disfigured, and the sense destroyed by the division into chapters and verses; there was such a want of uniformity that no one could rely upon the English word as an equivalent for the same original word where it occurred in other places, and therefore an English concordance was delusive as a guide to the scriptures; the poetry and prose portions were not distinguished; false readings and obsolete words and phrases abounded; ungrammatical and indecent expressions occurred; the order of the books both in the Old and new Testaments was defective; there were numerous mistranslations affecting religious questions on which learned men were now agreed, and which ought no longer to deface the Scriptures; and some parts of the Bible were so badly translated that they were not read by reason of their obscurity. He concluded by observing that all parties might in these days safely trust a public commission of learned men, selected for their known abilities in philological and biblical scholarship. The eyes of the world would be upon them and their work, and the criticism to which that work would be subjected would be a safeguard to all. The address, which is to be followed by two others, was listened to with great attention, and at its conclusion a vote of thanks was cordially given both to Mr. Black and the chairman.—[London Times, Dec. 5.

[A little common-sense, added to philogical and biblical scholarship, is "a thing devoutly to be wished" among the English who are bawling for a new translation of the Bible. Did they possess a good dose of that, they would soon perceive, that with the present translation of the "Blessed Book," they have a record of what has been—a glimmering of what's to come, which should inspire the honest heart with that Faith which leads to obedience to the pure and holy laws.[—ED.

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24, 1856.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported Post Office, Mail Steamer, and Deficiency Appropriation bills.

Mr. Phelps from the same Committee reported with amendments the Senate bill relative to foreign coinage, and the coinage of new cent pieces.

Mr. Phelps explained that his object was to withdraw from circulation all depreciated foreign coin, receiving Spanish quarter, eighth, and sixteenth dollar pieces at twenty, ten, and five cents. The Committee of Ways and Means propose that the President shall fix by proclamation the description of the new cent coin. The precedent was set in 1796.

Several members appealed to Mr. Phelps to move to refer the bill on the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but Mr. Phelps could not gratify them, saying, to do so would be sending it to the tomb of the Capulets.

The further consideration of the bill was then postponed for two weeks.

Mr. Herbert made an hour speech in reply to Mr. Denver on the subject of the California land patents.

Mr. Rice (Delegate from Minnesota) introduced a bill authorizing the people of that Territory to form a constitution and State government, preparatory to admission into the Union on a footing with the original States. Adjourned.

SENATE. Dec. 26.

On motion of Mr. Thompson, (N. J.) a motion was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to report whether more efficient means cannot be devised for the preservation of the lives of seamen and passengers wrecked on the coasts of New Jersey and Long Island; and also, whether relief should not be granted to the families of persons who lose their lives in endeavoring to rescue individuals from shipwreck.

Adjourned to Tuesday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed several private bills, and the Senate bill providing for the compulsory prepayment of postage on all transient printed matter. Adjourned till Tuesday.

SENATE. Dec. 30.

On motion of Mr. Weller, of California, the Committee on Territories was directed to inquire into the expediency of providing means for establishing and settling the boundary between California and Utah.

Ten thousand copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey was then ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Weller, a resolution was adopted calling on the President to communicate a statement of all payments and allowances which have been made, and of all claims disallowed General Scott, from the date he joined the army in Mexico to December, 1856; together with any correspondence on the subject.

Adjourned till Friday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House resumed the consideration of the President's annual message.

Mr. Washburne, of Ill., rose to make good his former assertion that the Democratic papers of that State, for the most part, did not publish the resolution of the Cincinnati Convention, endorsing General Pierce's administration; thus by this omission repudiating it. The Galena Courier and the Springfield Regester had admitted that they did not publish the resolution.

Messrs. Marshall and Harris, of Ill., took issue, denying that the Democracy of that State avoided the doctrines and positions presented by the Cincinnati Convention. The resolution endorsing President Pierce was not part of the platform. The Democratic State Convention passed one of similar import, which was published in all the Illinois Democratic papers.

The Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill being under consideration,

Mr. Haven, of N. Y., moved to strike out the appropriation for salaries to twenty-five consular pupils; and asked whether we are to have a consular school in which to educate them.

Mr. Pennington, of N. J., explained that consular pupils were merely clerks to consuls, whose salaries were insufficient to enable them to employ such assistants. They would, however, be trained to the business of consuls.

Mr. Quitman, of Miss., concurred with Mr. Haven. He had always thought it should be honest diplomacy, and not that of deceit, which exists in European countries.

Further debate ensued, involving the propriety of paying consular pupils, when the appropriation for their salaries was stricken out, and the bill passed.

Adjourned till Friday.

Arrival of the Columbia.

DURING our party on Thursday evening, we learned of the arrival of the Saints by this vessel. We were indeed sorry that they had not arrived a little sooner to have participated with their Brethren and Sisters of the New York Conference. They would have been truly welcome, as the Committee of Management had made every provision for their entertainment. More of them and of the party next week.

The Case of Dr. Bigler.

BUFFALO, Dec. 26, 1856.

The examination of Dr. Bigler, of Rochester, charged with manslaughter in killing Julia Rosenbaum and child, in the attempt to produce an abortion upon the former, commenced this morning before Coroner Nott. The case will probably continue through to-morrow. From letters found on the deceased it was ascertained that her name was Frederick Murr. Her parents reside at Rochester, and on arriving here this morning they said they had been ignorant of their daughter's whereabouts for several months past.

"Another Fashionable Abomination."

UNDER this title the Lancet says that the use of Belladonna is unblushingly advertised to "give brilliancy and power of facination to woman's eyes." It is a poison and a powerful alternative. But what of that? So is arsenic. Yet in Austria it is used internally to give ruddiness to woman's cheeks. "Fashion" is quite competent to compel her votaries to diet on Prussic acid, Belladonna, morphine, arsenic—anything. If she prescribed the fangs of rattlesnakes for the production of irresistible sighs, a hunt of these reptiles would ensue throughout North America which would extinguish the species. Belladonna is an article of the toilette. Very well. If we must, we must. Only "draw it mild," ye druggists.—[Albany Evening Journal.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

God made Man, Male and Female.

BY MISS PIGG.

Was man by sovereign wisdom e'er designed
To rule imperiously the female mind?
Though formed by heaven's decree at first to rule,
Still his linked partner's neither horse nor mule.
She has, like him, a pure immortal soul,
With passions, he by mildness must control;
She had with her fate by heaven decreed,
She, too, with him can with Jehovah plead.
For her the Saviour came as well as him,
His sufferings to them both salvation bring.
No harsh distinctions from his lips were heard,
Nor males than females, ever more preferred.
Whoe'er obeys his heavenly Father's will,
Are owned by him as sister, brother, still.
Then why should man usurp that power alone,
Who for the smallest sin could ne'er atone?
Methinks he should the sceptre mildly sway,
And own her aid along life's chequered way;
Thus she with gratitude her lord might bless,
And heaven their labors crown with good success;
While those around the God-like influence view,
Their footsteps trace, and heaven's high laws pursue.

REVERSED.

Think not, dear Sisters, I presume
The teacher't part to act or 'sume;
'Twas heaven, at first, pass'd the decree,
That friends and helpmates you should be
To man, whose fate enroll'd with thine,
Steers through the stormy waves of time.
He's many a festering wound to bear
In this lone world of grief and care;
Be ever prompt to ease the smart
That gathers round his thoughtful heart;
By constancy and kindness prove,
Your faithful, firm, ingenuous love.
Let sweet submission, heavenly grace,
In every act and word have place.
Remember, "Reverence" is your part,
'Twill shield from many a throb, your heart,
Smooth from the brow displeasure's frown,
And all your days with concord crown.
While heaven your happy state approves,
And blesses with increase of loves,
Ages to come will speak your fame,
And 'mongst the God's immortalize your name.

The Electric Telegraph Over the World.

Benjamin Franklin was a man of acquirements in advance of his age. Studious of the nature of lightning, and versed in the science of electricity as it was then known, it was he whose sagacity first detected their affinity, and who in 1752, first applied conductors to the protection of buildings; and his invention will be a constant safeguard to property to the end of time. He, too, took a prominent part in the war of Independence; he negotiated the treaty of alliance between the United Provinces and France which involved that country in an American and European war with England in 1778, and probably led remotely to the great revolution of 1789; he signed the treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain in 1783; and, first Minister from the new republic to the mother country, received from George the Third the emphatic assurance that, as he had been the last man in England who had acknowledged its independence, so also he would be the last man to dispute it. But Franklin died in 1790, long before the heats incidental to that struggle which freed his country had subsided, and very bitter feelings prevailed between the two countries during the latter years of his life. But what would the father of electrical science have said if he had known that there were children in the world which he was leaving who would live to see the day that all England rejoiced that such was the triumph of science that the salute which inaugurated the 4th of July in New York might be fired by English engineer officers in London?

Yet it is even so. In no great number of months the galvanic wire will connect England with the New World, and early in 1858 the electric current will carry a message or fire a gun across the Atlantic with a velocity that allows no applicable measure of time. Wonderful as the project is, it is no mere speculation; the thing has already been accomplished. Already submarine telegraphs, concentrated in London, traverse St. George's Channel to Dublin, the North Channel to Carrickfergus, the Straits of Dover to Calais and Ostend, and the North Sea from Orfordness to the Hague. Nor are other countries behind hand—the Little belt, the Great Belt, and the Sound are traversed by a line to Karlscrona, which connects Sweeden with the rest of Europe. France communicates with her Algerine Governor by a line which passes from Spezia to Cape Corso over Corsica and Sardinia to the neighborhood of Tunis, and thence to Algiers by land. Even the inhospitable Euxine has received the beneficent messenger, and many an anxious mind has been relieved by the telegraph from Balaklava to Varna; whilst preparations are being made to communicate in the same manner with Malta, Constantinople, Alexandria, Aden, and thence to Kurrachee, where it is to be connected with the Indian system.

The line which is to connect the New World with the Old is to commence at Cork; and along its proposed route to St. John's—a distance of one thousand six hundred and eighty miles—the bottom of the sea is a plateau of long continued bank, as discovered by Lieutenant Maury in 1853, and so eminently suited as the resting place of the submarine cable, that it has been called the telegraphic platform. It is of a tolerably uniform depth, not more than has already been successfully encountered during the greater part of its extent, though deeper near the Irish coast than the shores of Newfoundland, and about two or three miles in breadth. This bank is composed of a bed of the most minute possible shells, so small as to be scarcely distinguishable by the naked eye, and of such a delicate and beautiful structure—apparently kindred to those microscopic shells which forms some of our chalks and marbles—as to prove the complete stillness of the water at that depth. Indeed, it is well known that the disturbance caused by the waves even of the most violent storm, ceases at a depth comparatively trifling. St. John's is two or three days nearer England than Halifax; and now that a dangerous reef, called the Merlin Rock, is the narrow entrance to the harbor—eighteen feet below the surface at low water—has been skilfully removed by the order and at the expense of the company, the largest steamers in the world can with safety pass in and out of that land locked harbor, which possesses abundant facilities for coaling first class steamers. Crossing Newfoundland to Cape Ray, the cable is laid down across the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape North, whence, traversing Cape Breton Island, it is carried to Halifax, whence it distributes messages over the whole continent of North America.

Amongst the most remarkable events of the age in which we live will be the changes effected by this new agency of intercommunication. Rapidly as steam has bridged the Atlantic—however soon as we may expect a still greater rapidity of interchange of correspondence arising from the improved construction, and, to a certain degree, increased size of ocean steamers—still there will, some time or other, be reached a limit to the velocity with which these huge bodies can be moved—which limit, indeed, cannot be very far distant; and however great the rate of speed might be which science may hereafter command, it would still leave the great commercial world of America at a disadvantage as regards its trade compared with the nations of Europe.

The facilities which this line will afford to commerce in the rapid interchange of orders and information, the certainty it will give to mercantile calculations, the comfort it will bestow upon severed friends and relatives, the pacificatory effect it will have upon diplomatic relations, by making it possible to settle difficulties almost before they arise—at all events before they are known to exist—incalculable; but the area over which its influence will extend in North America may be measured by the fact that whilst at the end of 1852 the total length of electric wire in the United States amounted to 24,375 miles; in March, 1854, according to a report presented by Mr. Shaffner to the Telegraph Convention, the total length of electric telegraph was no less than 41,392 miles; and from that increase, of more than a thousand miles a month, we may fairly infer it now greatly exceeds that enormous estimate—the expenditure upon which has been $6,671,800, or about £1,400,000. The Electric Telegraph Company's system in the United Kingdom, at the termination of the half year ending June 30, 1854, comprised 26,988 miles of wire, and the number of messages transmitted during the previous six months, amounted to 372,474. A curious but convenient peculiarity in the transmission of messages will arise from the difference of longitude—New York time being about six hours behind London. It follows, according to the arrangement at present contemplated, that the messages which are forwarded from London from ten in the morning till four in the afternoon—our business hours—though they arrive instantaneously at the other side, do so, according to their time, between four and ten in the morning, and at their ten o'clock these replies until their four will reach this country between four and ten in the evening, leaving them the whole night for consideration or obtaining information before our hours of activity recommence, at ten in the morning. The cable will be itself 2500 miles long, to allow for slack, and will be divided into two lengths, each on board a separate vessel. The ships will meet half way, at a point previously fixed on, and having connected the two ends of the cable, will steam away, one towards Newfoundland, paying out the cable as they go, and interchanging signals all the way.—[London Post, Dec. 4.

The Testimonial Nuisance.

I have been so little in England of late years that I do not know whether the institution which I am about to describe is a Scotch peculiarity, or whether it exists on your side of the border; I mean what may be called the testimonial nuisance. There is hardly anybody left in this country who has not had a snuff-box, watch and chain, purse of sovereigns, teakettle, claret-jug, bookcase, gig, whip, saddle and bridle, pony, horse, cow, pig, dogcart, set of harness, timepiece, Matthew Henry's "Commentary on the Scriptures," load of meal, cart of potatoes, pig's face, German silver pencilcase, everlasting gold pen, pulpit gown and cassock, case of mathematical instruments, teatray, set of teacups, dozen of teaspoons, dozen of shirts, dozen of pocket handkerchiefs, or a dozen of flannel waistcoats, presented to him by a circle of friends and admirers, and the presentation chronicled at great length in the local newspaper. Country gentlemen, clergymen, railway guards, drivers of stage coaches, gamekeepers, shepherds, local postmasters, farmers, newspaper reporters, keepers of publichouses, schoolmasters, turnpike-gatekeepers, railway signalmen, stokers of coasting steamers, are among the people most frequently honored in this way. When a testimonial is presented to a man in the humbler walks of life it is usually followed by a supper, which the Whistlebinkie Gazette, never fails to record that the arrangements reflected the utmost credit on mine host of the Blue Boar; the evening was spent most harmoniously, Mr. Ronald M'Craken favoring the company with the favorite song, "Jenny dang the Weaver," and at a late hour all parties went home "happy to meet, sorry to part, and happy to meet again." Whenever a new minister comes to any parish, on the day of his induction he is presented with a superb pulpit gown (made by Messrs. Roderick, Doo & Co., our enterprising fellow-townsmen) and a pulpit Bible and Psalm book (purchased at the establishment of Mr. M'Lamrock, bookseller, 91 High street. On going away he receives a time-piece or silver salver (furnished, we understand, by Messrs. Waxey and Jollikin, chronometer-makers, Saltergate,) and, if a poor man, perhaps a purse of sovereigns (the purse made by the fair fingers of Miss Jemima M'Corkle, daughter of the much-esteemed surgeon of that name.) The handsome gift (we invariably learn) was presented in a few brief but pithy remarks by Mr. James M'William, farmer in Clough-Lochacher; and the reverend gentleman, who appeared much overcome by his feelings, made an affecting and suitable reply. Occasionally we find it recorded that the tenantry on the estate of Netherwoodie and Clanjamfry proceeded to the mansion-house, and presented Skipness Alexander Skipness, Esq., their esteemed landlord, with his portrait, drawn in the first style of art, by Cosmo Saunders, Esq., R. S. A. They likewise presented an elegant Cairngorm brooch to Mrs. Skipness; a whip to Master Sholto Skipness Skipness; and a humming-top to Master Reginald Comyne Skipness, the latter gentleman aged one year and eight months. Mr. Skipness, much affected (recipients of testimonials in this country are always much affected,) made a suitable reply. He felt his merits were greatly over-estimated. If, indeed, it were true that he had been the first to introduce into the country an improved breed of pigs, he had his reward in the whisperings of an approving conscience. Turnips had for years occupied much of his attention; nor had cheese passed without many serious thoughts. Onions and carrots, he might say, had rarely been absent from his mind. Still, much remained to be done. There was no limit to the fat which might be carried by the Clanjamfry breed of cattle; and, whatever might be the feeling of others, he, for one, would always connect the gimmers and hogs of this district with the future prosperity of the country. The tenantry were then entertained at the hospitable board of Netherwoodie, and left at a late hour, having spent an evening which will long be cherished as a green spot in memory's waste.—[Fraser's Magazine.

Dr. Livingston's Discoveries

Dr. Livingston arrived in London early on Saturday morning, Dec. 13, to meet Sir Roderick Murchison and other savans, in order to prepare corrected maps of Southern Africa for the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society this evening. It is singular, that the Doctor has found the old maps of Africa more accurate than the modern ones. He has found a large portion of that space which is represented by a blank in South African maps to consist of fertile countries inhabited by populous tribes, and intersected by large rivers. It is most important to observe, that the farther he travelled into the interior of Africa, the more civilized and numerous he found the inhabitants. They were less ferocious and suspicious, had better and more settled forms of government, and more wants than the tribes which lived nearer the sea-coasts. He met with the tribes in the interior who practised innoculation, and knew the medicinal virtues of quinine, although they did not administer it in the concentrated form as prepared in Europe; and moreover they had a tradition of Noah's deluge. They traded in ivory and gold, which were sold by one tribe to another until those articles reached Europeans on the sea-coast. The number of large animals of the chase which Dr. Livingston met with between the eighth and twenty-second degrees of south latitude, was perfectly marvellous. They find their subsistence upon extensive plains of coarse herbage, which, together with the abundant water mellons, enables both man and beast to travel in Africa. Many tracts in that country, however, cannot be traversed on account of insects that sting beasts of burden to madness. The chief documents which Dr. Livingston had prepared relative to his travels and discoveries he unfortunately lost while crossing an African river, in which also he nearly lost his life; but he has stores of memoranda of the utmost interest as to the ethnology, natural history, philology, geography and geology of the African continent.

New Postage Law.

Prepayment on all Transient Printed Matter Compulsory.

The Postmaster General has made the following regulations to carry out the provisions of the act just passed, requiring prepayment of postage on all transient printed matter:

1. Books not weighing over four pounds may be sent in the mail, prepaid by postage stamps at one cent an ounce any distance in the United States under three thousand miles, and at two cents an ounce over three thousand miles, provided they are put up without cover or wrapper, or in cover or wrapper open at the ends or sides, so that their character may be determined without removing the wrapper.

2. Unsealed circulars, advertisements, business cards, transient newspapers, and every other article of transient printed matter (except books,) not weighing over three ounces, sent in the mail to any part of the United States, are chargeable with one cent postage each, to be prepaid by postage stamps. Where more than one circular is printed on a sheet, or a circular and letter, each must be charged with a single rate. This applies to lottery and other kindred sheets assuming the form and name of newspapers; and the miscellaneous matter in such sheets must be charged with one rate. A business card on an unsealed envelope of a circular subjects the entire packet to letter postage. Any transient matter, like a circular or handbill, enclosed in or with a periodical or newspaper sent to a subscriber, or to any other person, subjects the whole package to letter postage; and whenever subject to letter postage, from being sealed, or from any cause whatever, all printed matter, without exception, must be prepaid, or excluded from the mail. It is the duty of the Postmaster at the mailing office, as well as at the office of delivery, carefully to examine all printed matter, in order to see that it is charged with the proper rate of postage, and to detect fraud. At offices where postage stamps cannot be procured, Postmasters are authorized to receive money in prepayment of postage on transient matter; but they should be careful to keep a supply of stamps on hand.

Arrival of Mormons.

The ship Columbia, Capt. Hutchinson, arrived at this port on Thursday, from Bristol, Eng., having on board a party of Mormons—consisting of 159 adults, 54 children and 9 infants, one born on the passage; making in all, 222 souls. They left Bristol the 18th of November, and are now at Castle Garden, under the charge of Mr. John Williams, President of the Bristol Branch. No deaths occurred on the passage, and baring sea-sickness but one person was ill. One half of the adults are married, and several of them are over 70 years of age. Some of these Mormons have belonged to the community since it was established in England, over fifteen years ago, and the destination of most of them is Salt Lake City. The President of the New York Branch—Mr. Wm. H. Miles, received them when they landed. There are many trades represented among the emigrants, but they are mostly miners and shepherds, and have no idle members about them. Some of them came from Wales, but a majority from Bristol, where they left over two thousand Brethren who are making preparations to come out. The emigrants cooked their own victuals aboard, had religious exercises, and behaved with decorum. The captain frequently called them upon deck to hear them sing. Owing to the high price of freight across the plains, they only brought about two thousand two hundred pounds of baggage. Nearly all of them have money enough to take them west, and some are in comfortable circumstances. Foreign branches have to present their cirtificates to the New York branch, and they are received into the Church. It will cost them $13 each to get to Iowa, which is one thousand three hundred and sixty miles from Salt Lake; and $17 charges, and $15 each for provisions will take them to their destination. Bluff City and Florence, across the river, are the outfitting points, and from there they travel with hand-carts and other convenience they find ready. The most of the new arrivals leave New York to-day, and will start from Iowa for Salt Lake in the spring. A few of them go to other places, and there is a President appointed to take charge of each party. The entire party at Castle Garden looked healthy and robust, and appeared to be very cheerful. The children romping about Castle Garden, some eating, some lying on the benches and baggage, and some chatting, made the scene interesting and the inquiries of our reporter, were answered good naturedly and promptly by the leader of the party, who intends accompanying his cargo across the wilderness. Friday morning the company was visited by Parsons Taylor, George A. Smith and Parley P. Pratt, leading Mormons, at present living in this city. After shaking hands all around, and and kissing some of the little folks, the visitors gathered the Saints about them, when Parson Taylor, a tall, grey-haired man, made a speech, in which he congratulated them on having escaped the perils of the deep, and gave them some counsel as to their future conduct. He was sorry they had not arrived in season to participate in the jubilee at his house last evening. Some of them, he said, would go to St. Louis, some to Cincinnati, and some would remain in this city. In the spring they would be remitted, and all start on their pilgrimage to the Promised Land. He wanted they should all gather round their "Presidents of Districts," and give in an account of their means, where they had friends, and where they wanted to go, &c. If any were too poor to aid themselves, they would be quartered for the time in the houses of their Brethren here, and must find employment as soon as possible. It was desirable all should make their arrangements as soon as they could, and then he would tell them what to do, and get them away.

The men reverently uncovered their heads during the address, and the two other parsons sat and sleek, sat and smiled approval. The whole group pressed enthusiastically around their leaders, evidently regarding them as little short of angels.—[New York Morning Express, Jan. 3d.

Serious Loss of Life and Property on the English Coast.

The accounts received by the Canada furnish a sad list of wrecks and casualties during the late heavy gales on the English coast. In the more western portion of the English Channel, on the 8th and 9th a terrific gale raged from S. S. W., with a tremendous sea. Toward the evening of the latter day it increased to a hurricane, the sea making a complete breach over the ships moored in the roadsteads. Near Falmouth, a fine bark, named the Columbus, Captain Hayes, was driven ashore at St. Mawes Castle, and became a total loss. Similar bad weather appears to have been experienced all along the Channel. A short distance to the westward of Portland, at Channel Beach, on Tuesday afternoon, a Dutch bark, laden with rice, was carried ashore by the gale, and melancholy to add, four of the crew perished. The ship was from Akyab, but her name could not be ascertained. The Welsh coast suffered severely from the storm. The fatal wreck of the Louisa Munro, Capt. Richardson, from Malta to Cardiff, and the loss of the master, mate and seven of the seamen on the Marstons Sand, near Milford, has already been briefly stated. The wreck of a schooner was passed some twelve or fourteen miles to the southward of Tusker, and it is feared the crew have perished. The Irish packets running from Liverpool, Cork and Plymouth had most fearful passages. The Troubadour, from Milford to Cork, had a marvelous escape. She was driven some distance up the St. George's Channel, and, having run short of fuel, consumed nearly one hundred head of swine, so as to keep up steam, and enable the ship's head being kept to sea to weather out the gale. She at length succeeded in reaching Kingstown, with a large number of dead cattle on board. In Caermarthen Bay, a French brigantine, the Clemence, in ballast, for Cardiff, was driven ashore during the hight of the gale. A collision took place between the brig Beecher Stowe, bound for London from Alexandria, with the Condor schooner, belonging to Hamburg, some one hundred miles west of Rilly. It is feared that the Condor went down, and that two only of the crew were preserved. The gales were very severe in their consequences on the northeast coast. Several vessels were driven on the rocks at Redear. Among them were the Fear Not schooner from Dunkirk, Hoffnung from the Humber, John and Eliza from London, Betsey of Yarmouth the sloop Nancy from Scarborough, and the French schooner Augustine. The two latter sunk; the crews were happily saved. At the mouth of the Tyne, the Earl Talbot from London and the Free Briton were driven on the rocks.

The accounts from the Irish coast also speak of much havoc having been occasioned by the gales. Off Youghal a fatal loss is reported to have happened, but the name of the ill-fated ship had not been ascertained when this was dispatched.

Improvement on High-Pressure Engines.

An important improvement in the construction of the high-pressure non-condensing engine has been effected by Mr. Duff, of the Oakbank Engine Works, of this city. It consists of two cylinders, instead of one, as in the ordinary form of construction. The steam from the smaller of the two cylinders, before passing into the atmosphere, exhausts itself into the second cylinder, which is three times the capacity of the first. The effect is that the steam gives three-fourths additional power as contrasted with the same volume of steam acting through the former or single cylinder engine—in proof of which the improved engine, with a cylinder of only 8 inches diameter, is doing the work with greater facility than the single cylinder engine, which has one of ten inches diameter, the length of stroke and pressure of steam in both being the same. But there is in addition this most material distinction, that the improved or double cylinder engine effects a saving in fuel of about 45 per cent. So far as Mr. Duff is aware, no engine of the same peculiar form has yet been constructed. This engine is now in daily operation at Mr. Duff's works, where it has been visited by several interested in such matters, who have expressed their warm approbation of the result.—[Glasgow Herald.

The honor of having first projected a submarine telegraphic line across the Atlantic Ocean belongs exclusively to General Horatio Hubbel, of Philadelphia. In a memorial presented to Congress, eight years ago, in January, 1849, by Jefferson Davis, General Hubbel asked government aid for the enterprise. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce. The reference was moved to the Hon. Jefferson Davis, who remarked that the world was not yet prepared for this project, but might be soon.

It is stated that Dr. Franklin was aware of the existence of valuable copper mines on Lake Superior, having had access in Paris to the charts of French surveyors; and when he drew the treaty with England, he ran the line through that lake so as to include the best mineral lands, saying to a friend that this act would yet be regarded as the best service he had done his country, for it would enable the United States to send copper to Europe at a cost cheaper than that taken from the European mines.

An Ecclesiastical Curiosity.—A correspondent sends us (Morning Star) the following copy of a document in Westchester Cathedral: "To work done—Soldering and repairing St. Joseph, 8d.; cleaning and ornamenting Holy Ghost, 6d.; repairing the Virgin Mary, before and behind, and making a new child, 4s. 8d.; screwing a nose on the Devil, putting a new horn on his head, and glueing a piece on his tail, 5s. 6d.; total, 11s. 4d."

Nearly all brave men have been of a finely organized and therefore nervous temperament. Julius Cæsar was nervous, so was Bonaparte, so was Nelson. The Duke of Wellington saw a man turn pale as he marched up to a battery. "There," he said, "is a brave man, he knows his danger and faces it."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 10, 1857.

Kansas, Polygamy and Republicanism.

WE are frequently amused at the attempts of the State Legislatures, and of Congress, to define polygamy and its bearings upon the community. All parties are evidently puzzled to know what to do with this question. If Mormonism could be considered as an abstract question and legislative action upon it would have no bearing upon others, then indeed would it be speedily dealt with in a very summary manner, and the question of right or wrong, legal or illegal, would have very little to do with it. As it is, however, it becomes a very grave question to know how we shall dispose of it; for very unfortunately the Mormons, notwithstanding their presumed delusion, happen to be human beings; furthermore, they form a part of that very essential part of community called "The People," and being a portion of the people of the United States they legally enjoy, in common with others, certain inalienable rights and privileges, and however much it is to be lamented and deplored that no special test act or religious qualifications should be required to prepare a man for office, or citizenship, there is nothing more evident than this one fact, that there is a lamentable omission in relation to this very subject, and with all the discrimination of the framers of the Constitution, and notwithstanding the rigid test and scrutiny to which it was subjected, it would seem that its framers lacked the prophetic discernment to discover that such an awful heresy as Mormonism would arise. It is certainly a pity; for could they only have discovered that one hundred thousand citizens, of the United States, could have been so far deluded as to believe that the doctrines taught by Jesus and his apostles eighteen hundred years ago were true to-day, and that the ordinances and officers of the church ought to be the same as then; or could they have foreseen that so many people would have been so far sunk, degraded and corrupted, as to believe in the practices of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, David and Solomon, unquestionably they would have made some provision for their punishment, or their excision at least from the body politic: but as they did not foresee that so vile an heresy would arise, we are obliged to look upon the Mormons as citizens. It is true, that we have sometimes used the "higher," Christian "law," and banished, whipped and imprisoned them. It is true that we have, time and time again, manifested a godly Christian zeal in their extermination; that we have robbed them of millions of dollars worth of property, out of pure, disinterested benevolence, having an eye to their good, to that of community in general, and to the glory of God; but then this was simply a Christian act, a duty that we owed to the church, to God, and to our souls; besides, there was some chance of our becoming celebrated for our piety, as Peter the Hermit, in his crusades, against the ungodly of former times. The question, however, now assumes another shape entirely; it comes gravely before us, in the shape of citizenship, and of political constitutional rights; and notwithstanding our former pious acts, Mormonism is still a stern, living, sober fact. The young child whose life was diligently sought in former days has actually passed through his boyhood, and is now a hale, lively, healthy, robust, athletic man, and worse than all, a brusque hardy mountaineer, who struts about in his mountain home in a devil-may-care sort of a manner, assuming all the airs and swagger of a real Simon-pure Jonathan, with pantaloons lengthened a little, his corposity a little more developed, and his phiz more rotund and healthy, a la mode Young America.

Now, if it was not that our laws would affect others, we could very soon dispose of the Mormons; but the very moment we legislate for them (as the Mormons are unfortunately citizens), the same laws will have an equal bearing upon other citizens, and they won't stand it. Now, what shall we do? shall we disfranchise them? Unfortunately we have not the power. Shall we pass laws about religion? There we are equally fast. Shall we legislate in Congress for them? This we would gladly do, but we can't. Shall we pass a law punishing polygamy? This would be ex-post facto, if we had the power. And, worse than all, the Mormons won't even pass a law themselves legalizing polygamy, so that we might annul it in Congress and manifest our zeal to our constituents. We are in a regular quandary, and this mountain Jonathan, with his hands in his breeches pockets, looks on, rather quizzically, at our puerile attempts, and says, "Dau tell!" and, shaking his head, drawls out, "No, yeou don't, old hoss!"

The Republicans, out of pure religion, thinking to entrap the ministers and the pious throughout the land in their meshes, "introduced a clause of excision;" but even that was no go; somehow religion and politics don't mix in this land; it is like mixing oil and water; besides, religion sits so loosely that it can very easily be dispensed with, like an old threadbare garment, in case of necessity. The Tribune, and many of the smaller fry, would, no doubt, have liked to have got up another crusade against the Mormons; but it is no go—a mere flash in the pan. That immaculate editor now wipes his mouth with his sleeve, and says "we meant nothing;" of course not; his tirade and misrepresentations were all very innocent; it is simply impossible that so unerring a philosopher could do anything wrong.

We are led to the above remarks from the eternal whining, grunting, growling, and intermeddling of politicians with that which is none of their business; and if Congress and the State Legislatures would pass one simple law, it would save them an incalculable deal of trouble—"Be it enacted, &c., That every member of this House shall be compelled to mind his own business, under the penalty of fifty cents for each offence."

The following is a fair sample of many of the proceedings of State Legislatures and of Congress, which we extract from the correspondence of the Chicago Democrate Press—Iowa Legislature, Iowa City, December 20, 1856:

"The debate on the Kansas resolutions closed to-day. It has taken a very wide range, and the questions involved were ably discussed on both sides.

"That part of Mr. Kirkwood's amendment relating to polygamy, elicited a warm discussion, and the 'latter day saints' had their doctrine closely analyzed and roughly handled.

"Mr. K. said that progress was the watchword of the Democratic party. He traced the history of the legislation in regard to the Territories, down to the year 1852, and demonstrated the fact that Congress had till that time recognized and exercised the power of repealing all such laws passed by the Territorial Legislature, as they chose. The doctrine of squatter sovereignty in the Territories was Democratic 'progress' in politics, and the doctrine of polygamy, which was preached by Joseph Smith, and is now promulgated by Brigham Young and practiced by the settlers of Utah, is the corresponding 'progress' in theology."

Of course, Congress can do no wrong any more than the King; yet it unfortunately happens that the framers of the Constitution thought they could, and appointed a Supreme Court to test their acts, and that this Supreme Court has availed itself of this power in several instances. What became of the bankrupt law when tested by it? And if we are not wrongly informed, the Missouri Compromise law has fallen in the same way. Yes, but Congress have for a long time exercised the power of repealing all such laws passed by the Territorial Legislature as they chose. So did the King of England towards the Colonies for years and years. Will Mr. K. say that he was wrong in doing it?

"Mr. Test (the Senator from Pottawattomie) said it could not be proved that polygamy existed in Utah, and, if it did, the same things were done in Iowa as in Utah, only in a more private and secret manner. The Mormons were married to but one wife, they were sealed to the others, and those to whom they were sealed were not considered their legal wives."

We are much obliged to Mr. Test for his good feelings and defence, but we don't want any quibbling. We candidly acknowledge that the Utonians are polygamists, and that polygamy is practiced in Utah, and that those who are sealed to men are their legal wives, and we stand prepared to meet the issue honestly and above board. Although we very much admire Mr. Test's honesty in acknowledging what is done amongst them, we cannot admit that our practices are like theirs, and with all deference to some of the pious ones, we hope we are not so far fallen or degraded. We believe in polygamy, it is true, but we do not believe in the institution of prostitution. There are many points of difference. In Utah, they marry all their wives; here they marry one wife, and have numerous prostitutes. In Utah, they make vows to all their wives, and keep them; here they make a vow before God and man to cleave to one woman, "and to her only," and then break that vow, acknowledging her before the public, and going with others, as Mr. Test says, in "a private and secret manner," thus adding perjury to adultery. In Utah, a man cleaves to his own wives; here the institution of prostitution admits of each man having his wife, and prostitutes being public property. In Utah, a man sustains all his wives and children; here he sustains one wife; gives or withholds what he pleases to his prostitutes, and lets the latter take care of his children, or peradventure, kicks them from his door or sends them to a foundling hospital. In Utah, all the women are honorable, all being wives; here, some are wives and others prostitutes. The Christian institution of prostution is so humiliating, infamous, heartless and degrading in all its bearings, that we utterly repudiate it. No, Mr. Test. You are not like the Mormons. The Mormons are not yet so far degraded as to be sunk to the level of your social standard.

"Mr. Kirkwood replied that all our commentators on common law called marriage a domestic institution. Polygamy is marriage, therefore polygamy is a domestic institution. He read from an official report made to the President of the United States, by certain territorial officers formerly in Utah, showing that polygamy was openly and boldly practiced there, and recognized as one of their institutions by the citizens of that Territory, and if the Democratic members were in favor of permitting the people of Utah to cherish this as one of their institutions, and come into the Union with it, he wanted them to say so on the record, and, if not, he wanted their negation equally on the record. This is soon to become a practical question, and as it is one in which Iowa is interested, our Senators in Congress should be instructed in relation to it. It was in a fair way to become as much of an institution as slavery. It was growing up in the same way. Slavery was not recognized by law when introduced into the country. At first it was looked upon with apprehension, then tolerated, and finally established and protected by law, till in some parts of the country it had become interwoven with the whole net-work of society. Just so is it with polygamy, and we should embrace the first opportunity to check it."

That is right, Mr. Kirkwood; have your vote on this question recorded. His reverence will applaud you for it, the pious will esteem you, and it may be the means of securing your election at some future time—put down the name and vote.

"Mr. Houston said polygamy is the 'higher law' of Utah; it is not recognized as an institution of that Territory or supported by law; it is a part of their religious system, and if it is to be corrected, we must send missionaries there to do it, and not legislate upon it. This amendment brings up an abstract question with which we should have nothing to do."

That's the doctrine. Mr. Houston, send out missionaries; Utah opens a vast field for missionary enterprise; let us have some moral suasion, some reason and common sense, if there is any, and not eternally the old saw:

"Our old horse, he crossed the road,
Because he crossed the road, sir;
And the reason why he crossed the road,
Was because he crossed the road, sir.
The Mormons, they are all deceived,
Because they are deceived, sir;
And the reason why they are deceived,
Is because they are deceived, sir."

Send out a good stock of bibles, and let them be accompanied by your smartest missionaries: who knows what good things they may do!

The Albany Atlas and the New York Tribune fencing over Utah's Admission into the Union.

TO HELP secure the election of Col. Fremont, the "Black" Republican journals, for months preceding the fourth of November, displayed great enthusiasm in warming up the zeal of the pious with the most outrageous and incredible stories against the Mormons in Utah. Insignificant as the far off Utonians were always said to be, they were, nevertheless, favored with special notice at the Philadelphia Convention, resulting in a plank of the Black republican platform being specially and piously devoted to their interests. No small concern was soon afterwards manifested by many an old lady in pants for the welfare of the fair sex in general, and those in Utah in particular. Of course, editors, who hoped for some of the cheese parings from the "Pathfinder's" table, became all of a sudden very religious. Papers that before had been strongly marked with socialism, communism, scepticism and every other ism but trueism, came out in a new style and brushed off the names of Owen, Cabet, Fourier and Payne for Jesus Christ, Paul, Peter and John. So great and sudden was the change that some of their cotemporaries had considerable difficulty to recognise the voice of their old friends and associates. A certain gentleman famous for dirty boots, uncombed hair, unbrushed coat, and unwashed face, was every day expected to pass along with the cowl, sandals and beads. Though we speak of facts near home here we presume the changes in the tone of the press during the campaign must have been as marked elsewhere. The fact is, any decent honorable man would never have stooped to do the dirty work that was done then against the Mormons without wishing the public to look upon his words and actions as those of a Christian, and not as a simple member of the human family. "Correspondence from Utah," "Female life among the Mormons," lectures, essays, banners in processions, with unpatriotic, contemptible, vulgar inscriptions about Utah were, with a host of other lying humbuggery and Tom foolery, brought to do their part in the grand struggle between Democracy and fanatical Sectionalism. During the great bustle, confusion and excitement of the campaign we did not expect that the friends of the Union would denounce the fanatical, ignorant firebrands that dubbed themselves patriots and played such fantastic tricks, neither did we anticipate that the subject of Utah's admission as a State would be treated soberly by either party, but we certainly looked forward to a day of reckoning shortly after the election. That day is nearing. We have noticed lately in different quarters a moving in that direction, and as the movement is already at our doors we publish the following from the Tribune for the edification of our readers, and to afford us opportunity of joining in the controversy:—

"The Albany Atlas has a passion for putting words into the mouth of The Tribune which we would gladly abate. We claim the right to state our own views and define our own positions. If the Atlas wishes to assail any doctrine as ours, we demand that it quote our language and state its objections thereto. In a discussion of our national policy with regard to Mormonism, it makes the following most unjustifiable statement:

'The Pharisees, with Beecher, Greeley & Co. at the head of them, propose to exclude any State from the Confederacy which refuses to persecute the Mormons, after the fashion of the Border Ruffians of Missouri and the mob of Illinois; for Beecher, Greeley & Co. are not jealous, but so holy that they cannot live in a confederacy, any one of whose members can be guilty of tolerance to wickedness like this. The zeal with which these men and their followers rush to the solution of this question, by the expedient of a test of conformity, or a process of exclusion, shows how

'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'

Now, the Tribune has never for one moment advocated or justified any persecution of the Mormons, and has never missed a fair opportunity to condemn the outrages to which they were subjected in Missouri and Illinois. Having deliberately chosen Utah as their city of refuge, we trust they will there be left unmolested. They have appropriated to their own use a large tract of fertile public land, and we propose to let them retain and enjoy it. They are protected from savage incursions and forays by the terror and arms of the United States. They have a Governor and Judiciary provided at the National cost. They are lightly taxed, and bear but an imperceptible fraction of the public burdens. We propose not merely to leave them, but to protect them in the enjoyment of all these blessings until experience shall have thoroughly cured them of their hankering for the twin vices, Polygamy and Slavery. That point attained, we shall be ready to urge the admission of Utah as a State—and not till then. Is this persecution? How does it resemble the lawless, murderous outrages, by means of which they were successively expelled from Missouri and Illinois?

Slavery was legally established in most of the States before and when we became a nation. Necessity constrained the union of the colonies, in order that they might make effectual head against royal usurpation. No such exigency now constrains us to add Polygamy to the number of vicious 'institutions' which the union is required to protect. We propose, therefore, to stand clear of any national endorsement of that abomination. We cannot invite Utah to elect Senators and Representatives whom our Courts would be compelled to consign to our State Prison for Bigamy or Adultery if they should, with their families, pass through our State on their way to the Federal Metropolis. We have no wish to persecute the Mormon bigamists, but we plead for liberty to refrain from fraternizing with them. We are not ready to see Brigham Young or Parley Pratt sent to London as an ambassador, and we protest against an unreal or illusory Admission. If practical Mormonism is to be a bar to Federal office, then it should be a bar to State Admission.—N. Y. Tribune, Jan. 8th.

We should be sorry to withhold from the Tribune any justly earned praise for whatever it may have published condemnatory of the outrages to which the Mormons were subjected in Missouri and Illinois, we, therefore, offer our thanks for the past, but in spite of its protestations to the charges of the Atlas and our best wish to believe in Horace's desire for fair play and equal rights to the Mormons in Missouri and Illinois, we cannot discover much difference between the persecution of former years and the opposition at the present time. The Missourians and Illinoians did certainly burn houses, destroy farms, shoot down cattle, murder men, women and helpless children, and all these things have, as certainly not been done by the Black republicans by and through the influence of the Tribune and papers of that school—but why? Simply because it was not so convenient to reach the Mormons in 1856 as it was in 1838 in Missouri, and 1844 in Illinois. If the will to injure the Mormons in Utah is to be judged by the language of the republican campaign journals in general, the Mormons have only to congratulate themselves on the advantages of dreary plains and rugged mountains intervening between their peaceful valleys and the United States. In addition to the endorsement of the Philadelphia platform, the Tribune on its own account has not failed to publish the most vile calumnies against Utah under the guise of Utah correspondence, and has likewise republished from other journals—sources that the Tribune would never accept as respectable when arrrayed against itself. Furthermore when replies have been sent to that office they have never appeared in the columns of that paper.

The Tribune very magnanimously says:—

"Having deliberately chosen Utah as their city of refuge, we trust they will there be left unmolested. They have appropriated to their own use a large tract of fertile public land, and we propose to let them retain and enjoy it. They are protected from savage incursions and forays by the terror and arms of the United States. They have a Governor and Judiciary provided at the National cost. They are lightly taxed, and bear but an imperceptible fraction of the public burdens. We propose not merely to leave them, but to protect them in the enjoyment of all these blessings until experience shall have thoroughly cured them of their hankering for the twin vices, Polygamy and Slavery. That point attained, we shall be ready to urge the admission of Utah as a State—and not till then."

The real meaning of the above is simply: The Mormons don't believe as we believe in religion, we shall therefore send them whom we choose for officers and niggle them within an inch of their life. "Is this persecution? How does it resemble the lawless, murderous outrages, by means of which they were successively expelled from Missouri and Illinois?" The resemblance, Mr. Greeley, is nearer than perhaps, you apprehend. The murderous outrages were the end of the tragedy, but it commenced by the unbridled lying press, circulating all manner of falsehoods against the Mormons, precisely as the campaign journals did during the election. The murders began when the Mormons tried to vote. No Mormons were murdered during the late election, of course not, because collectively they had no vote. Mr. Greeley says there is no resemblance between his course towards the Mormons and that of the Illinoians; but we say there is, and again there is not. We have shown some resemblance, now we shall show where it fails—their former enemies said you have votes, but shall not go to the ballot box till you think as we think; their present enemies say you have no vote in a Territorial capacity, and we shall keep you there till you think as we think. Can the philosopher of the Tribune discover the difference? Circumstances, Mr. Greeley, think of them. If the Tribune and that school cannot see the resemblance between the present and past opposition to the Mormons, the latter can see it, and as the shoe pinches them alone they are the best judges. The philosopher will do well to ponder over the fact, and take a lesson from the following:—

"And now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone, for if this counsel or this work be of men it will come to naught, but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it."—[Acts 5, chap. 38, part 390.

The wholesome advice of Gamaliel to the Jews, contained in the above language, is peculiarly applicable to Northern politicians of the present day, and even to some in the South.

One "plank" in the Black Republican Platform, is a vow of eternal hostility against Slavery and Polygamy, "twin relics of barbarism," as they allege. We once before, at the commencement of our editorial career, denounced any attempt on the part of Southern men to enter this crusade against the Mormons. It is a snare set for you by the Model Reformers; these men who make christians by legal enactments. As we deny their right to be the judges for us, as touching the institution of slavery, so we must abstain from attempting to coerce others in matters of religion or morals.

Aside from the hold it gives the abolitionists on us, and the fact that we have no constitutional right to interfere in the local affairs of Utah, the lesson taught in "our text" is a wholesome one for the evil, if it be one; for if it be of men, it will surely eradicate itself.—[Squatter Sovereign, Dec. 16.

The New Year.

1857 was ushered into its place in the calendar of Time, in this city at least, with the usual drunkenness and rowdyism that characterizes great times in "Christian" countries. We are not expected to chronicle the wickedness of old Babylon in her declining years for which we are greatly thankful. We are sick enough now when obliged to scan other journals and see there the awful degradation, corruption and beastliness that pervades the civilized world, but had we to visit the scenes of revelry, the dens of infamy, the courts of justice, and watch, ponder over and write, our case would be worse. Modern Christianity is plumed with being the great, the universal civilizer of mankind, but facts, show that the heathen who have never come in contact with the white civilizers, are by nature possessed of qualities infinitely superior to those manifested by the bulk of Christians at home. Dr. Livingstone, the great African traveller, explorer and missionary, among his first addresses to the English last month, innocently publishes the fact that even the woolly-headed descendants of Ham, in the interior of Africa, are living at peace, are kind and amiable in their disposition; while those who live on the borders of the sea, where they have come in contact with so-called civilized Christians, are brutal and savage. Nice facts to ponder over during the year—go at it.

Social Party at New York.

ABOUT 400 Saints of the New York Conference met in a social capacity at their Hall, in Broome street, on the evening of New Year's day. Presidents J. Taylor, P. P. Pratt and George A. Smith were present.

Judge Appleby presided, assisted by Presidents George J. Taylor and Wm. H. Miles.

At five o'clock, P. M., the audience were called to order, and the entertainment of the evening began by singing the hymn, "Softly beams the sacred dawning."

President Pratt engaged in prayer, invoking the blessing of God on all who had come for the purpose of being entertained or contributing to the entertainment of others, and asking the guidance of His spirit in all that might be done.

President J. Taylor gave a very appropriate address for the occasion, which put every body in good humor to start with.

The songs and recitations in the following programme were well executed:

TOASTS BY W. I. APPLENY.

Utah—The fair infant daughter of Uncle Sam; may she soon become a beautiful woman, her name be called Deseret, and her officers, and rulers be of her own offspring and choosing.

The daughters of Utah—Renowned for their virtue, industry, and intelligence; bright stars in the galaxy of the Kingdom of God, may they continue to increase in light and intelligence, and multiply little stars to lighten up this dark globe, and many others also with their glory.

Great Salt Lake City—A city in the tops of the mountains—a beacon to the world—her citizens nearer heaven by altitude and good works, than any other city in christendom, may she continue to increase in power, wisdom and influence, until nations afar off shall hear of her glory, and desire to partake of her fame.

The Ladies—Saints and daughters of the Most High, who have graced us with their company this evening, may they continue to grace, and cheer us with their presence through this dark and dreary world, and add to our glory and exaltation in the world to come.

Duet, by the Brothers Morris.

Hymn, by the congregation.

RECESS.

Song—"The Seer, The Seer," by Prest. Taylor.

Song, by Sister Wood.

Address by Prest. P. P. Pratt.

Address by Prest. G. A. Smith.

Address by Prest. J. Taylor.

The refreshments of cake, fruit, confectionary and pure sparkling water were abundant, most satisfactory and very politely served by Judge Dulin and numerous assistants. The committee of management ably discharged their duties and we believe to the entire satisfaction of all present. The Saints and their friends seemed to enjoy themselves richly, and so far as we may judge, the order, harmony, and good feeling of the social party left nothing to be desired.

Our Visitors.

Judge Appleby preached at the Saints' Hall on Sunday afternoon. Prest. J. Taylor, gave a short address in the evening to the Saints on honesty and uprightness, exhorting them to live their religion though they might suffer loss by their relationship with others in business, whose study was lying and deception. Prest. P. P. Pratt followed, and spoke at considerable length on the opposition to Mormonism, arising more from the wickedness of its opponents than from their conviction of its untruthfulness; illustrating his position by reference to the cruel massacre of the children of Judea by the order of Herod, likewise the persecution of ancient apostles by the professedly pious. His address and exhortations to the Saints to live righteously and to keep themselves unspotted from the corruptions of the world, will long be remembered by those who heard him.

Christmas Social Party.

ELD. HENRY J. HUDSON has forwarded us a report of a social party of the Saints, held at Alton, Ill., on Christmas, Bishop Brindly presiding. The songs, recitations and dialogues were excellent and well executed. The Saints and their friends enjoyed themselves highly, observed excellent order and finished up with the merry dance. There is a time for everything—Christmas comes only once a year.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Sheriff Jones, of Kansas notoriety, has resigned and another southerner appointed his successor. Gov. Geary had opposed Mr. Jones in some of his measures against the Free State prisoners, and Mr. J. from that and other opposition threw up the authority he has held in an interesting period of Kansas history.

The inhabitants of Brooklyn, L. I., presented on New Year's eve, their worthy Mayor, Hon. Geo. Hall, with a house and lot, as a token of their high appreciation of his undefatigable exertions to save them from the yellow fever that was raging in the outskirts of that city last summer. While that epidemic threatened to advance and fear was depicted on the countenances of the citizens of Brooklyn, Mayor Hall showed himself a brave and good man worthy of the confidence of his fellow citizens. John Cammeyer, Esq., who assisted him was likewise presented with some silver plate.

Mr. Huntington, the Wall street broker, and forger, left the Tombs for Sing Sing on Friday. Several of his friends and acquaintences were outside to witness his departure, and were seemingly much touched with the change in his circumstances. He seemed little concerned and enjoyed his cigar, shook hands with several of the keepers and wished the "boys good by." Whether he may feel or not his position it cannot fail to be an excellent lesson to the community in general and Wall street usurers in particular.

Mr. King was duly installed Governor of this State on the 1st. Jan., at Albany. In accordance with previous arrangement, the Burgesses Corps with full ranks, acted as escort to the Governor from his quarters at Congress Hall. At 12 o'clock precisely the escort moved to the Capitol. There was a large throng in attendance, and the galleries, lobbies and floor of the Assembly Chamber were compactly filled by those desirous of witnessing the impressive ceremony.

Captain Hartstein and his companions who took out the Resolute to England, are shortly expected here in an English frigate. From despatches received from him he has been highly received by the English monarch and all with whom he had any relation.

Despatches from Washington report that the Hon. C. P. Villiers, brother to Lord Clarendon, has at length been appointed to represent Her Britannic Majesty at Washington. He was expected to leave England immediately, but some "trifles" have interposed for the present.

Harpers, the well known publishers, of Franklin Square, have started with the New Year—"Harpers' Weekly, a Journal of Civilization." The paper is good, the articles heavy reading, with a few wood cuts interspersed to relieve its general dullness.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

FRANCE.—The government is about to submit a very important project to the Council of State for building 30,000 houses on either side of the walls of Paris. The Emperor personally desires the realization of the scheme.

Prince Napoleon Bonaparte intends, it is said, making a voyage this year to the Indian and China seas, visiting Ceylon, Borneo, Java, &c. He will be accompanied, as on his first voyage, by some distinguished savans and litterateurs.

Beranger and Lamartine are suffering from indisposition. It is said that the former had finished his autobiography.

The Siecle says that a tunnel is to be cut through the Butte Montmartre, to facilate communication between Paris and the northern suburbs. The entrance of the tunnel is to be opposite the Barriere des Martyrs, and the end of it to face Saint Ouen.

The Post's Paris correspondent says that the principal object of Russia at the coming Conferences is to insist on the retirement of the British squadron from the Black Sea, and the evacuation of the Principalities by the Austrians. Russia is said to have assured the Porte that neither the Isle of Serpents nor the Bessarabian Frontier difficulty should, so far as she herself is concerned, impede the execution of the treaty.

ITALY.—According to intelligence which had reached Paris, the Emperor of Austria has not yet decided on visiting Milan. His Majesty is said to be much disappointed with his reception in Italy, and complains of false representations having been made to him as to public feeling in Venice and Lombardy.

Queen Christina has arrived at Rome, where she will pass the winter. She is accompanied by her youngest daughter, who is said to be engaged to be married to Count Lovatelli, nephew of Prince Chigi, and of Mons. Chigi, representative of the Pope at the coronation of the Emperor Alexander. The ceremony, it is said, will take place during the stay of her Majesty the Queen Mother in Rome.

NAPLES.—Naples is said to be in a state of extreme excitement, and a spirit of insubordination and mutiny is believed to prevail in the Neapolitan army. A collision between the native troops and the Swiss is considered likely, and the latter look forward to it with sombre resolution. The King's wound is in the upper part of the thigh, and not at all dangerous.

SWEDEN.—At the opening of the Swedish Diet, King Oscar announced, in very noble language, that a bill would be presented in the course of the session for the establishment of freedom of religious worship in the kingdom. The text of that measure has just been published; and it proves how strong religious prejudices must still be in Sweden, since notwithstanding the good intentions of the Sovereign and the spirit of the constitution, the government has only ventured to propose enactments of a very limited character, and which do not by any means reach the standard which the King's language had led people to expect. The following is an analysis of the principal provisions of the bill:

"Art. 1 revokes the clauses and enactments of the penal code relative to the penalties attached to departure from the true evangelical doctrine, and the profession of another faith. These penalties were nothing less than exile and confiscation; and the persons who left the Swedish Church almost in every case merely became Protestants of another denomination. Every Swede, however, who leaves the national Swedish Church is obliged to make a formal declaration to that effect in the registers of his parish. Art. 2 revokes the enactments of the same code which entail the penalty of exile for the propagation of erroneous doctrines, and changes the punishment for that offence into a fine varying from 68f. to 400f., or imprisonment of from one to twelve months. Art. 3 proposes that whoever shall seek, by persuasion, threats, or other illicit means, to lead to apostacy from the Swedish Church, shall be liable to a fine of from 70f. to 440f., and for each repetition of the offence, to imprisonment of from two to twelve months.

THE WAR WITH PERSIA.—The Russian troops are concentrated on the Arexas. Letters have been received which allege that the Russian intervention will be carried into effect as soon as the governor of the Caucasus shall have been officially informed of the disembarkation of the English at Bushire.

Arrival of the Columbia.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5, 1857.

PREST. JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Sir: That you may have a report of our voyage, and that our friends at home may learn of our arrival in safety, we forward you the following for publication in the MORMON:

The ship Columbia left Liverpool dock on the 16th of November, 1856, and sailed from the River Mersey on the 18th, on her voyage for this port, with 221 Saints and other passengers on board. The Saints were under the presidency of Elders John Williams, George Baker, and Benjamin Lloyd. Before leaving Liverpool, Elders Calking and Williams, from the Millenial Star office, came on board, and exhorted the Saints to observe cleanliness and order during the voyage, promising that, if they would obey the counsel and carry out the instructions given them by those who presided, they should have a prosperous voyage, and not one soul should be lost.

During the first three days, we had a fresh breeze, and then came on a calm, which continued for a week. On Sunday, the 23d, the captain very kindly consented to allow preaching on the quarter deck, when President John Williams set forth the first principles of the Gospel to all on board. During the calm, the Saints partially recovered from their sea sickness, of which most of them had had a very severe attack. On the 11th December, Sister Skinner was confined of a son. From a few days before this time up to the 23d of December, we had strong gales and heavy squalls, which rendered it very difficult for the Saints to have their food cooked, which, at times, made it very unpleasant for them, nevertheless, as a general thing, contentment and peace reigned. On the 23d of December, the weather commenced to be very cold and stormy. On Christmas Eve, Christmas, and the following day, most of the sisters and children were compelled to remain in their berths on account of the coldness of the weather and rolling of the ship. After the 26th, the weather became mild until the end of our voyage.

On the 30th, land was observed from the mast-head, which made the hearts of the Saints greatly to rejoice, thinking that deliverance was so near at hand from their long and dangerous voyage.

Whenever the weather permitted, the bugle was sounded for the Saints to attend the meetings for prayer and instruction. The captain, officers, and crew were very kind to the Saints.

We landed at New York towards evening of the 1st January, 1857, after a voyage of 45 days. Two of the crew have gone on to St. Louis with the Saints that have gone there with a design to go ultimately to Great Salt Lake City.

THE MORMON.

a majority of the Saints enjoyed good health crossing the Atlantic. The morning after our arrival, we were visited by brethren from the MORMON office and other brethren. President John Taylor, P. P. Pratt, G. A. Smith, and Erastus Snow, paid us a visit at Castle Garden likewise, and gave us every necessary instruction for our future comfort, for which the Saints feel to tender their grateful acknowledgments, and, at the same time, thank the branch of New York, with its President, for sending them a goodly portion of the good things from the festival.

We remain your brethren in the everlasting gospel.

The Mormons.

THE ship Columbia, Captain Hutchinson, of the Black Ball line of packets, arrived at this port on Thursday night from Liverpool, which place she left on the 18th of November last. The ship had a stormy passage, but sustained no accident aside from her loss of her mizzen topsail yard and a portion of her bulwarks, which were carried away in a heavy gale. Her passengers were for the most part Mormons—a body of two hundred and twenty are of that peculiar sect—having left their homes in the Old World, and influenced by the characteristics of their religious instruction are seeking new homes. Of the number, one hundred and fifty-nine are adults and sixty-two children. Of the adults there are more men than women. They are mostly from Bristol, Yorkshire, Wales and London—eighty-two being from Bristol and twenty-three from Wales. John Williams is the President of the body. Among them were twenty-two Mormon elders. As respects material prosperity, the emigrants arrived in a better condition than the general run; nearly all had more or less means, while but few had not sufficient to pay their expenses for several weeks.

Two of their number were first cabin, and sixty second cabin passengers. One birth took place on the passage. Religious meetings were held three times a week, except when stormy weather precluded. Most of the number go to St. Louis; others will stop at different points where they have friends. The greater portion design to go to Salt Lake by the way of the Plains early in the spring, and all look to that place as the new Jerusalem where they are ultimately to find their rest.

On Thursday night the Mormons held a festival at Brookes' Assembly Rooms in Broome street, near Bowery. Over four hundred of the Saints were present, among whom many persons distinguished by their zeal in propagating their peculiar religion, and by the leading positions they occupy. In the lower rooms refreshments were served. In the main hall a congratulatory meeting on the increasing prosperity of their church was held, at which Judge Appleby, of Salt Lake presided. George A. Smith, delegate from Utah, in the House of Representatives, Parley P. Pratt, one of the Twelve, and Rev. John Taylor, were present and made addresses, which with the songs, duetts and recitations occupied the time until 12 o'clock, when the assembly dispersed.—[N. Y. Herald, Jan. 4.

MR. EDITOR—Sir: In passing through Cincinnati, Ohio, a short time since, the following facts were communicated to me by Mr. Benjamin E. Styles of that place, who also exhibited to me a gold plate, found by him at the aforesaid place, in the year 1847, while excavating the earth for a cistern, a few feet above high water mark on the Ohio River. It was thrown out with the loose earth while excavating, about nine feet beneath the surface.

Said plate is of fine gold, three or four inches in length, averaging about three-fourths of an inch in width, and about one-eighth of an inch in thickness, with the edges scolloped. In the face of which was beautifully set another plate of the same material, and fastened together by two pins, running through both. This latter plate is full of ancient raised letters, beautifully engraved upon its surface, the whole exhibiting fine workmanship.

The plate was examined by a Dr. Wise, a very learned Rabbi of the Jewish Synagogue in Cincinnati, and editor of a Hebrew paper there, who pronounced the characters to be mostly ancient Egyptian.

Yours truly, P. P. PRATT.

Correspondence from Switzerland.

RUE DU CENDRIER, 108 Geneva,
Switzerland, Nov. 6, 1856.

DEAR BROTHER George Albert: On my re-return day before yesterday from Zurich, I found lying upon my table about twenty letters waiting replies, and among the rest yours, committed to the care of Elder Stenhouse; and this morning's post brought yours from St. Louis, enclosed to Prest. O. Pratt for me. After having answered those that required counsel and instructions, and made my report to Prest. Pratt, I take the pen to drop you a few lines, that you may know how I prosper in the land of the renowned William Tell. In the first place, I will say, my health is good, and I am heavier than I ever was in my life. On the 17th of last month, I left Geneva on a visit to the German-Swiss Saints, and after passing through the routine of steamers, railways, diligencies, &c., I arrived safely in Zurich, and met with about one hundred and twenty-five Saints, on Sunday the 17th; but as I had learned my German from the grammar, and the Swiss-Germans speak so differently from the people of Germany, it was with much difficulty that I could understand, or make myself understood.

I spent the week until Thursday, visiting the Saints, and ordained one Elder. I never enjoyed myself better in my life than while visiting the Saints in Zurich, and dodging the police. On Thursday the 23d, in company with Elder Daniel Bonelli, I took train for Frauenfeld, Canton of Thurgovie, about 40 miles distant. In the evening we attended meeting, ordained Priest John Keller an Elder, and appointed him to preside over the branch in that place. I here made an attempt at addressing the Saints in German for fifteen minutes, and some of them could understand me tolerably well.

On Saturday I returned to Zurich, and in the evening met with the Priesthood, and gave them all the instruction I could. The following day we held a Conference, about one hundred and twenty persons were present, mostly Saints. The authorities of the Church from the Prophet Brigham, to the last member of the Priesthood were unanimously sustained in their callings. I addressed the assembly nearly an hour in German. Through the faith of the Saints, and the good Spirit of Almighty God resting upon us, I spoke many words that I had not learned, but which were comprehended by the Saints. I felt to thank and praise the Lord for His blessings bestowed upon us, and the assistance He gave me in all places where I had to speak of the principles of Truth. You may be assured that every night I found myself considerably fatigued with answering questions and twisting my tongue to the German.

I found many things that rejoiced me, and but very few that gave me sorrow. The Saints manifested a spirit to do right, and follow every council and instruction that was given. The words of our Father upon my head were literally fulfilled; where he said, "The people will worship you if you do not tell them better." I had to often say, thank the Lord and not me for your blessings. It gave me joy to know that the Saints loved and appreciated the teachings which they received through me. Do not think, dear Bro. George, that I felt proud or lifted up, for I assure you that all these things caused me more than ever to feel my weakness and dependence upon the Lord for His Spirit to give me words, and to tell me how to act.

On the 28th, I went to Berne, the capital of Switzerland, where I stopped one day and ascended the highest church in the place, built in the year 1400, had a good view of the town but the weather was too foggy to see the mountains and scenery. On the 30th, I walk-to Thun, 24 miles, visiting some of the Saints en route. On the 1st of November, I went to Gusten, 5 miles, and staid with Elder Buhler, the President of the Thun Branch. On Sunday the 2d, I held a Conference, re-organized the Bern Conference, and appointed Elder Buhler President. I addressed the Saints one hour, and had the satisfaction of learning that they could understand what I said. On the 4th, I arrived in Geneva, and found the Saints here all well. During my visit, there were baptized two persons; eight others expressed their readiness to be baptized the first opportunity. I laid hands upon over thirty persons, some not in the Church, and all were healed according to promise. I consecrated about twenty bottles of oil for their use in sickness. The faith of the Saints seemed as they would receive a great blessing if they could once take Prest. J. L. Smith by the hand. I had a chase from the Police, but I walked faster and turned more corners than they did and thus escaped. The good Spirit of the Lord was with me during my visiting, and I never enjoyed myself better in the same length of time in my life. I look forward with anxiety to the time to roll round when I shall be able to pay them another visit, but I must wait until the excitement dies away, which always attends a visit of a Mormon Elder from a foreign land. I rejoice in my field of labors, and pray God to hasten the time, even before I leave these lands, when Iron rule may be broken, so that we can blow the Gospel Trumpet, and make the ears of the people to tingle. I have filled my sheet nearly full, and written enough to tire your patience, for one time. I was very glad to learn that Cousin Samuel was on a mission, as it will do him good, for no man can learn so much as in the Lord's vineyard.

Give my love to Bros. Erastus Snow, Taylor, Stenhouse and all the Saints you see that know me. May God bless you continually is my constant prayer, and preserve us that we may meet again.

Yours affectionately, JOHN L. SMITH.
Prest. GEO. A. SMITH.

FOR THE MORMON.

Reminiscences of Prussia.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

It is not to be expected, that men of no, or inferior talents, full of weaknesses, who were solely, by the favorable circumstances of birth-right, raised to the eminent and important position of rulers, should govern a nation with that ability which provides against every circumstance or emergency arising in the course of time. The desire of predominance by an unrestrained power, which leads man to convert a liberal constitution into despotism, is generally fatal and vain; excites seditions, and results often in an overthrow of the usurped, or inherited prerogative of royalty. The history of the Romans, among whom, during the reign of Gallienus, not less than nineteen ambitious, but mostly unqualified leaders contended for the supreme power, and plunged the state into all those calamities which resulted finally, in the decline and fall of that great empire, should be a warning lesson to potentates.

The successors of Frederic the Great, instead of ameliorating the condition of their subjects, enacted laws, by the advice of their hireling councillors, which lead to jealousy and disputes between the highly favored aristocracy, and the so-called commoners; and, instead of quieting the complaints of the people by a wise adjustment of their wrongs, all their efforts have been directed to the attainment of a despotic power, without considering in the least the interests of their subjects.

Previous to the treaty of Tilsit, in 1807, Frederic William III., by the advice of his ministry, especially Count Hardenberg, enunciated a law by which the government was authorized to raise forced loans and levy taxes for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the war. In accordance with that law, the people were notified by the official papers, to report faithfully the amount of means everyone was in possession of, threatening at the same time, with severe punishment, those who would make incorrect statements, as the valuation of the property would be estimated by a committee of officers appointed for that purpose. Soon after the publication of those cheering news, a number of government officers went from house to house, to ascertain the real amount of means of every person. Rich people received orders to pay within a fortnight the sum mentioned in their notifications in the royal treasury; or, if unwilling to comply with this paternal and philanthropic request, to be imprisoned. Men whose property was locked up in public securities or stocks, learned often to their utter dismay, when calling for their interests, that the government had saved the people the trouble of collecting their dues, by arresting all public funds. At the same time an Indulgence was published by which debtors were released from their liabilities, so that everyone could pay according to the greater or smaller elasticity of his conscience, whenever he liked, and thus men became legally authorized swindlers. Whether those measures were taken because the king wanted in fulfilment of the Scripture passage, "Blessed be ye poor, for yours is the Kingdom of God;" save his subjects from the temptations of Mammon, and see them exalted, or whether it was done because the government itself would or could not meet its liabilities, I leave to the good judgment of the reader. Suffice it to say, that those measures were attended with direful results, so that thousands and hundreds of thousands were made beggars. The king, who, previous to sanctioning those steps, remarked to one of his ministers, that many would thereby be stript of their property, received the following consoling answer from his faithful servant; "It can make no difference to your Majesty to have half a million of beggars more or less, if only the crown is saved."

The Prussian nation who were threatened by a foreign foe, and kept down by the bayonets of their own king, and knowing that any endeavors to shake off the yoke of their own oppressors, would prove abortive and fruitless, and only lead them from the frying-pan into the fire; were compelled to submit to those tyranic measures.

After the treaty of Tilsit, Napoleon I., who, through treachery, had come in possession of the records containing the total amount of property in the Prussian dominions, exacted most exorbitant contributions for the support of his army.

When, after the memorable Russian campaign of 1812, the French army was destroyed, both by the valor of the Muscovites, and the seasonable and effectual interposition of the elements, Frederic William III. called upon his subjects, to take up arms against the insolent and ambitious foreign foe, promising, at the same time solemnly, to redress their grievances; to emancipate the bondsmen from the slavish subjection of the nobles, and to do his best for the promotion of the common welfare. The people, loyal to their sovereign, and believing that, by defeating and subduing the Gallic oppressors, a better era would commence, that their wrongs would be adjusted, and they would be permitted to enjoy, once more, the peaceable fruits of justice and honor, rallied themselves under the banner of their king; husbands parted with their families, children with their parents; the academical youth left the Universities and Colleges; the mechanic, the farmer, in fact every one capable of bearing arms, left their homes and joined the ranks of the gallant defenders of the country. The greatest enthusiasm had seized all classes of society, so that, not only men were furnished by the obedient Prussians, but also money, gold and silver, to the amount of many millions, were laid down at the shrine of the fatherland, so that in a short time the cannons thundered their veto against the inroads of foreign oppression. Violent and sanguinary was the contest against the Gallic foe, till in the battle of Waterloo, on the 18th of June, 1815, through the characteristic firmness and unyielding perseverance of the English, under their illustrious chieftain, the duke of Wellington, and through the brilliant valor of the Prussians under Prince Blucher, the French army was completely routed, and Napoleon I. compelled to abdicate, a second time, that throne and government, which he had so much abused. As soon as a general peace was restored, the Prussian government, in open violation of the most solemn pledges which had been made, to grant the nation a liberal constitution, enacted laws and took measures, which tended to the attainment of an absolute despotic power. The king knowing and fearing the power of the press, at first curtailed, and finally abolished its liberty or privileges, introduced literary organs of his own, and did every thing, with the assistance of his vile ministers, to suppress the publication and spreading of ideas opposed to his despotic will. Hence the Prussian newspapers contain merely meagre, panegyric and parasitical discourses on the excellent measures of the government, avoiding carefully every thing that might give the least umbrage to the august sovereign. In order to be well informed of the public opinion relative to governmental affairs, a general system of espionage has been introduced, throughout the country, so that in all classes of society, among the poor and the rich, the high and the low, even among domestics, agents of the secret police may be found; therefore every body has to be circumspect in words and actions, so as to avoid trial and imprisonment.

As the only striking and emphatic arguments Frederic William IV. can introduce for the upholding of his rotten and tyrannic government, are the sabre and the cannon, by which alone tumults can be smothered for a time. Prussia is a strictly military state, in which the greatest attention is paid to the war department, by which constant efforts are being made to augment the army, to strengthen and increase fortifications, and transform every place of strategic importance into a fortress. Prussia is divided into nine military districts, in every one of which an army of 50,000 men can be brought into the field, 15,000 of whom are in active service. At the entrance of every city, town, village or hamlet, a sign on the top of a post, with the Prussian eagle over it, is put up, containing the number of the regiment, to which the male inhabitants thereof belong. Not only men but also horses are examined by a committee of military officers, to ascertain their being fit or unfit for service. At the office of every military district, the exact number of men, horses, and cattle, and the average quantities of grain, hay &c. found therein, are faithfully recorded; the accounts embracing likewise a minute description of the country, the bearings of the ground for military purposes, the number and depth of rivers, creeks and ponds; the size of groves, forests; and at last, the condition of roads; general records of which, with maps and charts are kept at the office of the minister of war, in Berlin. With such arrangements, by which the country is always prepared for a campaign, the concentration of a large army, at the shortest possible time, is very easy. In order to facilitate military movements, the railways are, by law, in case of emergency, placed at the disposal of the government; so that troops can be forwarded to certain points, with the greatest speed. When armies are concentrating in close quarters, as was done in 1847, 48, and 49, every owner of a house, yes, even every inmate having more than one room, is compelled, by law, to have a certain number of soldiers billeted in his house, in proportion to the valuation of the property. The expenses of the war department absorb the annual sum of about twenty nine millions of dollars, i. e. half of the yearly revenues of the kingdom, which do not exceed sixty millions. In order to support the army, the royal family &c. the taxes are burthensome and endless in number, so that people wondered sometimes, why every cubic foot of air inhaled in the Prussian dominions, is not taxed.

A great many other vexatious things might be mentioned, but suffice it to say, that the measures of the government tend to strengthen more and more an autocratic power.

Unhappy country! where the free and genuine ebullitions of the immortal spirit are restrained by a phalanx of bayonets and sabres, and the Mercurial wings of genius are clipt by the hireling instruments of foul oppression; where men have no right to think for themselves, but are merely the playthings of caprice, or the tools of despotic authority; where liberty is a chimera, and humanity seems to be voiceless, like a tomb of buried empires; when wilt thou arise from thy lethargy and manifest the strength which has so long been dormant? when wilt thou open thy cities, those gigantic repositories of human beings, wherein the people, pale, fierce and starving are huddled in gloomy and loathsome dwellings, and pour forth thy thousands against the bulwarks of tyranny!

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2, 1857.

SENATE.

On motion of Mr. Slidell, of La., a resolution was adopted requesting the President, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of all the correspondence between our government and that of the Netherlands, relative to the refusal of the diplomatic agents of the latter to appear before the Courts of Justice of the United States, and give testimony in criminal cases of facts bearing thereon, of which they may be cognizant. This refers to Mr. Dubois, who declined to appear in the Herbert case. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House was engaged in the consideration of private bills, thirteen of which were passed. Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. Jan. 5.

On motion of Mr. Cass, of Mich., a resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of War for further information respecting the St. Clair flats, and asking what amount, if any, of additional appropriation will be required for said work.

Mr. Butler, of S. C., from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was refered the credentials of Mr. Harlan, Senator from Iowa, and the protest of the Senate of Iowa Legislature relative to the subject, reported that the committees, after careful consideration, were unable to agree unanimously, and under instructions from the majority he submitted a report, that Mr. Harlan had not been duly elected to the Senate, accompanied by a resolution declaring the seat vacant.

Mr. Toombs, of Ga., gave notice that he should submit a majority report.

Mr. Harlan wished the subject disposed of at the earliest practicable period, and suggested to-morrow.

Mr. Stewart, of Mich., remarked that it might, being a privileged question, be taken up at any time, without making it the special order.

The House bill for the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Revolution, their widows and orphans, was considered.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., made a long speech in support of the measure, drawing largely from the writings of Washington to strengthen his position.

Mr. Pugh, of Ill., opposed the bill, regarding it as the entering wedge of a great system of corruption.

Mr. Stewart, of Mich., made a correction of his former remarks, to the effect that if the bill passed, President Pierce will receive $5,280, and not $14,000 or $15,000, for the Revolutionary services of his father.

Mr. Seward remarked that General Pierce was not the only surviving child, and the share which would fall to him would not exceed one half the sum now mentioned by the Senator from Michigan. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

An ineffectual motion was made to enable committees to make reports for reference only.

On motion of Mr. Volk, of N. Y., the President was requested to inform the House by what authority he employs a government architect for designing and erecting all public buildings, and placing them under the superintendence of military engineers.

Mr. Quitman vainly strove to report a bill increasing the pay of officers of the army.

The House, by a vote of seventy against one hundred refused to suspend the rules as moved for by Mr. Walbrige, to enable him to introduce a resolution making the subject of the Pacific Railroad the special order for the 14th of January.

Other ineffectual motions to suspend the rules for the purpose of acting on various subjects, were made, after which the House adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 6.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., called the Senate to order, and announced that the first business in order was the election of a President pro tem.

Mr. Hale, of N. H.—What is the occasion?

Mr. Cass, of Mich.—Because we haven't any. (Laughter.)

On the motion of Mr. Hunter, of Va., the Senate proceeded to the election, when Mr. Mason was elected, receiving 30 votes, Foote 11, Weller 1, blank 2.

Mr. Harlan, of Iowa, moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, relative to a seat from Iowa.

Mr. Butler, of S. C., stated the reasons which influenced a majority of the committee in coming to the conclusion that Mr. Harlan was not duly elected. These were, in brief, that the Senate as a body did not attend that meeting in joint convention, at which Mr. Harlan was elected, and their teller was not there as required by law; the Senate had adjourned over, and there was no Senate in session at the time; a majority of Senators were present in their individual capacity, but the Senate as a body was not there; the President of the Senate was not the regular presiding officer of the Convention, but they elected a President pro tem. These irregularities vitiated the election.

Mr. Toombs, of Ga., contended that the Legislature of Iowa was composed of members of a Senate and House, and upon those individuals was devolved the constitutional duty of electing a Senator of the United States in the manner prescribed by the constitution of Iowa. The joint convention consisted of the members who composed the two legislative bodies; and as soon as they met in joint convention the distinction heretofore existing between them as members of different branches was obliterated. Their names were arranged in alphabetical order on one list, and hence the absence or refusal to participate in the proceedings on the part of any member, or of less than a majority of the whole number of members composing the joint convention could not invalidate the doings of the convention.

Mr. Benjamin, of La., wished to know whether it was competent to one branch of a State Legislature to elect a Senator in Congress? The Constitution of the United States declares that Senators shall be elected by State Legislatures, and State Legislatures consist of two branches, from which it follows that the Constitution requires Senators to be elected by those two branches concurrently.

Mr. Toombs replied that such a constitution would render invalid the election of a great many Senators, because many Senators had held their seats against the majority of one branch of their State Legislatures.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Boyce, of S. C., gave notice of an amendment he intends offering to the tariff bill. He proposes that from and after January, 1857, all goods, wares, merchandise and other products, subject under the existing tariff to pay a duty of twenty per cent, shall continue to be admitted at that rate, and that tea and coffee shall be included in the same schedule.

Mr. Greenwood, of Ark., introduced a bill the more effectually to prevent the introduction of spirituous liquors and wines into the Indian country.

Referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

The consideration of the President's message was resumed. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 7.

Mr. Weller, of Cal., reported a bill to increase the pay of officers in the army, and gave notice that he should call it up at an early day.

The consideration of the Iowa election case was resumed.

Mr. Bayard of Del., argued against the right of Mr. Harlan to a seat. When, he said, two integral bodies are to perform any act, both must be present at the same, or it cannot be constitutionally done. In the present case, it was admitted that the Senate of Iowa, as a body, did not participate in the election, nor did a quorum of that body vote on the occasion: therefore Mr. Harlan was voted for only by one branch of the Legislature.

Mr. Foster of Conn., replying, said that after the Convention was duly organized by the concurrence of the two branches of the Legislature, it remained in session, and could be dissolved only by the vote of a majority of the Convention, or by the withdrawal of such a number of members as would leave less than a quorum present. The members ceased to act in the capacity of Senators and representatives, but were to be counted numerically. Mr. Harlan having received a majority of the votes of all the members of the Convention, he was thereby legally elected. If the sixteen Senators who absented themselves had all been present and voted against Mr. Harlan, he would have still been elected, and how then could their absence prevent his election!

The President pro tem. submitted a letter from Mr. Hamlin, resigning his seat as Senator from Maine.

Adjourned till Friday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A motion to print extra copies of the President's message being under consideration, Mr. Pierce came in for a large share of sharp criticism.

Ten thousand copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey were ordered to be printed.

Adjourned till Friday.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Affairs in North Carolina.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 2, 1857.

Messrs. A. J. Dargan and T. L. Hargrove, members of the North Carolina Legislature, went out to fight a duel on Tuesday last; but it was amicably adjusted on the field without an exchange of shots.

Gov. Bragg was reinstalled Governor of North Carolina at Raleigh yesterday.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 1, 1857.

A special despatch to the Commercial says that a family of eight persons, named Stith, in Hardin county, Ky., was poisoned by a negro cook. Six died, and the others are not expected to live.

Neufchatel Affair.

ACCORDING to the Democrat, a German paper, a rumor is afloat in Berlin, that the Prussian minister of war is making preparations for the mobilization of one hundred and fifty thousand men, who are to march to the frontier of Switzerland in order to force that republic to liberate the Prussian prisoners. It is further stated that the great European powers propose dividing Switzerland. If that is case, we hope that with what measure they wish to give others, they may have meted to themselves.

The Death of the Captive Mrs. Wilson.

We some time since alluded to the capture by the Indians of Mrs. Wilson, a lady who was on her way from St. Louis to Salt Lake City, in Col. Babbitt's train. Measures were immediately taken to secure her rescue, and Captain Wharton, of the United States Army, exerted himself to the utmost. He offered large rewards, sent parties in search, and even anticipated the wishes of the family, so anxious and energetic was he in this work of humanity. It appears, however, that his labors were in vain, for a letter received in this city yesterday states that Mrs. Wilson was killed on the day after her capture, because she could not ride on horseback and keep up with the train. She was a most estimable lady, and her melancholy fate has produced a painful sensation in the minds and hearts of those who knew and appreciated her.—Philadelphia Inquirer, Jan. 2.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

"We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Cornelle, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Triumph of Truth.

BY MISS KATE J. REDDING.

Can ye darken the rays of the noonday sun?
Or bring back light when night's begun?
Can ye wrench the shaft from the hand of Death?
Or stem the plague in its withering breath?
—The heavens above us—the lights that glow—
—The tombs of the lifeless answer—No!

Can ye calm the waves of the raging deep?
Or hush the winds that o'er it sweep?
Can ye stay the lightning's vivid flash?
Or level the rocks the surges lash?
—The rage of the tempest—the tides that flow—
—The blasts of the whirlwind answer—No!

Can ye measure the depths of yon proud sea?
Will the universe change its course for thee?
Can the monarch of nations war with God?
Or vanquish Truth with his tyrant rod?
—The grovelling kingdoms of earth will show—
—They may boast in their pride, but must answer—
No!

Success of the Chinese Sugar-Cane.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16, 1856.

A CIRCULAR is about being issued from the United States Patent Office by Commissioner Mason, under the special direction of D. J. Browne, Esq., which will be sent to the different State Agricultural Societies in the United States, accompanied by a parcel of the Chinese sugar-cane seed, raised under the supervision of the above-named office, sufficient to cultivate sixteen acres, with the view of extending the culture of this plant in the several States. I have been kindly favored with an advance copy of the circular referred to for publication in the Tribune. It is a subject of the highest importance to the people of the United States, especially those of the Northern portion of the Union, and for this reason I make no apology for quoting largely. The Commissioner says:

"If consistent with the regulations of your Society, you will oblige me by putting it into such hands for cultivation as will be likely to keep the seed pure and unmixed with broom-corn, Guinea corn, or other plants that would be liable to mix or hybridize, and return one-half of the product to your Society for subsequent distribution. I think it would be proper to obtain a written obligation form each of the parties thus receiving the seeds.

"This new plant seems to be destined to take an important position among our economical products. Its seeds were sent some six years ago from the North of China, by M. de Montigny to the Geographical Society of Paris. From a cursory examination of a small field of it, growing at Verriéres in France in the Autumn of 1854, Mr. D. J. Browne, then on a mission from this office for collecting agricultural information and products, was led to infer that, from the peculiarity of the climate in which it was growing and its resemblance to Indian corn it would flourish in any region wherever that plant would thrive. From this source he obtained some 200 pounds of the seed which was distributed in small packages by this Office among Members of Congress, with the view of experimenting with it in all parts of the Union, and thereby ascertaining its adaptation to the soil and climate, and its economical value in the United States. In numerous instances that results proved satisfactory as it attained the hight of twelve or fifteen feet as far north as St. Paul, Minnesota, and matured its seeds at various points in Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois. The following year, while in France, on a similar mission as above, Mr. Browne obtained several bushels of the seed of this plant, grown from that reputed to have been brought from South Africa by Mr. Leonard Wray, of London, and which has since proved to be indentical with that obtained in 1854.

"There appears to be a doubt among many in Europe, as well as in this country, as to the true botanical name of this plant. M. Louis Vilmorin, a scientific cultivator of Paris, provisionally gave it the name of Holcus saccharatus, which had previously been applied to the common broom-corn, if not to other species, or at least varieties, of some allied plant. He also conjectured that it might be the Sorghum vulgare (Andropogon sorghum of others) and thought that it might comprehend a variety as well as Andropogon cafru bicolor, etc., of Kunth. Mr. Wray, who has devoted much of his time and attention to the cultivation of this plant, with the view of extricating sugar from its juice, at Cape Natal and other places, states that, in the south-east part of Caffraria, there are at least fifteen varieties of it, some of them growing to a hight of twelve and fifteen feet, with stems as thick as those of the sugar-cane (Saccharum officinale.) M. Vilmorin also says that in a collection of seeds sent to the Museum of Natural History at Paris in 1840, by M. d'Abadié, there were thirty kinds of sorghum among the growth of which he recognized several plants having stems of a saccharine flavor. Others are of the opinion that the common broom-corn (Holcus saccharatus,) the chocolate or Guinea-corn (Sorghum vulgare,) and the Chinese sugar-cane (Sorghum saccharatum) all of which contain more or less saccharine matter, belong to the same species but are variations caused by differences of soil and climate, or by a disposition to sport after the manner of Indian corn, and other plants under cultivation. The Chinese sugar-cane differs from the others, in containing a far larger proportion of juice, and consequently is more valuable for fodder and other economical uses.

"In 1766 a plant analogous to the one in question was experimented upon at Florence, in Italy, by Pietro Arduino, for the extrication of sugar; yet it must have been of a different variety, as he describes its seeds as of a clear brown color, while those of the Chinese sugar-cane are of a shining jet-black, and in appearance identical with those of the Sorghum vulgare of the old collections.

"DESCRIPTION AND HABIT OF ITS GROWTH.

"The Chinese sugar-cane, when cultivated on ordinary land in the United States, somewhat after the manner of broom-corn, grows to a hight of from eight to sixteen feet, while in Europe it does not attain more than half this altitude. Its stems are straight and smooth, often covered with a white bloom or down, having leaves somewhat flexuous, falling over and greatly resembling in appearance those of Indian corn, but more elegant in its form. Where cultivated in hills, containing eight or ten stalks each, it puts forth at its top a conical pinnacle of dense flowers green at first, but changing into violet shades, and finally into dark purple, at maturity. In France, and in the central and northern sections of the United States, it has thus far proved an annual; but from observations made by M. Vilmorin, as well as some experiments in our Southern States, it is conjectured that, from the vigor and fullness of the lower part of the stalks in Autumn, by protecting them during the Winter, they would produce new plants the following Spring. It stands drouth far better than Indian corn, and will resist the effects of considerable frost without injury, after the pinnacles appear, but not in its younger and more tender state. If suffered to remain in the field after the seeds have ripened, and been removed, when the season is sufficiently warm and long, new pinnacles will shoot out at the topmost joints one or more to each stalk, and mature a second crop of seeds. The average yield of seed to each pinnacle is at least a gill.

"CULTIVATION.

"Since its introduction into this country, the Chinese sugar-cane has proved itself well adapted to our geographical range of Indian corn. It is of easy cultivation, being similar to that of maize or broom-corn, but will prosper in a much poorer soil. It does not succeed so well, however, when sown broadcast with the view of producing fodder, as it will not grow to much more than one-half of its usual hight. If the seeds are planted in May, in the Middle States, or still earlier in the South, two crops of fodder can be grown in a season from the same roots—the first one in June or July, to be cut before the pinnacles appear which would be green and succulent, like young Indian corn and the other a month or two later, at the time or before the seed is fully matured. In the extreme Northern States where the season is too short and cool to ripen the seeds in the open air, the cultivator will necessarily have to obtain his seed from regions further south. If it were important for him to raise his own seed, he could start the plants under glass in the Spring, and remove them to the field or garden at about the period of planting Indian corn, after which they would fully mature. Two quarts of seed are found to be sufficient to plant an acre. If the soil be indifferent or poor, they may be planted in rows or drills three feet apart, with the plant from ten to twelve inches asunder; but if the soil be rich, they may be planted in hills, five or more seeds to each, four or five feet apart in one direction and three or four in the other. The plants may be worked or hoed twice in the course of a season, in a similar manner to Indian corn. Any suckers or superfluous shoots which may spring up should be removed. The seed should not be harvested before it acquires a dark or black hue. Should the plants lodge or fall to the ground by the excessive weight of the heads, during storms of wind or rain, before the seed matures, they may remain for weeks without injury. In collecting the seed, a convenient method is to cut off the stalks about a foot below the pinnacles, tie them up in bunches of twenty-five, and suspend them in any secure, airy place, sheltered from rain. If intended solely for fodder, the first crop should be cut just before the pinnacles appear, and the second as soon as the seed arrives at the milky stage. It may be tied up in bundles, shocked and cured like the tops or stalks of Indian corn. If not intended to be employed for any other economical use, after the seed has been removed, and the weather be cool, and the average temperature of the day does not exceed 45 deg. or 50 deg. F., the stalks may be cut up close to the ground, tied in bundles, collected into shocks, or stowed in a mass for fodder in sheds or barns in a succulent state, where they will keep without injury, if desired, until Spring. In this condition, however, the lower parts of the stalks will be found to be quite hard and woody, and will require to be chopped into small pieces for feeding.

"Precaution.—Particular care should be observed not to cultivate this plant in the vicinity of Dourah corn, Guinea corn, nor broom-corn, as it hybridizes, or mixes freely with those plants, which would render the seeds of the product unfit for sowing."

Specimens of the sugar and molasses produced from this cane in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and other Northern States, and numerous letters attesting its great value, have reached this city.—[Cor. of New York Tribune.

Duties of Consuls-General

THE following instructions have been issued by the Department of State, under the direction of the President, in compliance with the act of Congress, passed at the close of the last Session, regulating the Diplomatic and Consular Systems in the United States. They are important to the commercial and traveling community:

By the third section of the act of August 18, 1856, the Secretary of State is authorized to grant and issue passports, and cause passports to be granted, issued and verified in foreign countries by such diplomatic or consular officers of the United States, and under such rules as the President shall designate and prescribe, for and on behalf of the United States, and no other person shall grant, issue or verify any such passport; nor shall any passport be granted or issued to or verified for any other persons than citizens of the United States; nor shall any charge be made for granting, issuing or verifying any passport except in a foreign country; and in any case the fee allowed therefor shall not exceed the sum of one dollar, nor shall any such charge be made for more than one such verification in any foreign country; and if any person acting or claiming to act in any office or capacity under the United States, or any of the States of the United States, who shall not be lawfully authorized so to do, shall grant, issue or verify any passport or other instrument in the nature of a passport, to or for any person claiming to be designated as such in such passport or verification; or if any Consular officer who shall be authorized to grant, issue or verify passports, shall knowingly and willfully grant, issue or verify such passport to or for any person not a citizen of the United States, the person so offending shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or fined in a sum not to exceed $500, or both; and may be charged, proceeded against, tried, convicted and dealt with therefor in the district where he may be arrested or in custody. It is likewise made the duty of all persons who shall be authorized, pursuant to the provisions of the act, to grant, issue or verify passports, to make return of the same to the Secretary of State, and such returns shall specify the names and all other particulars of the persons to whom the same shall be granted, issued or verified, as embraced in such passport.

From the foregoing provisions of the act it will be seen that passports can only be issued by the Secretary of State, and such diplomatic and consular officers of the United States in foreign countries as he may expressly authorize, and they can be granted to citizens of the United States only.

Passports will be granted by the Secretary of State and by the diplomatic representatives of the United States in foreign countries free of charge, but when issued by a Consul-General, or Consul, the fee of one dollar, as prescribed in these instructions, is to be collected in every case. As passports granted by the Secretary of State secure to the bearers facilities from foreign Governments not accorded to those issued by diplomatic officers, Consuls General, or Consuls, it will always be to the interest of travelers to procure their passports before leaving the United States, and this course is earnestly recommended by the Department of State.

In any country where there is a diplomatic representative, no Consul-General or Consul is authorized to issue passports, except in the absence of such representative from the place of his legation.

Whenever he may be absent, authority is hereby given to Consuls-General and Consuls only, to issue passports; but in all cases the said Consuls-General or Consuls, as the case may be, will report to the Department of State the name of persons to whom passports have been issued by them, together with the evidence of their being citizens of the United States, and a copy of the same report will be forwarded to the Legation of the United States, if there be any in the country. In case there should be no diplomatic representative accredited to the country in which a Consul-General or Consul may reside, then these officers are authorised to grant passports, having regard to the General Instructions to Consular Officers in reference thereto; they will transmit, in all cases, to the Department of State the information in regard to to citizenship required by this section.

Whenever a foreign Government shall require the visa of a passport of any citizen of the United States it shall be given by the consular officer of the United States at the place where it is demanded; and he shall for each passport so visaed, collect and account for the fee prescribed in these instructions, noting on the passport that this has been done, and no charge shall thereafter be made by any officer of the United States for any visa of that passport in the same country.

Passports are granted upon the ground of international courtesy, and as affording evidence to the diplomatic and other agents in foreign countries, that the bearer thereof is a citizen of the United States, and entitled to full protection as such. A passport, in proper form, must contain a description of the bearer, with his signature; it must also request all whom it may concern to permit the bearer thereof, being a citizen of the United States, safely and freely to pass, and, in case of need, to give him all lawful aid and protection while so doing. It must be signed by the diplomatic representative, Consul-General, or Consul, and sealed with the seal of the legation or consulate.

Passports should be numbered, commencing with No. 1, and so continuing consecutively till the end of the incumbent's term of office. For a proper form of a passport, see form No. 46.

Consuls-General and Consuls are instructed to transmit the name and description of every person to whom a passport has been issued by them to this department, which the evidence on which it is granted, in accordance with form No. 47.

Consuls-General and Consuls are expressly instructed that when an application is made for a passport by a native citizen of the United States, before granting it the applicant must file in the Consulate an affidavit stating that fact, and also his age and place of birth. This must be signed and sworn to by himself and one other citizen of the United States named therein, to whom he is personally known, and to the best of whose knowledge and belief the declaration made by him is true.

If the applicant be a naturalized citizen, a passport can only be granted upon his exhibiting a certificate of naturalization, or a certified copy thereof, an authenticated copy of which must be transmitted by the Consul-General or Consul of the Department of State.

When the applicant is accompanied by his wife, children or servants, or by females under his protection, it will be sufficient to state the names and ages of such persons, and their relationship to the applicant.

Consuls-General and Consuls are instructed to exercise the utmost care and diligence in seeing that no passport is granted without clear evidence that the applicant is entitled to it as an American citizen. They are not to grant passports simply upon papers issued by State or corporate authorities or notaries public, or upon certificates of citizenship given by such authorities, as the United States consulates are not furnished with official information either in regard to their appointments, or to their signatures and seals of office.

A passport or other paper granted by a Consul, certifying that an alien knowing him or her to be such, is a citizen of the United States, is an offense punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000, to which the President will always add deprivation of office.

The Late Father Mathew.

THE Apostle of Temperance died on the 9th ult., at his residence, Queenstown, Cork. Although latterly he has had very feeble health, no other Catholic clergyman in Ireland has ever exercised so wide an influence. With so much power in his hands, it is no slight praise to affirm that he has never exerted it save for good. Of private and public esteem he earned a large measure. Statesmen of the highest rank acknowledged the value of his services to the cause of humanity, and even royalty itself awarded him the meed of its praise.

Theobald Mathew was born at Thomastown, October 10th, 1790. His father was named James. Being early left an orphan, he was brought up by the late Major-General Mathew, of Thomastown. His mother was the daughter of George Whyte, of Cappawhyte, county Tipperary, whose wife was niece of the celebrated General Mathew, of whom honorable mention is made by Sheridan in his life of Swift.

Theobald lost his parents while yet a child, and was adopted by Lady Elizabeth Mathew, who placed him under the tuition of the late Rev. Denis O'Donnell, at that time parish priest of Tallagh, county Waterford. At the age of 13 he was sent to the lay academy of Kilkenny, and seven years later removed to St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, to study for the priesthood. After spending some time there he returned to Kilkenny, with the intention of becoming a Capuchin Friar, and remained there until sent on the mission to Cork. By a rescript from the late Pope Gregory XVI. he received the degree of Doctor, with a dispensation from all episcopal jurisdiction, which permitted him to possess property and receive an annuity. At Easter, 1814, he was ordained priest in Dublin by the late Archbishop Murray.

It is stated above that the pension of £300 granted by the Queen to Father Mathew has proved barely sufficient to pay the insurance on his life which he considered it his duty to make for the purpose of securing the payment of his creditors in the event of his death. The policy on his life is either for £3,000 or £5,000; and at the risk of displeasing one of those who we think it right to state that one of the largest creditors is our philanthropic townsman, William Rathbone. When, borne down by ill health and fatigue, the reverend father was advised to go abroad for the benefit of his health, Mr. Rathbone, on more than one occasion, advanced him large sums of money. We cannot state the precise amount, but we have no hesitation in stating that it exceeds £1,000. There are very few men who have either the means or the inclination thus to serve a fellow-laborer in the effort to raise the fallen, and wean from degrading habits those who are on the high-way to ruin. The giver and the receiver will both obtain their reward.—English Paper.

"Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame,"

A Scene in the Illinois House of Representatives.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 5, 1857.

THIS morning an outrageous, and at the same time an amusing scene occurred in the House of Representatives. It took place in this way: Nearly all the members being present, they proceeded to organize the House in the usual way, by electing a Speaker, Clerk, Assistant Clerk, and Sergeant-at-Arms pro tempore. The person chosen for Speaker pro tem. was Mr. Dougherty, of Union; for Clerk, J. C. McConnel; for Sergeant-at-Arms, Tevis Greathouse, of Fayette. The Speaker and Chair took their seats. At this time Mr. Bridges, the Clerk of the former House, made his appearance and declared himself the presiding officer of the House until it was regularly organized, and protested against the proceedings of the members in electing a Speaker and other officers. The members paid very little attention to him—inasmuch as they had an intimation as to the course he intended pursuing—and went on with the business. The Speaker then directed the Clerk pro tem. to call the roll of the House and see how many members were present. Mr. Bridges again protested, called the Speaker to order, declared himself the presiding officer, and demanded that the members address him. The Speaker several times called Mr. Bridges to order, and Mr. Bridges again called the Speaker to order. Every one began to be somewhat excited at this stage of proceeding. Mr. Arnold, of Chicago, commenced making a speech for the purpose of sustaining Bridges, and here we will proceed verbatim et literatim:

Mr. Arnold—"Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks."

Speaker—"Does the gentleman recognize me as the Speaker?"

Arnold—"No sir."

Speaker—"Then the gentleman is out of order and will take his seat. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll."

Bridges—"I protest. I have my rights here, and intend to maintain them. I am presiding officer of this House, and intend to maintain my rights."

Speaker—"Order."

Bridges—"I call you to order, sir."

Logan, of Jackson—"Mr. Speaker, I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms, pro tem., be instructed to take Mr. Bridges out of the House, if he persists in his course."

Bridges—"I call you to order, sir."

Logan's motion being seconded, and the question being put and carried, the Speaker directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to show Mr. Bridges the door.

Mr. Greathouse, Sergeant-at-Arms, walked up to Mr. Bridges, and politely informed him that he was directed to show him out. Bridges told him to keep his hands off, or he would get hurt. Greathouse took him by the collar, when Bridges struck him, and then commenced the scene. They clinched, while many of the members made up to the scene of action to assist the Sergeant-at-Arms in the discharge of his duties.

After some considerable wrestling, knocking over chairs, desks, inkstands, men, and things generally, Mr. Bridges was got out with his coat "shockingly torn." Five or six assistant Sergeant-at-Arms were then appointed to keep order, and the House proceeded to business. After the members had been sworn in the House adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

This is one of the most disgraceful affairs that ever occurred in our State, and by far the most impudent. Such a thing as the old Clerk organizing the new House of Representatives was never before heard of in this State, and Mr. Bridges himself knew that he had no such authority, for he himself had been appointed, two years ago Clerk pro tempore, and after the House was organized he was elected Clerk for the session. We think Mr. Arnold is reprehensible for trying to sustain him in his outrageous course.—[Cor. St. Louis Republican.

Crime in England.

CRIME seems rampant in England. We have never known so many villainies chronicled by the English press as during the last six months. There appears nothing too horrible to be perpetrated. By night and by day, in the open streets, or the dark and gloomy alleys of the cities, crime seeks its victims, and perpetrates its wickedness upon life and property without fear and scarcely without molestation. It is difficult to divine the cause of all this, unless we seek for it in the low state of public morals which exists, or the great disparity between the high and the low—the extravagances and excesses of the one, and the misery and starvation of the other.

On a single page of the Liverpool Post we find one case of "child murder," three cases of "stabbing," two cases of "robbery," one of "shooting," four cases of "burglary," one "double attempt at murder," one of "assault and attempt at murder," and two of "garote and robbery," a new system which consists of coming up stealthily behind a person, seizing him by the throat with both hands, with one knee placed in the small of the back, holding him in that position until a second person relieves the victim of whatever he may have about him.

Great complaints are made of the inefficiency of the police, and it is certain that unless something is done to check this extravagance in crime, England will become as unsafe a residence as ever California or Texas or Arkansas were in their earlier days.—N. Y. Daily News, Dec. 27, 1856.

Something New under the Sun.

BARNESVILLE, O., Dec. 27, 1856.

A remarkable discovery which has been made at this place lately, has been the cause of some curious speculations in our midst.

A young man, while out rambling over our hills, came upon a high ledge of rocks, upon the top of which he saw imbedded in the solid stone, the distinctly marked tracks of men, birds and animals, all of a gigantic size.

As may well be supposed, the discovery has caused no small amount of surprise, and the question naturally suggests itself, whence came those tracks? Are they indicative of a period of antiquity beyond the time commonly assigned for the creation? And are we to have a new version of theory of Geological formations? I have thus taken the liberty to call attention to this matter through the columns of THE TRIBUNE, that the curious may have an opportunity of exercising their ingenuity.

A young minister of this place, Rev. Samuel Price, recently prepared a carefully written statement of the matter, which he forwarded to the Christian Advocate and Journal, a religious paper published in your city. As the editor of that paper seems to demur somewhat to the statements made in that communication, I have thought proper to call attention to it, as presenting perhaps, something new for our Geologists. The rocks are there, and the foot-prints are there. But how did they come there? Who can tell? I am well aware that this is not the first time that facts, apparently at variance with the commonly received opinions of Geologists have been discovered. And these rocks may very possibly offer no difficulties to the investigations of an Agassiz; but till there is some satisfactory answer to the question, "How came they there? they must remain a subject not only of curious speculation, but also of anxiety and troublesome perplexity.

Gutta Percha for Horse Shoes.

A PHILADELPHIA machine has constructed a horse shoe in such a manner that it requires no nails, and can be put on by any one without the aid of a blacksmith. Attached to the shoe is a flange extending around the hoof; and at the back of the horse's foot, is a joint, held in its place by a screw, which allows the shoe to open and close, so as to accommodate itself to the size of the hoof. Between the hoof and the plate is placed a layer of gutta percha, for the purpose of preventing injury to the hoof or leg of the horse by concussion, while running over hard roads or streets. The mechanism is very simple, and the application of gutta percha a new and ingenious idea.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 17, 1857.

To the Saints in the States.

As we are living in a dispensation which may emphatically be called a "gathering dispensation," it is proper that we should, from time to time, take into consideration the best and most prudent means to adopt, both in relation to the world, to ourselves, to our brethren, and to the Church and kingdom of God; that all things may move on harmoniously, both at home and abroad, that wisdom and prudence may dictate our steps, and that we may unitedly, as one grand whole, exert our intelligence and energies, to save and to bless, both ourselves and others; and as a band of brethren, under the direction of our Father, be ceaseless and untiring in our efforts to bless and save Israel, and to build and establish the Zion of our God.

For some years past very strenuous efforts have been made by the authorities of the Church to gather all the Saints that either public or private means could accomplish, aided by the united and untiring efforts of the Elders; and it will be seen by the report of President Orson Pratt, of England—found in another column, and to which we refer our readers—that he labors under considerable embarrassment, owing to this increased emigration, and the necessarily increased demands upon the Perpetual Emigration Fund. It would seem that the drain upon this fund has been so severe, during the last two years, that it is now considered advisable to suspend operations there with the P. E. Fund passengers this year, and until things are placed in a more easy position. This, we consider, is a very wise and prudent course, notwithstanding many may feel disappointed, and the propriety of such a step cannot fail to recommend itself to every intelligent mind, as any unnatural excitement, or exertion, whilst it leads to embarrassment, cannot further, but will rather tend to retard the great work in which we are engaged.

Some time ago President Young wrote, requesting us to form a settlement some distance west of the Missouri River. We at that time appointed Bishop Cunningham, assisted by Bros. McGaw and William H. Kimball, to select a company and make that settlement; but we presume that owing to the extreme anxiety to go to Utah this settlement has not been made. If it had been done, it certainly would have been of great advantage to the emigrating Saints, and if a few of the many who went forward had stayed they would not only have benefited themselves and others that are destined to follow, but also have had the satisfaction of having followed the counsels of those whom they have voted to sustain. How far they are to blame in this matter we are not prepared to say, as we have not received, as yet, a report from those whom we appointed to attend to this matter.

At a council of the Twelve, the minutes of which will be found in another column, the affairs of the whole Church in this Eastern country were taken into consideration, and the resolutions specified in those minutes adopted; the first of which you will perceive refers specially to the forming, not only of one, but several settlements on the route to the Valley; and to this we wish to draw your especial attention for the ensuing year, and we wish all Elders likewise, now laboring in the States, to use their influence for the furtherance of this object.

It is the purpose to form several settlements on the route between Florence and the Rocky Mountains, to serve as resting posts on the way, where provisions can be raised and supplied to the emigration, instead of hauling it so great a distance. It is the extreme distance that food has to be hauled which makes the latter part of the route so difficult and expensive to travel. We have a settlement now about one hundred, and another about one hundred and eighty miles on this side of Salt Lake Valley. If we could now form settlements in various locations, extending from Florence six hundred miles on this side of the Rocky Mountains, we should very much reduce the difficulties of travel, and make it entirely practicable to go with hand carts without any assistance from any source.

It may not be generally understood that for several years past our emigration has been an immense tax upon our brethren in Utah, who have stepped forth, and with a willing hand been always ready to assist their more needy brethren who have been en route for Zion. This will be better understood when you are informed that, in addition to subscribing liberally to the P. E. Fund, they have met the poor with teams and provisions generally about half way; and this labor of theirs amounts, in reality, to almost the entire expense of carrying and feeding them the whole distance, because they have to travel the distance twice over, which, if they come half way, makes a thousand miles there and back—the same distance as from Florence to Salt Lake. Thus, in effect, they have for several years past, carried and almost fed the whole poor that have gone one thousand miles. This is done out of mere benevolence to the journeying Saints; they don't do such things for themselves. If goods or machinery are sent for, they purchase trains and take them through the whole distance; and if we were there, and called upon to send a team, with provisions, half way, or to send means to purchase a team and provisions for the whole distance, we would rather decidedly adopt the latter course. It is true that many can send teams and provisions who would not have the money, and thus more is done than could be otherwise; yet the principle and expense is the same.

From the above it will be seen that measures should be entered into, if possible, to put a stop to this very heavy drain upon our brethren. It is to this purpose that we propose principally to devote our energies during the ensuing season.

It may be asked, will any hand-carts go from here this year? We answer, not of our fitting out, for the simple reason that hand-carts are not able to go through without assistance from Utah, and we have decided that we will not call upon them for help this season; we consider that they have enough on their backs already.

As it regards the settlements to be formed, one will be about one hundred miles west of Florence, and others will be made on the line of travel in locations to be designated by President Erastus Snow, who will principally direct this affair.

There will be not less than fifty able-bodied men in one settlement, and they must go prepared to build forts, and be well supplied with arms and ammunition to protect themselves against Indian depredations. Teams will also be required to take out provisions, seed, grain, and implements of husbandry, as well as to plow, haul timber, firewood, &c. It is not necessary, however, that all should have teams. A very early start in the spring will be made to one or two of the first settlements, in order that spring crops may be put in sufficiently early to mature in the incoming season.

It will be unnecessary to say to men of intelligence, that notwithstanding there will be some trouble attendant upon making these settlements, that it is a kind of labor that will be very remunerative, inasmuch as government and all the emigration which pass that route have to haul their supplies; they will much more readily purchase them on the spot, and pay remunerative prices, than haul them as they now do so great a distance. Independent, however, of pecuniary considerations, you will be doing good to your brethren and fulfilling your part in the kingdom of God.

The city of Florence will be the place of rendezvous for those who may be going, and President Snow will give all the council necessary for the outfit, organization, and general business. We would further say, that as Florence is rapidly building up, it will be a good place for many of our brethren to obtain labor in the spring, who may not be prepared to go to those settlements. We say, then, to the brethren, let your hands be strong, let us be up and doing, take hold with a firm hand and assist us in this enterprise; by so doing, you will not only be on your way to Zion and regularly in the harness; you will not only do good to yourselves pecuniarily, and be acquiring a vigorous, healthy and effective experience; but open an effectual door for the poor Saints; do more for their deliverance than you would in any other way; secure the approval of your heavenly Father, and bring the blessings of thousands on your head.

We did purpose to say something about THE MORMON; but as this article is already lengthy, we shall defer it until a future period.

Minutes of Council.

At a Council held at the house of Elder John Taylor, Brooklyn, N. Y., January 7, 1857, the following of the Twelve being present: P. P. Pratt, John Taylor, George A. Smith and Erastus Snow; the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That we concentrate our energies this year, in forming settlements, on or near the Platte River, on the route of our emigration, according to the instructions of President Young, and that we do not send any through but what are able to accomplish their journey without aid from Utah.

Resolved, That THE MORMON be continued, and that we all unite our influence in sustaining it, and that Elder John Taylor have the privilege of sending Elder William I. Appleby, or any other agent to any of the Churches of the United States, and calling upon individuals and churches for subscriptions and donations, and to use such means for that purpose as may be considered practical.

Resolved, That under existing circumstances we deem it inexpedient to revive the "Luminary."

Josiah Quincy Again.

JOSIAH QUINCY, JR., of Boston, delivered his old lecture on "The Mormons and their Prophet," on Tuesday evening, before the Mercantile Library Association of this city. A cotemporary says there was "a rather scant audience" to hear the lecture. We should have thought it strange if it had been otherwise. The notice of his lecture at Cincinnati was enough to give the chills to anybody unfortunate enough, like the doorkeeper and the washerwoman of the Association, to be obliged to listen to it. The Daily Times terminates a notice of his failure in the New York performance thus:

"The audience did not learn much that was wholly new about the prophet, but the lecturer kept them in good humor, and dismissed them satisfactorily."

"Kept them in good humor,"—of course, the man in the chair, to disguise his chagrin, had to smile, and the man at the door had to do the same, and the "scant audience" between them, not knowing what was up, but fearing it would be unfashionable not to do as the chairman did, laughed likewise; then Josiah laughed and "dismissed them satisfactorily." Who could doubt it?

News from Utah.

NOT having received our file of the Deseret News by the last mail, we are indebted to the Western Standard for the minutes of the October Conference, and to that and other papers we are likewise indebted for the following items:

President W. Woodruff, writing from G. S. L. City, Nov. 9th, says: "On the arrival of Elders Daniel Spencer, Franklin D. Richards and company at this place, President Young learned the exact situation of the emigration, at the dates the brethren passed the several camps; and although much help in teams and flour had been sent out early in the season, the President made it the first item of business before the Conference to raise flour, teams, wagons, teamsters, blankets and clothing to send to them: to this call there was a very liberal response. Subsequent calls have been made, and it is now believed there has in the neighborhood of two hundred and fifty teams gone out, and at the Conference call alone there were 26,688 lbs. of flour sent; so you perceive this season's emigration comes tolerably heavy on those of our brethren who are always on hand to help Israel."

From our telegraphic it will be seen that the weather on the plains has been unusually severe, and from what we can glean from Salt Lake correspondence it has affected the latter portion of our emigration considerably, till they were met by the assistance from Utah, alluded to above.

From a California paper we learn of a special Conference having been held at Salt Lake City, from October 18th to 20th,

The News says: "His Excellency Governor Young, accompanied by the Hon. H. C. Kimball, and J. M. Grant, Lieutenant General D. H. Wells, Messrs. J. Ferguson, L. Smith, J. Tobin, J. M. Barlow and others, left this city, on the 13th instant, on a visit to the Shoshone Indians, in the neighborhood of Forts Bridger and Supply and Green River. They expect to be absent some two or three weeks; and, in addition to exerting a salutary influence upon the natives in that region, their presence and counsel will greatly cheer the hearts of the incoming immigration, and nerve them for encountering the rugged Wahsatch mountains, the last barrier to these happy valleys." From a subsequent number of the News we clip the following: "On the morning of the 15th instant, and while encamped on East Kanyon Creek, en route for Green River, Gov. Young was suddenly seized with so severe an attack of illness that it was deemed unadvisable to prosecute the journey, and the party arrived in this city on the evening of the above date. Since then the Governor's health has improved rapidly, and is now in a good degree restored."

"Mr. C. R. Van Emman, Agent of the American Bible Society, arrived on the 25th inst. He is furnished with a large number of Bibles of various sizes and styles of binding, and in several languages, designed for distribution, both by gift and sale, in this Territory. In the lot are several large family Bibles which will doubtless be in special demand, not being so plenty among the people as the smaller sizes."

Mormonism in London.

ELDER J. D. ROSS, pastor of the London, Essex, Kent and Reading Conferences, writes from the English metropolis, Dec. 26:

"Mormonism in London is flourishing in good style at present. Our book and tract depot sustains itself this year, and has discharged some of its former obligations to the presiding authorities of the Church, by the amount of business it is now doing. We have now ready, for the use of the London Conference alone, twenty thousand copies of President Orson Pratt's new tracts, in the circulation of which we will employ about eight hundred and fifty tract distributors. We fully anticipate that—with the circulation of the printed Word and the diligent labors of an increased number of Elders, devoted entirely to the work of the ministry—the Truth will spread with greater rapidity than heretofore. For myself, I labor with much pleasure in the London Pastorate, as I am sustained with good men presiding over the Conferences."

[We are ever pleased to hear of the prosperity of the work and the increasing diligence of the Elders in disseminating the Truth, and cannot but wish an abundant harvest in return for the labors of the Priesthood. We certainly shall receive with pleasure and thanks the English papers Elder Ross proffers to continue sending to our office.—ED.]

Marine Disasters.

A SUMMARY of the losses sustained through marine disasters by the New York underwriters, during the year just closed, shows the enormous aggregate of some twenty-six millions of dollars. Probably they have never before amounted to so large a sum, and it is said that the pressure on the various companies has been so great that some have had to succumb entirely and retire from the field, while others had to strengthen their position by new subscriptions to their capitals.

Polygamy in Utah.

OUR readers will recollect an extraordinary account which appeared in the Bulletin, of the immense number of wives possessed by the heads of the Mormon Church and Legislature of Utah, and which account purported to be written by a correspondent of the San Francisco Herald in Utah Territory. We expressed some doubts at the time of the writer's statements. A correspondent of the Sacramento Union, writing on the subject, says:

As a Gentile, but lately from the Great Salt Lake settlements, where I spent several months, I may, perhaps, be allowed to correct the false statistics given, having been either personally, or by sight and reputation, acquainted with the individuals named.

Heber Kimball, Young's First Counselor, is slightly cross-eyed. He does not possess half the number of wives named in the table. It is doubtful if any one but himself can tell the exact number; but he has, it is said, more than Young or any other of the Mormon followers of polygamy. Wells is not cross-eyed, but has a slight defect of vision, and has only five wives. He is the business manager of the Mormon Church, and, as such, receives a moderate salary, for which he is largely a creditor, an unlucky occurrence, even with strict economy, if he possesses nineteen wives, which he does not. Carrington is a cripple only so far as the slow recovery from the severe attack of rheumatism renders him so, and only has two wives. He is editor of the Deseret News, the duties of which keep him too much confined for wife hunting, and was a colaborer with Capt. Stansburry, for which the latter deservedly eulogised him in his report. Pratt, one of the "Twelve," Woodruff, one of the "Twelve," Stoker, Farr, Snow, of the "Twelve," Harrington, Johnson and Smith, of the "Twelve," are not "crippled and near-sighted," nor have they the number of wives assigned them by the figures opposite their names. Whatever be Morely's age, he has the appearance of a man aged about 60 years I might go on and criticise the "House of Representatives" list in the same manner, but let one instance of each kind of misrepresentation suffice: Little is from New Hampshire, instead of "Boston, Mass." Benson is only 45 years of age, and is a far better looking man than Judge Drummond,* of Utah. Richards has four wives, instead of fifteen; his fourth, an accomplished English girl, was taken last Winter. I happened to descend the Ohio River in the same boat with her and her sister, and was daily regaled by the passengers with the information that the two girls were undoubtedly the wives of a silver-haired old Englishman, under whose protection they were emigrating.—[New York Tribune, Jan. 14.

* The correspondent's comparison will be better understood by our readers, when we add, that Judge Drummond is reputed to be the author of the report which we published two weeks ago, about the "cripples" and "near-sighted."—[ED.

California and Nicaragua.

THE George Law arrived here on Tuesday with the California mails of Dec. 20. The Supreme Court had decided that according to the Constitution of the State the Legislature had no right to contract debts over the sum of $300,000 without the direct vote of the people. The actual debt of the State at the present time is bordering on three and a half millions. Unless the people vote the whole responsibility the debts cannot be recovered.

Walker is reported at Rivas, joined by Gen. Henningsen, who, with his company, by last mail, was reported besieged in the Church at Granada. The filibusters are fortifying Rivas, and are strong in the hope of ultimate triumph. So say his friends.

Emigration.

THIS office will not send any P. E. Fund emigrants to Utah, during the year 1857. All the funds that the Company can command will be exhausted in discharging the heavy liabilities, incurred in sending out over two thousand souls, in the year 1856. The Saints will bear in mind that two thousand persons cannot be sent to Utah without incurring an expense of about eighteen thousand pounds sterling. It will probably require nearly two years from the present time, before the P. E. Fund Company will have discharged the debts contracted by last season's operations.

There were several persons last season who deposited with the P. E. Fund five pounds each, on condition that they should be emigrated in 1857. We are sorry to be under the necessity of saying to all such, that the state of the finances will not permit their emigration this season. In case any of these persons desire to withdraw their deposits, they are at liberty at any time to do so; but if they can let them remain in the office a year or two more, it will confer a great favor; and they shall be remembered among the first to be hereafter sent by the Fund.

The President of the P. E. Fund Company has sent us the names of some of the Saints whom he requests should be emigrated by the Fund during the coming year. We sent letters, notifying these persons of the President's request, hoping, at the same time we gave them the information, to have been able to send them; but we are now compelled to say to all those who have received such letters, that the Company will not have the means to forward them in 1857.

In relation to this subject, we give the following extract from a letter to us by Prest. Brigham Young, dated G. S. L. City, August 30, 1856.

"In regard to the Emigration per P. E. F. Company the ensuing year, we wish to say to you, not to borrow money to aid in the Emigration, and draw upon us, as has been the practice heretofore, with the view of our realizing funds from the debts of persons brought over; or in any manner from debts owing the Fund; for it is impossible for us to realize any money from this source; and the operations of the Company have absorbed everything in the shape of available means, for the last two years, which we can control in every department.

"We cannot stand this constant drain, without reimbursements from those who are owing the Fund. We are, therefore, necessarily obliged to operate exclusively within the resources of the P. E. F. Company, instead of borrowing, and then paying out of tithing money, as we have had to do under the existing practice. The stock and wagons are our only resources from the Fund, at this end of the route, except a donation once in a while. Last winter the stock died, and you are aware that wagons are unavailable in this market.

"We truly feel to assist the poor Saints to come home to Zion, and think that we have proven this by our work; but it is not wisdom to absorb every other interest, pertaining to the building up of the kingdom of God, in gathering the poor, which is only one branch of it.

"You are aware that the Woolen Manufactory has been lying in store houses in St. Louis, for years, and we have had to pay storage, amounting to thousands of dollars. It is our wish to bring this machinery across the plains, as it is now needed in this Territory for manufacturing purposes.

"We also desire to do all we can on the Temple, another year, as we have done nothing on it this; and we must have some supplies to assist this work. We are determined to nurse our general Church business yet a while."—[Millennial Star, Dec. 27, 1856.

Carson Valley.

From a letter, dated the 1st inst., written in Carson Valley, we have received recent intelligence from that region. The passage of the Sierra Nevada is now closed with snow for the winter. Mr. Thompson, who carried the express between California and Carson Valley on snow skates last winter, has commenced carrying the mail again twice a month. The families who lately emigrated from eastern Utah, are all in a comfortable situation for the winter; their houses are all built, and they have bread-stuffs enough on hand to last until next harvest. Pres. Orson Hyde left Wash-ho Valley early in November for Great Salt Lake City. His mill, which was put up in that valley, is in fine operation—it cuts six thousand feet in twenty-four hours.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE anniversary of Gen. Jackson's victory at New Orleans, in 1815, was celebrated with great eclat by the ancient Society of Tammany, in this city on the evening of the 8th inst. The triumph of Democracy in the late election being associated with the anniversary, brought out the elite of the 'unterrified' in great numbers. The assemblage at Tammany Hall was numerous and highly respectable, and well entertained: everything having been got up to be worthy of the double triumph.

The alleged corrupt influences at work in Congress is again before the public. In the House, last Friday, there was quite a scene. For some weeks a portion of the press of this city has been in full blast against land jobbing schemes, railroad bills, and the general plunder of Uncle Sam's homestead, said to be affected by the connivance of Representatives. The Times having been extra strong in its assertions and boasting of its power to prove, an honorable member from New York drew the attention of the House to the charges, causing the editorial alluded to to be read from the clerk's desk. Some were for investigating; others thought Mr. Raymond and his paper would be too much honored by their notice; and the charges were about to be dismissed, when Mr. Paine rose and declared on his personal knowledge that the charges were not without foundation, as he had been offered $1500 for his vote favorable to the Minnesota land bill. A great deal of indignation was manufactured and puffed off, which was at last considerably quenched by a resolution passing the House, calling for investigation. The Speaker has since appointed a committee to investigate and report. If "a full, true and particular account" is given of the examination, some rich disclosures and nice quibbling may be looked for. Since writing the above, we have learned that the investigation takes place with closed doors. Pity.

We see by the report of the Committee on Territories that they have not forgot their last year's recommendation to Congress about Polygamy. The Committee again recommends the subject for consideration. It is really astonishing to see how foolish some reputedly honest men make themselves. The progress of Mormonism may excite the envy of soi-disant christians, and they may feel very bad over the expose of their corrupt institutions, but it would be much more to their honor to repent and do right than to try and draw down the Mormons to their own level.

The City Council have voted two thousand five hundred dollars to defray the expenses attending the reception to be given to the English officers of the frigate which brings Capt. Hartstein and companions home again. Some dear boy in the council from the Emerald Isle, deeply tinged with the jaundice, feels very bad at anything like courtesy to these Englishers.

Contrary to the expectations of nearly every body, Mr. Simeon Cameron has been elected U. S. Senator for Pennsylvania, and Mr. Forney defeated. Fourteen Senators have since protested against the election of Mr. Cameron, because he did not receive a consurrent majority in each house; and because the Senate failed to comply with the law requiring the appointment of a teller and the nomination of candidates on the day before the meeting of the convention.

On Wednesday evening the famous Keystone Club of Philadelphia held an indignation meeting, holding up to execration certain democrats that voted for Mr. Cameron. A committee was appointed to prepare a memorial to the United States Senate to inquire into the legality of the election.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE report last week that the Hon. C. P. Villiers had been appointed English ambassador to Washington was not without foundation, but the last mail brings the announcement that he declines the honor. In spite, therefore, of the goodwill of the British government to make up with President Pierce, it is not unlikely that he may leave the White House before the successor of Mr. Crampton arrives.

Capt. Hartstein and the other American officers that took out the Resolute to England have been honored and feted to their heart's content. The English papers speak in the highest terms of their Yankee cousins and the after-dinner speeches of Capt. Hartstein, companions and American consuls show that Jonathan finds John Bull at the present moment a "tarnation" fine fellow.

Mr. Hugh Millar, editor of the Edinburgh Witness, a free church paper, and well known as a geologist, was found dead in his room on the morning of the 24th of December. He had been in the habit for some time previous of keeping a loaded revolver by his bedside for protection, as some persons had attempted to rob his museum. His friends think that he had risen during the night in a state of somnambulism, took the pistol, approached his bedroom door, and shot himself by accident. Mr. M. had been a working mason in the north of Scotland, and raised himself to a high position in society by his own self-educated talents.

There is now little or no doubt as to the intention of the government to despatch final expeditions in search of Sir John Franklin. They will probably consist of three parties, one overland, another via Behring Straits, and a third via Davis's Straits.

Prussia and Switzerland are making extensive preparations for hostilities. It is still held out as probable that some other power will step in and stop the fighting. Frederick William is trying to bully the republicans, but they flinch not one iota, and their enthusiasm for liberty and home sounds cheerily throughout their mountains and valleys. Next mail is expected to bring something definite about the war "to be or not to be."

The "Peace" Conferences were expected to meet before the end of December.

Recent advices from Vera Cruz shew that a terrific hurricane swept over the city and harbor on the 20th of December, during which the war steamers Guadalupe and Iturbide, the Mexican pilot boat Estrella, and the brig Nenuphar, of this port, were wrecked. Eighty-five persons—officers and crew—belonging to the Iturbide, were drowned.

Since Dr. Kane arrived in Havana, his family have had little hope of his recovery; but we are happy to say that the last news from that place (the 8th inst.) reports his health improving. The Doctor holds a high place in the esteem of his countrymen, who earnestly long to see him enjoy the honors his gallant conduct has richly won.

Correspondence of Eld Geo F. A. Spiller.

ST. LOUIS, DEC. 27, 1856.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE.

Since my letter of the 8th inst. to you I have visited the Caseyville and Du Quoin Branches.

Caseyville is in St. Clair county, Illinois, about 9 miles east from St. Louis. The branch numbers about thirty members, Elder Walter Roach, President. With the exception of two, the Saints are from Wales, and conduct their religious services in their native language. I endeavored to impress on their minds the necessity of becoming familiar with the English language, so that they might better read the revelations of God, the instructions of the Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve, given and published in the English language, as by the best translations, errors may creep in. Though the members testify that they know the work to be of God, yet they are not always in the best of harmony with each other; the gew-gaws of the world tickle some, while others are afflicted with the big head—I know,—I did,—and I can do;—however I believe that they will now go on right, and testify by their acts that they appreciate the knowledge they have received in the church.

Du Quoin is in Perry County, Illinois, about 100 miles south east from St. Louis. The Branch numbered about 30 members, generally in good standing, with the exception of three who are from Scotland. The Branch was without a President, and I have appointed Elder Thomas Smith to preside. He is a very excellent man, and free from the influence of cast iron creeds. His appointment was sustained unanimously, except one neutral. I have read somewhere that neutrality is branded with the curse of heaven; however, the Lord says,—So then because thou art lukewarm, neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." The brethren of this branch are very intelligent, sociable and affable.

The brethren of both these branches are coal miners, and earn from two to three dollars a day, sometimes more. Some of them, besides coal mining, raise cattle, pigs and fowls, and hence several of them are on a fair way of obtaining the sine qua non to travel West and realize the goal of their hopes, at no distant day. In my visits among the Saints I never fail to show the importance of as many Saints as possible subscribing for, and sustaining by other ways, that formidable bulwark of the church in the Western Country, The Mormon. Several have promised to send on their subscriptions to the office early. Occasionally I come in contact with a fossil Mormon, who has got so encumbered with this world's goods, that he dreads going to Utah for fear of knowing want, but who, had it not been for the kindness of some Mormon philanthropist, would yet have been, in all probability, eking out a miserable existence in the old country, and still be praying to God for temporal deliverance from bondage, oppression, wretchedness and penury. What a theme for philosophers! what a text for ecclesiastics! is the incongruence of humanity. O tempora! O mores!

An educational movement has taken place recently among the Saints at St. Louis. Every Tuesday and Friday evening the various classes of students meet in the basement of the Church. After the lessons are through every evening, a short lecture is given. President James H. Hart—who is the principal—gave a lecture on Geography, as initiatory. Two brethren were named, the evening I was present, one to lecture on Navigation, the other on Pneumatics and Hydraulics, on a subsequent evening. Some of the advanced scholars were named, to write an essay each, and to read it before the school, holding themselves subject to correction. A school for the Saints in St. Louis was "one thing needful," for many cannot read or write, and hence, not having these facilities, make but little progress in the knowledge of things pertaining to Eternal life. But now the way is open, to advance from the elementary steps in education, through all the ramifications of the sciences, fine arts and literature, which are but parts of the great whole—Theology. The man that will not cultivate his mind must expect ever to be confined to the scullery of existence. As a man advances in intelligence, so does he become more useful to his fellow man.

Affectionately yours,

GEORGE F. A. SPILLER.

Correspondence of Elder John F. Snedaker.

SCHUYLKILL HAVEN, Pa., Dec. 30, 1856.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.:—I take the present opportunity to inform you of my whereabouts, and proceedings. Agreeable to the appointment of Prest. Cannon, I have labored since our October Conference, chiefly among the branches of the Church in this, and adjacent counties; where, on account of peculiar circumstances, the Saints live in a somewhat scattered condition; being frequently obliged to move from place to place, so as to obtain employment; hence old branch organizations are frequently broken up, and new ones have to be effected, in order to give the Saints the privilege of enjoying the blessings, which flow from a regular organization, and proper observance of church discipline.

I have, therefore, been engaged in seeking out, rebaptizing, and organizing those Saints in this vicinity that were not recognized in any particular branch; and, in cheering and encouraging all, in our Holy religion, as well as in preaching the Gospel to strangers wherever opportunity offered.

A Conference has just been held in Minersville, of the several branches in this district, which is under the immediate watchcare of Elder James Sewell, a faithful and energetic Elder lately from England. The several branches were represented as being generally in good standing, and determined to live their religion, and assist in building up the Kingdom of God. There is a small decrease through emigration to the West.

So far as my observation extends, there is generally a good spirit existing among the Saints in this vicinity; but, a good many labor under great disadvantages. The greater portion have lately arrived here from Europe, and are unacquainted with the customs of this country, which has a tendency to prove all, and show who have embraced the Truth for the love of it, and who have come for other considerations.

At present some are also considerably embarrassed in their financial affairs, on account of the scarcity of employment, and the still greater scarcity of money in the winter season, (the majority being miners, their business is very dull in the winter season,) and others have suffered pretty severely from the swindling and bankruptcy of outsiders, by reason of which, many honest mechanics and laborers are frequently defrauded of large sums of their hard earnings.

I can, however, on the whole, truly say, that the Work of the Lord in this vicinity is in as prosperous a condition as could be expected under exisiting circumstances. There are every now and then some honest souls added to the Church. The Saints are rejoicing in the cause they have embraced. The servants of Satan are exerting every influence within their reach, to hinder the progress of Truth, and to injure those who have espoused its cause. Still, in spite of all their endeavors, its course is onward, and those poor malignant creatures might just as well think to stay the tide in its flood, or to withhold from the Sun his congenial and life-giving rays, as to deprive the people of God of the Knowledge, influence, and energy they possess, or, to stop the onward march of the Kingdom of God.

These things cause me to feel more thankful to my Heavenly Father every day. I praise His name for the blessings which I, in common with the Saints enjoy. I feel to raise my feeble voice wherever opportunity offers, in the proclamation of the glorious principles which the Lord has revealed, and restored again in this our day, through His prophet Joseph Smith; and what I most crave is strength of the Lord that I may be enabled to magnify my calling.

May the Lord bless you, Bro. Taylor, the Brethren with you in the office, and all His faithful servants everywhere, is the prayer of your humble servant,

JOHN F. SNEDAKER.

FOR THE MORMON.

Truth.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

The term "Truth" like all abstract words, is merely a relative one, that is to say, it exists comparatively, and shows the intimate connection or affinity between abstract or concrete things. A principle is comparatively true, signifies, it is true or correct in relation to a certain thing, from a certain point of view; as for instance, the average duration of human life is 40 years, this is a comparative or relative truth, without excluding however the possibility of people dying older or under that age; or, the mean temperature of July in New York, Philadelphia and Boston is generally 70 deg., without excluding however a lower or higher temperature. Nor is truth, generally speaking, confined to certain ages. The Grecian and Roman schools, the followers of the Academic sect, although long before the Christian era, possessed true principles, but they were limited, and only correct to a certain extent. The truth of the immortality of the soul existed long before Plato wrote his Phaedo—the principles of Galvanism existed before Galvani discovered it—the law of gravitation existed before the genius of Sir Isaac Newton brought it to light. From the above it is evident, that if neither Plato, Galvani or Newton had lived, those truths would have existed, only unknown to the world; hence we infer that truth is existing by itself and in itself, the validity of which does not depend upon the opinions, popularity or unpopularity of ages. Nor is truth comparatively confined to one particular country or place, but it is to be found, to a certain extent, throughout the world. From the northern regions, where grim winter is enthroned on gigantic icebergs, and the landscape is robed in eternal snow, down to the tropics, where the fields blossom with the beauties of a perennial spring, and the sun salutes the opening day, with an ardent and boundless blush, you will find monuments of arts and sciences, the intellectual hieroglyphics of man, manifesting thus the presence of some true principles, which are calculated to refine taste, and quicken the understanding. In a few years, by the enterprising genius of man, railways will encircle the globe with an iron girdle, the electric telegraph will operate in all latitudes, in fact the workings of the intellectual machinery of man are felt everywhere, and tend as far as human knowledge and experience is concerned, to open new fields of exploration and intelligence.

Truth is unchangeable and incontrovertible, that is to say, it can never be made a falsehood; you may pronounce it foolish, absurd; you may sneer and laugh at it, and use all your influence to overthrow it, but those arguments avail nothing. You may try to check its progress, but like a river when suddenly impeded and stopt in its course by a dam, it will swell till, by its own force, it breaks over or through the embankment and overflows the surrounding country. 4 times 4 is sixteen, this is correct, no matter how absurd and ridiculous it may appear to you. You may use all your eloquence, sophistry and influence, but you will never make 4 times 4 neither more nor less than sixteen. A person may say, nobody will contradict that, because it is a well known fact. This very same truth appears to the wild, uncultivated Hottentot, who has no conception of Arithmetic, just as incomprehensible, improbable and absurd as the principle, "Parallel rays falling obliquely on a plane mirror, are reflected parallel," may be to you if you are an entire stranger to the science of Optics. But your ridiculing, disbelieving and not comprehending it, would never alter that principle, it has been and will remain an incontrovertible truth through all eternity. The foregoing illustration shows, that Truth is eternal, independent, incontrovertible and invulnerable, and is neither confined to time nor space. Truth finds a congenial soil, where reason, virtue, honesty and humility hold their solemn offices; where moral irregularities, independent of rank, fortune and influence are punished, and justice has its sway. Truth does not exist on the gaudy trappings of fortune; it does not borrow its dignity from a plume of feathers; it does not exist where narrow contractedness, selfishness, hypocrisy, falsehood and abominations are triumphant; it does not exist where persons are the very vassals of their own domineering passions, and led captive by numberless temptations; it is not, where instead of sound reasoning, nothing but a disjointed huddle of absurd, narrow-minded ideas; where instead of saving principles, nothing but a disorderly jumble of crude conceptions is found, and where the most palpable delusions operate and impose upon the mind.

Providence, unsearchably wise, has introduced in the different departments of its vast creation principles, by which both the material and intellectual world are fructified, vivified and are partaking of a certain amount of intelligence and happiness, in proportion to the position which organic or unorganic bodies occupy in the scale of being. The heavy showers which are bursting forth from the angry clouds, lashing the plains and making the river foam; the gentle dew that steals down by degrees, and with imperceptible stillness, so that neither the nicest eye, nor the most delicate ear can detect it, and neither bruises the weakest, the most tender flower; the heavy and sullen concentration of electric fluids which precedes the outbreak of a storm, and results in a discharge of the superabundance of watery and electric elements, all these phenomena concur in certain beneficial ends, and are going on on certain true principles which are as eternal and unchangeable as the great Creator; but he who is a stranger to science, to the study of matter with respect to its general properties and laws by which it is governed, is ignorant of these secret and mysterious agencies, their nature and the reason or cause of things. In fact, there is an endless variety of truths working in the great repository of nature, so that in every object that meets the eye or ear, we may trace the operation of general causes, and the exemplification of general laws.

The question then next is, how are truths discovered? Why! in various ways; either by information, observation or testimony and reasoning. As remarked above, there are truths of which we were ignorant previous to their discovery; there are truths, the presence or existence of which we could anticipate, but not glean or infer from our own knowledge. For instance, we inform a man that to every action of one body upon another, there is an equal and contrary reaction; that glass is elastic; that the bulk of Saturn and his ring united, is more than 1000 times greater than the earth; that the attraction of gravitation is in proportion to the quantity of matter: this would be the ascertaining of truth by information or testimony. It is evident, that a man gets in possession of such matters of fact not through the direct medium of his mental exertions, but indirectly; that is to say, those above laws of natural philosophy were not revealed to him, through the mere workings of the inner-man, but through the interposition of another person who was more acquainted with those facts, though we have minutely to judge the possibility or impossibility, the probability or improbability of an assertion or proposition, so as to know what testimony to administer as a truth. Or, a person may get in possession of the above principles by his own observations, by reflecting on the reasons and causes of things, forming conjectures on the feasibility of certain laws, which may lead to experiments and inventions. Those observations concerning truth will be more useful the more we have data or facts to commence a chain of reasoning, from which we can make profitable conclusions or inductions. For instance, in relation to the power of steam. It is a well-known fact, that the lid of a boiler when full of boiling water, is forced upward. The reflective mind perceives here, that when water is heated to a certain degree, it becomes transformed into steam or other gaseous matter, on account of its expanding property, raises the lid of the boiler. After having from close observations ascertained that fact, a person might conclude that the same power could be used as a natural propeller in machinery, and this might lead to the invention of steam engines.

The ascertaining or eliciting of truth by reasoning, is entirely different from learning by information, testimony or observation. As soon as we enter the domain of reasoning, we are about to learn or discover something which is already contained in the stores of our knowledge, but which perhaps insignificant in itself, is unnoticed by us; hence, we often pass by a true principle without our knowingit. When we hear a principle advanced by way of sound reasoning, we comprehend it, although we never thought or heard of the proposition before, and we see it is true and correct and agree with it. Sometimes truth is so plain, that although a child might understand it, we cannot see it, or as the German adage says, "we cannot see the forest on account of the many trees; but as soon as our reasoning faculties are conscious of the truth advanced, we often feel egregiously our ignorance, and exclaim, "dear me how plain; I wonder why it did not strike me before!"

Truth, as remarked above, is only a relative term; that is to say, it is complete as far as it has been revealed unto us, and although we may think and speak of Truth in its fulness, it is only a beau ideal and imaginary, like a mathematical point. Through all the ages of eternity, we will never possess the Truth in its fulness; that is to say, have that knowledge which allows no farther intellectual and physical advancement in the scale of being, continually new fields of intelligence will open unto us, new principles will be discovered, the possession of which will lead us to higher spheres, to more exalted positions, and greater power, glory and happiness.

Thirty-fourth Congress.—Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9, 1857.

SENATE.

MR. SEWARD introduced a bill to expedite telegraphic communication for the use of the Government in its foreign intercourse.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of State in the discretion and under the direction of the President, to contract with any competent person or persons, or association, for the aid of the United States in laying down a submarine cable to connect existing telegraphs between the coast of Newfoundland and coast of Ireland upon the same conditions that the British Government has made or may make with the lately formed Atlantic Telegraph Company.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices.

The House bill for the payment of invalid and other pensions was passed.

Mr. Seward based his argument in favor of Mr. Harlan's right to a seat on the ground that while legislative acts require the concurrent votes of the two branches of the Legislature, the act of choosing a United States Senator was not a legislative act, but merely an additional duty which had been devolved upon the members of the Legislature. When they performed this duty, it was in joint convention, the individuality of the two houses being merged and lost in the joint body.

Mr. Stuart took the position that the election was unconstitutional, and the report of the Judiciary Committee to that effect well founded.

No question being taken the House adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed twenty-one private bills.

An adjournment was about being effected when Mr. Kelsey of New York, introduced a subject which caused much excitement. He presented it as a question of privilege; first causing to be read at the Clerk's table an editorial from the New York Times of the 6th inst., which charged members of Congress and lobby agents with gross corruption, mentioning the Minnesota Land bill in the connection and saying that evidence can be produced to carry conviction to every honest heart, and that the criminals should be driven from the high places which they have dishonored.

Mr. Kelsey remarked that the charges contained in this article appeared to have been based on a letter from this city to the Times. Under ordinary circumstances it would be a waste of time to notice articles of this character, appearing in newspapers, but the editor of the Times occupied a position before the country which entitled his statements to credit.

If he is in possession of the facts he therein charges, he should substantiate them before a Committee of this House, that members who may be guilty of such conduct should be known to the country. As the case now stands he (Kelsey) could neither vote for nor against a proposition without bringing himself directly under the charges in that article. If there exists such a combination, as is alleged, he wanted to know it, and have the facts go before the people. He concluded by offering the following:

WHEREAS certain statements have been published, charging the members of this House with entering into a corrupt combination for the purpose of passing and of preventing the passing of certain measures now before Congress, therefore

Resolved, That a Committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker, with power to send for persons and papers to investigate said charges, and that the Committee report the evidence to be taken, and what action in their judgment is necessary on the part of the House without unnecessary delay.

Mr. Paine—I scarcely know whether I ought to say anything or not; I know nothing about that editor or his journal; I know nothing about any communication made to it; I know not how the editor obtained the information; I know not whether it is true or false, but I do know there has been a proposition made in the House, by members of the House, on the subject,—(sensation and cries of "who is he; expose him;")—I shall not name the gentlemen;—(cries of "Down in front." "Stand out of the aisles." "We can't see.") I shall mention no member by name;—(A voice, "You ought to do it.") It was with feelings of indignation I heard the proposition;—(Impatient demands of "What was it." "Tell it.!.)—The reason why I did not announce it to the House was, that pending the organization of this body, when a member rose in his place and stated that a fellow member had made an attempt to tamper with him for his vote for Speaker, the only credit he received was that he was laughed at, and it was charged that he did not accept the proffered bribe because there was no such profitable place to be had. I say distinctly there is not a want of truth in the allegation contained in The Times article. A distinct proposition was made to me by a member of this House in regard to the Minnesota Land bill, and that fifteen hundred dollars would be given in consideration of a vote for that bill. If the proposed Committee shall be raised, and I am called on as a witness I shall give my evidence.

The House was in great excitement the remainder of the sitting. Some were very indignant, and seemed very desirous to expose the offender, whereupon the resolution of Mr. Kelsey was passed, with the following amendment from Mr. Campbell:

"WHEREAS, A member of this House has stated that this article is not wanting in truth." Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Jan. 10.

The Speaker announced that the Select Committee to investigate the alleged corruptions will consist of Mr. Kelsey of New York, rep.; Mr. Orr, of South Carolina, dem.; Mr. Davis of Maryland, American; Mr. Ritchie, of Pennsylvania, rep.; Mr. Warner, of Georgia.

Mr. Grow had a petition signed by fifteen hundred of the voters of Kansas, remonstrating against the right of Mr. Whitfield to a seat as the delegate from that Territory. He had been informed that a large number, similar to this, were on their way. He asked to have read the petition of Gov. Reeder, setting forth the reasons for contesting Mr. Whitfield's seat.

Objection was made, and the papers were referred to the Committee on Elections.

The bill authorizing payment to the owners of the schooner Gnonet, of Massachusetts, of the amount of fishing bounties they would have been entitled to receive had the voyage been completed, gave rise to a long debate, involving the propriety of such bounties, when the bill passed by a vote of 80 against 70. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 12.

The consideration of the Iowa election case was resumed. The Senate adopted the resolution reported by the Committee on Judiciary declaring Mr. Harlan not entitled to a seat as Senator, by the following vote: Yeas 28, Nays 18. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Stanton, of Ky., under a suspension of the rules, offered a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of re-organizing the Circuit and District Courts of the United States in such a manner as to equalize the population and business of the several circuits and districts, and give to all sections of the confederacy their equal and just representation in the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Stanton showed the inequality now existing, and urged the importance of such reform on the ground that all sections should have a just and fair judicial representation.

Mr. Keitt, of S. C., inquired whether, if the Supreme Court pronounced the Fugitive Slave law constitutional, the gentleman would carry it out.

Mr. Stanton replied, if the court decide that Dred Scott is a slave, he would acquiesce in that judgment, but would not, in obedience to the court, renounce his opinion as to the Fugitive Slave law.

The resolution was passed.

Mr. Benson, of Me., reported back the Senate bill amendatory of the act to promote the efficiency of the navy, which provides for the restitution, of such dropped, furloughed or retired officers, as may be favorably reported on through Courts of Inquiry, the finding being approved by the President.

The bill was passed without amendment by a vote of 159 against 50.

Mr. Orr, of S. C., from the select committee to inquire into the alleged corrupt combination of members, reported a resolution enlarging the field of their inquiry from the commencement of the present Congress, instead of confirming them to measures now pending, and asking to be empowered to employ a clerk.

The resolution was adopted. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 13.

On motion of Mr. Seward, a copy of the proceedings of yesterday, declaring Mr. Harlan not entitled to a seat, were ordered to be transmitted to the Governor of Iowa.

Mr. Collamer reported back from the Post Office Committee, without amendment, the Submarine Telegraph bill, and it was made the special order for to-morrow.

There was a long debate in the Senate on the House bill for the relief of Mary Reeside, proposing to pay her about one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, being a balance due from the government to her late husband, for his services in carrying the mails, with interest from December 1841; The case has been before Congress for twelve or fifteen years, and was favorably reported on by the Court of Claims. The bill passed by a vote of 28 against 15, after an amendment striking out the "allow ances for interest." Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Morgan offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Commerce to inquire and report what additional means, if any, are necessary to prevent loss of life and preservation from shipwrecks on the Long Island and New Jersey coasts.

The House resumed consideration of the President's message, and after some criticism was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

A bill for reducing the duty on imports was taken up in committee. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 14.

The Senate passed the House bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy.

Mr. Benjamin reported a bill making appropriations for the improvement by contract of the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio and Arkansas rivers.

The House bill providing for the settlement of the claims of officers of the Revolution was advocated by Mr. Bell, of New Hampshire, and opposed by Mr. Clay. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A large number of bills on different subjects were introduced by various gentlemen. Among them was one by Mr. Carlile equalizing grants of lands to the several States.

One by Mr. Letcher, establishing a branch mint in the city of New York.

By Mr. Colfax, abolishing the duty on sugar.

By Mr. Woodworth, for a railroad and telegraph to the Pacific.

By Mr. Herbert, granting alternate sections of land to California for railroad purposes; and also a bill providing for the sale of surveyed land in that State.

By Mr. Whitfield, for the erection of public buildings and military roads in Kansas.

By Mr. Wood, for one or more railroads from the Mississippi to the Pacific, and one by Mr. Florence, equalizing army, navy and marine pensions.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Tariff bill. Adjourned.

Large Fire at Halifax.

HALIFAX, Jan. 2, 1857.

A fire broke out here yesterday, at four o'clock in the afternoon, in the vast building on the corner of Hollis and Prince streets, extending from thence south to the residence of Dr. Allan, crossing Hollis street, and burning nearly the whole block between that and Granville street, including St. Matthew's Presbyterian church. Twenty buildings were consumed and thirteen partially destroyed. Two entire blocks, from Bedford row to Barrington street, were gutted. The scene is most desolating. The streets are filled with goods and furniture. Several persons were seriously injured, but no lives were lost. The estimated loss is $100,000.

Important from the Plains.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12, 1856.

The St. Joseph correspondent of the Republican, under date of 3d inst., says that the weather on the Plains has been more severe than ever known before. The surveying parties have been disabled and driven in. General Matthews reports a rumor that two United States surveying parties have been murdered by Camanche Indians in the southwestern part of Kansas, and also that only a portion of another party had returned from Western Kansas, the remainder it is believed having been frozen to death. The thermometer at St. Joseph stood at twelve below zero; and the ice in the Missouri was twenty inches thick.

Large Fire in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 13, 1857.

The lumber yards of Messrs. Herbert, Davis & Co., and Garrett & Durbin, on the Schuylkill canal, were destroyed by fire this morning. The loss is about $80,000. The fire in both cases was the work of an incendiary.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions, contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Try It Again.

BY ELDER JOHN LYON, OF UTAH.

SHOULD the changes in life, like the tide's ebb and flow,
Be ceaseless and varied in form,
And the frail bark of life in a moment forego
Its reck'ning amidst the dark storm;
Stand firm to the helm, and close furl each white sail,
While the tempest sweeps over the main;
There is hope in the wind, though destructive the gale;
'Twill calm, and we'll try it again, again!
'Twill calm, and we'll try it again!

There ne'er was a valley but hill-tops appear—
Nor a storm that's not spent to a calm;
Nor a pain without pleasure, a hope without fear,
Nor a wound but has always a balm!
When the clouds of adversity gather around,
And our friends turn their backs in disdain,
Though the world should conspire all our hopes to confound,
Let us up and go try it again, again!
Let us up and go try it again!

The fears of sad parting, the pangs of regret,
The sighs of fond hope, or dull care,
Are feelings implanted to make us respect
The death-sting of hopeless despair!
Yes, the tear-drop of sorrow may darken the eye,
Like the sunbeams obscured by the rain,
But the clouds will disperse over hope's gloomy sky,
And cheer up our prospects again, again!
And cheer up our prospects again!

Then why should we shrink, though the chances of fate,
Are mingled in life's bitter cup!
'Tis a mixture designed by kind Heaven to elate,
And strengthen us ne'er to give up.
Then come weal, or come woe, let whatever betide,
Let us run, for the prize we'll obtain;
Though the race may be lost by the swiftest who ride,
Let us up and go try it again, again!
Let us up and go try it again!

England and America.

It is now exactly twelve months since the news from the other side of the Atlantic clearly intimated the possibility of a war between England and the United States. The American President had written a message which fully revealed the nature of the misunderstanding between our Foreign Office and his own Cabinet. That Message was rather prematurely delivered and transmitted to England so as to enlighten members of the Legislature before Parliament met, and the impression which its perusal conveyed to the public mind in this country was, that the dispute about the enlistment question and the affairs of Central America had grown so serious that nothing but mutual forbearance and concession could prevent a rupture between the two most closely related nations in the world. And then it was that plain and common-sense people, seeing that the dispute with Russia was on the eve of being adjusted, remarked that they could not understand why we should give up one war as if for the pleasure of commencing and carrying on another.

But now the scene has entirely changed. One short twelve-months is a period long enough to work wonders in international relations; and so we have another Presidential Message from the same country, and from the same pen, informing us that the danger has passed away. But something else has occurred at the same time, and it is to this we invite special attention. The government of the United States have indeed given us a demonstration of their power, for they have run a ship of war into Portsmouth, and have succeeded in capturing the Town Council of that ancient borough. But fortunately this demonstration of American power is on the side of good will and not on the side of mischief, and therefore the ship to which we allude entered with British colors flying as high as those of the United States; and while commanded by an American captain and managed by an American crew, the vessel turns out to be truly British; and we are glad to say that in the course of yesterday it was boarded and taken possession of by no other than the British Queen herself. But then her Majesty encountered no resistance. On the contrary, the ship had been dispatched from the United States as a present from the American Republic to the Queen of England.

The Resolute had gone forth to the Northern seas on a mission of humanity; that mission had failed and to save their own lives the crew had been compelled to abandon the craft It then drifted nearly a thousand miles until it fell into the hands of American fishermen; whereupon the Legislature of the United States, inspired by one of those momentary impulses that prove human goodness far more than refined and labored argumentation, voted money to purchase and repair a vessel that had been rendered sacred by its efforts to save and not to kill; and in the name of twenty-six millions of people of the Anglo-Saxon family, it is now presented to the highest lady in our own land as the representative of the people of England. That lady goes forth promptly to accept from an American officer this "material guarantee" of peace and good will, and in the name of her country to commend an act so considerate and so generous.

Therefore it is good time now between England and America. The old scores are cleared off, the old jealousies are forgotten and the newspaper recriminations are put aside. Can we doubt that the English people to a man will reciprocate this graceful homage which America pays to our navy when engaged in an enterprise of benevolence? There never was an embassy which reached our shores that so much demands from us every demonstration of esteem and affection. The gift of the Resolute is peculiarly a mark of approval on the part of the United States, of that principle of humanity which has dispatched expedition after expedition in search of those who are lost, and it is impossible to forget that America has herself aided us in this undertaking—not from any selfish or commercial considerations, but as an ally in the cause of mercy. Our Admiralty officials appear fully to have appreciated the disinterested exertions of at least one American who made great sacrifices to discover the missing crews of the Erebus and Terror, for Mr. Crampton was instructed to present a silver vase to Mr. Henry Grinnel, through whose exertions the American expedition in search of Sir John Franklin was undertaken and executed.

But the conduct of America in respect to the purchase, the equipment, and the presentation of the Resolute is much more complimentary to England, and it requires at our hands a much higher appreciation. For that act of the Congress at Washington which voted $40,000 for this purpose was, in the truest sense, the act of a nation, seeing that the House of Representatives is selected by that manhood suffrage which is exercised by millions of people. The Resolute is not the gift of a minister, the compliment of a President, or the overture of a diplomatist, but the deliberate and spontaneous presentation of a national assembly that came to an unanimous vote; and it is transmitted to us in spite of all that aggravating rebuke and misrepresentation which only a few months ago had been poured forth from the columns of our English newspapers against the designs, the Government, and the institutions of the United States. We can scarcely doubt, under such circumstances, that the Admiralty will exert itself in more ways than one to prove to America how much her gift is regarded.

We cannot dismiss this agreeable topic without one reference to the achievements of peace, as compared with the triumphs of war. We never forget the doctrine that "peace has its victories no less than war;" and the last victory of peace is, undoubtedly this gift of America to England, and it is of such a character that the conflict of battle can create no opportunity for deeds so generous and so great. The gift is a tribute bestowed by one nation upon another out of regard to the memory of those who perished, not on fields of conquest, but in the effort to extend scientific discovery and enterprise. It is a tribute, moreover, bestowed upon the courage and humanity of those who planned an undertaking to rescue a crew that had disappeared in this effort; and no such tribute, we need scarcely say, could ever have been elicited, had the Resolute been employed in fighting against the Americans, or engaged in any pursuit less selfish than that for which she left our English shores.—London Star.

The Coinage Law.

An Act relating to Foreign Coins and to the Coinage of cents at the Mint of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the pieces commonly known as the quarter, eighth and sixteenth of the Spanish pillar dollar, and of the Mexican dollar, shall be receivable at the Treasury of the United States, and its several offices, and at the several Post Offices and Land Offices, at the rates of valuation following—that is to say, the fourth of a dollar, or piece of two reals, at twenty cents; the eighth of a dollar, or piece of one real, at ten cents; and the sixteenth of a dollar, or half real, at five cents.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said coins, when so received, shall not again be paid out or put in circulation, but shall be recoined at the mint. And it shall be the duty of the director of the mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary and proper to secure their transmission to the mint for recoinage, and the return or distribution of the proceeds thereof, when deemed expedient, and to prescribe such forms of account as may be appropriate and applicable to the circumstances; provided, that the expenses incident to such transmission or distribution and of recoinage shall be charged against the account of silver profit and loss, and the net profits, if any, shall be paid, from time to time, into the Treasury of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all former acts authorizing the currency of foreign gold or silver coins, and declaring the same a legal tender in payment for debt, are hereby repealed; but it shall be the duty of the director of the mint to cause assays to be made, from time to time, of such foreign coins as may be known to our commerce, to determine their average weight, fineness and value, and to embrace in his annual report a statement of the results thereof.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the standard weight of the cent coined at the mint shall be seventy two grains, or three-twentieths of one cent troy, with no greater of deviation than four grains in each piece; and said cent shall be composed of eighty eight per centum of copper and twelve per centum of nickel, of such shape and device as may be fixed by the director of the mint, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the coinage of the half cent shall cease.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Treasurer of the mint, under the instruction of the mint and with the approval of the Secretary of that Treasury, shall, from time to time, purchase from the bullion fund of the mint the materials necessary for the coinage of such cent piece, and transfer the same to the proper operative officers of the mint to be manufactured and returned in coin. And the laws in force relating to the mint and the coinage of the precious metals, and in regard to the sale and distribution of the copper coins, shall, so far as applicable be extended to the coinage herein provided: decided, that the net profits of said coinage, ascertained in like manner as prescribed in the second section of this act, shall be transferred to the Treasury of the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to pay out said cent at the mint in exchange for any of the gold and silver coins of the United States, and also in exchange for the former copper coins issued; and it shall be lawful to transmit parcels of the said cents, from time to time, to the assistant treasurers, depositaries, and other officers of the United States, under general regulations proposed by the director of the mint, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as he may, from time to time, establish, shall have power to authorize and require medals to be struck at the mint for the several States, incorporated companies and societies that may apply for them, at a reasonable price for the labor and materials, striking two copies, in bronze, for a cabinet of medals to be kept in the mint; and out of the profits obtain duplicate copies, in bronze, for said cabinet, of all medals which have been struck at the mint. The accounts of the medals shall be rendered quarterly, and the profits paid into the treasury, and appear in the annual reports.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the director of the mint shall make his annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury up to the thirtieth of June in each year, so that the same may appear in his annual report to Congress on the finances.

Passed the Senate April 16, 1856.

Passed the House, with amendments, Jan. 15, 1857.

The Mormons and the Principles of Self-Government.

The American Government is founded upon the belief that the people are capable of conducting their own political affairs, and managing all the public institutions of the country. No other Government, of any note, on the face of the earth, acknowledges the fact, if fact it be, as we all believe in this country. The other Governments regard men politically as minors or lunatics, to whom the Government acts as a guardian. So thrones are heirlooms and descend from sire to son regardless of the qualifications or natural capacities of the heir; whether he be a Nero or Trajan, an Alfred or a John, a Bomba of Naples or a Peter the Great; whether he be a wise and benevolent ruler or a bloody and despotic tyrant. The one system of government leaves the people to conduct their own affairs, merely protecting them in their rights from aggression without or within; the other takes everything out of the hands of the people. The government makes the railroads and deals in stocks; is the chief contractor for public improvements and the leading gambler on the Bourse. It is not necessary to say which system of government is right; the decision was made when the foundation stone of this Republic was laid; and no one will venture to deny the abstract right of the people to self-government or their capacity for its duties; especially in a country like ours where free speech prevails to the extent of its broadest license, and where thought is free and untrammelled and under no compulsory political or theological despotism.

But there are larger numbers of insiduous politicians whose faith in the virtue and intelligence of the people is not a whit higher or firmer than that of Bomba or Napoleon the Third, and who are laboring zealously but indirectly to take the management of political affairs out of their hands and vest it in the government. They are not yet prepared to usurp this power as regards the States, not having made sufficient inroads on popular opinion; but confine the application of their principles to the territories. They claim the right of Congress to exclude slavery and polygamy from the territories by law. They expect to succeed in this assault upon the principles of free government by acting upon the popular feeling against both these institutions and blinding the people as to the instrumentality they intend to use as any means may be justified by such a worthy end.

The view which they take of human nature and of the present generation of mankind brings them to the belief that although a Territory may be left to freedom and slavery alike, equally open to both, and with its conditions of agriculture and climate and the source whence its population is to be derived, all favoring free labor; yet slavery will be planted there. In other words, that slavery is a stronger principle than freedom; and that the people will revert to barbarism unless prevented by the strong arm of the law. The whole history of this country falsifies the gloomy prediction. Since the formation of the government, slavery has not extended to one foot of soil which was then free. The number of slave States has diminished, while the number of free States has grown from one or two to sixteen. There are Territories where dozens of free States are ripening, and no slave States are ever likely to apply for admission, unless perhaps Cuba may be acquired some time or other, for Kansas will undoubtedly be a free State if the shriekers are prevented from making it a slave State which they will endeavor to do to afford new ground for agitation.

So with polygamy. Not one in a thousand desires to see either slavery or polygamy extended to the Territories, or would not vote against such a consummation. But if the people who are to inhabit the new States are not fit to be entrusted with these questions as the inhabitants of the original States were, our whole theory of government is a failure or a fraud, and the sooner we give it up and adopt the monarchical or autocratic plan and leave the whole management of affairs to the government the better. We have just the same right to demand from Congress a law to punish and prevent lottery in Maryland, as polygamy in Utah, or slavery in Kansas. We have prohibited lotteries by severe penalties, while they build churches by its proceeds in Baltimore. If we are responsible for slavery or polygamy in other states or territories, we are equally so for lottery or anything else which we think wrong.

We believe that free institutions and sound morality will result from popular intelligence and virtue. In Maryland a law has been passed prospective abolition of lottery. In Utah polygamy is rotting out already. Are we afraid that a community where the sexes herd like beasts of the field, or where men are held in bondage will not ultimately yield before the moral pressure of free labor and speech; and the monogamous marriage relation with its pure and holy affections and sacred family circle? We believe the tendency of human progress is in the direction of freedom and morality. If, however, the opposite view be correct and mankind are sure to retrograde backwards to slavery and swinish debauchery, no law can prevent it. But the past belies these gloomy predictions; the same principle of self-government under which our country has attained its eminence will ultimately extinguish polygamy and prevent the spread of slavery; not by repressive laws but by the expansion of virtue and morality.—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Important Intelligence from China.

Death of one of the Rebel Leaders.

The slaughter of the Eastern King has been rumored, and finally announced by a demi-official note. These accounts differ widely, and would seem to have reached Shanghai through different channels. Early in the week it was rumored here and there, that there had been a "row" between the rebel leaders. Next it was reported that the Eastern King had been beheaded, and that more than ten thousand rebels had fallen by each other's hands.

The affray, it is said, began between the Eastern and Northern Kings—the former demanding supplies of gunpowder which the other refused to grant. From words they came to blows, and almost the whole city of Nanking was soon in an uproar.

The demi-official note we are not able to publish; it purports to have come from the magistrate of the city of Tanyang, and the facts detailed to have been gained by a trusty spy, to the effect that there had been an old quarrel between the eastern and northern kings, that the eastern had installed his son in place of western, whose death he had caused some three or four years ago, and that now he was plotting to usurp the throne of the heavenly king, viz.: Hung Siutsiuen. It goes on to state that Yang Siutsing had been siezed, condemned, and his body drawn asunder by five buffaloes—one being fastened to his head, one to each arm and one to each leg, and then heavy rockets set on fire at their tails; that his whole family had been put to death; and, moreover, that the Imperial troops, under Chang Kwoliang, were on their way, as far as Keuyung, to recover Nanking.

Nanch-ang, the capital of Kiangse, is, we hear, very closely invested by the insurgents, and must, it is believed, soon fall into their hands.

Tanyang, by latest accounts from the north, was in the possesion of the insurgents, Chang Kwoliang in person being in command.

EARTHQUAKE IN CHINA—DEATH OF A SON OF THE EMPEROR.

The Montieur de la Flotte, of Dec. 3, describes, on the authority of a private letter from China, the destruction of the town of Yoo-Tching, on the Northwestern frontier of the Celestial Empire, by an earthquake, on the 17th of August. Several days previously some shocks of earthquakes were felt throughout the southern districts of the province of Pe-Tchi-Li, and the superstitious terrors of the people were dreadfully excited. The 16th of August passed quietly, but at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the next day came a tremendous and irresistible shock, which continued for two minutes, being at first felt to move horizontally in the direction of from east to west, and presently changing from north to south. The town of Yoo-Tching, where it was most violently felt, and several of the neighboring villages were reduced to ruins, and some hundreds of people lost their lives. This town was a favorite summer residence of the Chinese grandees, and the Prince Taouk Long, the present Emperor of China's youngest son, is believed to have perished, together with the mandarin who governed the province, and many officers of state, in a sumptuous palace of marble and porcelain erected about four years ago in the most aristocratic suburb of the town. This unfortunate prince is said to have been the favorite of his royal sire, to have been distinguished by many virtues and accomplishments, and so precocious in learning, that in 1854 he was appointed by the Emperor the "supreme chief of the class of literati," which erudite profession comprises in China about half a million of persons, forming the academical and official aristocracy of the empire, and privileged with a monopoly of all employments in the civil service. —[China Herald.

Little Kindnesses.

Brothers, sisters, did you ever try the effect which little acts of kindness produce upon that charmed circle which we call home! We love to receive little favors ourselves, and how pleasant the reception of them makes the circle! To draw up the arm chair and get the slippers for father; to watch if any little service can be rendered to brother; to help brother; to assist sister; how pleasant it makes home!

A little boy has a hard lesson given him at school, and his teacher asks him if he thinks he can get it; for a moment the little fellow hangs down his head, but the next he looks brightly up.

"I can get my sister to help me," he says. That is right, sister; help little brother, and you are binding a tie round his heart that may save him in many an hour of dark temptation.

"I don't know how to do this sum, but brother will show me," says another little one.

"Sister, I've dropped a stitch in my knitting; I tried to pick it up, but it has run down, and I can't fix it."

The little girl's face is flushed, and she watches her sister with a nervous anxiety, while she replaces the "naughty stitch."

"O, I am so glad!" she says, as she receives it again from the hands of her sister, all nicely arranged. "You are a good girl Mary."

"Bring it to me sooner next time, and then it won't get so bad," said the gentle voice of Mary. The little one bounds away with a light heart to finish her task.

If Mary had not helped her, she would have lost her walk in the garden. Surely it is better to do as Mary did than to say, "O, go away and don't trouble me;" or to scold the little one all the time you are performing the trifling favor.

Brothers, sisters, love one another—bear with one another. If one offend, forgive and love him still; and whatever may be the faults of others, we must remember that, in the sight of God, we have others as great, and perhaps greater than theirs.

Be kind to the little ones; they will often be fretful and wayward. Be patient with them and amuse them. How often a whole family of little ones are restored to good humor, by an elder member proposing some new play, and perhaps joining in it, or gathering them round her while she relates some pleasant story!

And brothers, do you think because you are stronger, it is unmanly to be gentle to your little brothers and sisters? True nobleness of heart and true manliness of conduct are never coupled with pride and arrogance.

Nobility and gentleness go hand in hand; and when I see a young gentleman kind and respectful to his mother and gentle and forbearing to his brothers and sisters, I think he has a noble heart.

Brothers, sisters, never be unkind to one another; never be ashamed to help one another; never be ashamed to help any one; and you will find, that though it is pleasant to receive favors, yet it is more blessed to give than to receive.—[Sabbath School Advocate.

Ideas.

How few are there who properly conceive, and appreciate the power of ideas, and the way in which they and they alone shape the great business transactions of the world. Thousands who realize fortunes by carrying out the ideas of others imagine that they are the only benefactors of the human race, they handle and collect and dispose of solids and fluids, which are in bales, boxes, casks or hogsheads, and imagine that this is the greatest of occupations, because they so frequently become wealthy by the operation; they look at genius as a shadowy and unsubstantial possession, not capable of being itemized, recorded in a journal, or carried out in a ledger. They consider brains as an unlucky sort of inheritance, and one that does not pay well; indeed, they have a sort of pity for those persons who are particularly talented and clever, and ask with an air of commiseration, "What under the sun do these people do to obtain a living?"

They little know that they are reaping the rewards of the very wit and ingenuity they despise; they are in fact, without knowing it, pack-horses to carry the burdens which men of genius have laid upon their backs, and they owe all their prosperity to the employment of an inferior tact of their own. The rich merchant who sells cotton goods, is after all indebted to the poor artist who invented the machine which weaves and spins his commodities. Whose ideas are those which fill with volumes the shelves of booksellers and publishers, who give the paper maker endless employment in the fabrication of the pages on which thought is to be impressed. They are those men of genius and study, who in the elaboration of a great, a noble, or a useful sentiment, set whole communities at work, impel the wheels of industry, and change the fate of nations.

One cannot look around without perceiving that ideas control the world. There is nothing done but it originated in the mind of some reflecting person. Literary labors are always of the highest importance, because they are intimately connected with the creation and transmission of ideas. The newspaper press, which keeps the world in acquaintanceship, is but the expression of the minds of those who look and think, and give utterance to their thoughts, and yet how little is appreciated as it should be, that great mental power!

There are no laborers in the great field of human exertion who deserve more of mankind than these laborers in the vast and rich mines of thought, and yet there are but few of the world's workers who are so illy rewarded as literary men. Authorship has been likened to the labor of the silk-worm, in which the life of the insect is exhausted while producing the shining threads which others turn to profit. May a time speedily come when the literary laborer shall be justly appreciated, and find reward in pudding as well as praise.

Questions for a Wet Sunday.

If it were any other day, would I be kept at home by the weather?

Did I ever stay away from my business, from a party, from an amusement, for such a rain or snow as this?

If it were a public meeting for some other purpose than divine worship, would I think it too bad a day to go out?

Would I go if I could make or save a dollar by it, or gain a customer?

If I am afraid of spoiling my best clothes, had I not better go in my common dress, than lose the benefit of the meeting, and neglect my duty?

Have I not overcoat, and overshoes, and umbrella, that will keep me from taking cold, and preserve my Sunday dress from injury?

Am I not nearer to the church than many who are never kept away by the bad weather?

If any one should find an excuse for absence as easily as I do, what would be the appearance of our churches on the Lord's day?

Is it not a dishonor to my Maker, if for reasons that would not influence me in worldly matters, I keep from the stated worship of the sanctuary?

Is not a wet Sunday at home, a more dreary day than one that is diversified by going out to church?

Am I willing that my children should learn by my example that they may go to school, to market, to store, to shows, in all weather—but not to church?—Exchange.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 24, 1857.

The Mormon.

By a reference to the minutes of a council, held by four of the Twelve, which was published in last week's paper, it will be perceived that it is the intention to continue the publication of THE MORMON another year. Coupled with this announcement are some remarks in relation to the Twelve unitedly engaging to sustain it, and to the employment, by us, of an agent who shall be authorized to travel in all the Churches in the United States to obtain subscriptions and donations for its support. This may to some appear a very singular announcement, particularly to those who are in the habit of considering the publication of a paper as a lucrative affair. Those conversant with such matters, however, know better. It will unquestionably be news to many to be informed that for the last two years, exclusive altogether of any remuneration for our services, the paper has not more than half paid the nett expenses of publishing, which will average weekly about one hundred and ten dollars. The deficiency has been supplied by contributions, donations, and by means for which we stand individually responsible; and, as near as we are able to state, this deficiency is in the neighborhood of twenty-five hundred dollars for the last two years.

We have received liberal donations from several gentlemen who are not members of our Church, and were it not for a delicacy on their part, we should be most happy to mention their names.

Many of the brethren have also stepped forward and contributed with a liberal hand, and some of them whose circumstances would hardly afford it. To all such we tender our thanks, for we know how to appreciate the warm breath of friendship in a cold, chilling world. To those who, like the Priest and Levite, have been so much engaged in the pursuits of self and self-interests, that they could not find time to investigate the matter, we have nothing to say, and from them we have no favors to ask. As we have before said, if it was speculation that we were after, our thoughts would have gone in another channel. Nothing short of a firm conviction that we were doing our duty would have made us embark in it; and nothing short of that would make us continue it. We do not like to publish a paper, but naturally are averse to it. We knew before we started, as well as we do now, the disadvantages under which we should labor. We well knew the spirit of deep, undying hatred that exists in the hearts of the human family against Mormonism. We knew that this generation is full of lying, and that we should have to cope with floods of falsehood and slander. We knew that, pecuniarily speaking, it would be a profitless, sinking affair. We embarked in it, therefore, with our eyes open; "but we came not to do our own will, but the will of those who sent us." Nothing would, then, have given us greater pleasure than for somebody else to embark in it instead of us; and nothing would now give us greater pleasure than to resign it. We never entered on a mission with so much reluctance. We never engaged in one where we were so disagreeably situated, financially and otherwise; and we never shall be more pleased than when we resign it. We have spent two years of time in it, and will give that and two thousand dollars to anyone who will take it off our hands. It may be asked, are you sorry that you embarked in it? No. We should do the same thing again if called upon, but we would not do the same thing again for ourself for ten thousand dollars. We do not wish here to be misunderstood; we have nothing to recant or alter that we have written; there is not one particle of vacillation in our system in relation to these matters. The principles we have advanced are the eternal truths of heaven; and we are as much now, as we ever were, at the defiance of all the combined intelligence of this world to controvert them.

We are extremely averse to either complaining, begging or dunning, and whatsoever other errors we may have committed our readers have not been much troubled with dunning articles, or complaints of poverty. We have now none to make; our object is not pence, or we should pursue another course. We have no lamentations nor pitiable stories to tell; we simply state facts, believing that when the case is known, there will be sufficient manhood found among the brethren to step forward and help us to bear the burthen. We ask no odds of whiners and complainers, and want nothing from them; all the assistance we ask is that which a full, free and generous heart dictates. We do think, however, that if we devote our time and talents for their good, that no right feeling Saints will wish us to bear their pecuniary liabilities while doing it.

In the above we have desired to have a plain talk with our brethren. We think we shall not be misunderstood. And now, having said so much, we have two or three things to propose.

We wish in the first place, to call upon all Presiding Elders of Conferences and Branches throughout the States to lay the matter seriously before the brethren over whom they preside, and to urge upon them the necessity of subscribing to sustain THE MORMON in preference to any other paper, and let as many yearly subscribers be obtained as possible from every district and branch throughout the country; let clubs be formed wherever there is a church, and the money be forwarded immediately. Let the travelling Elders, who may be laboring, use all their influence, and let all friends of the cause do the same.

We have in some districts here weekly subscriptions wherein persons engage to contribute so much per week independant of the subscription to the paper. If any of the branches west feel disposed to do this, it certainly would be a relief, and, furthermore, if our brethren scattered abroad whom the Lord has blessed with a reasonable portion of this world's goods, would send us their hundred, two hundreds, or even fifties, a few small clubs of this kind, putting in fifty or one hundred each, which some neighborhoods can easily do, would help us materially to liquidate our present liabilities and place things on a more easy footing. We ask nothing from anybody but what we have been doing, and are doing all the while, besides giving our own time. We do wish to impress the importance of these things upon the Saints, and therefore we have been thus explicit. We believe that in consequence of our silence on these matters, many of the brethren are ignorant of our true position. We have received eulogiums from all quarters that we care not to publish, we know what the feelings of the Saints are generally upon this subject; but we do think that if the paper is instructive, interesting and edifying to them, they ought to bear the burthen and not leave it on our shoulders. President Young, in a late communication to us, says: "We do want that publication (THE MORMON) sustained as ably as hitherto."

The question now is will you sustain it? If so let us have deeds and not words. We are ready on our part to do battle against the Philistine hosts, and in the name of Israel's God defy the disjointed and combined powers of the adversary. Shall we "go a warfare at our own charge," or will you unitedly step forth to our relief? We await your response.

We are aware that some persons suppose that we are sustained by the Church in Utah, or by tithing, or some public source. To these we would reply that never since our association with this Church have we received one penny in tithing, and when not out on a mission we pay tithing ourself. We have to sustain our family, go on missions, do all public service free, and trust to our brethren and to our God for support. This is Mormonism; we have stood it for the last twenty years, and think we can stand it to the end, and notwithstanding these affairs, as we said before, we dont wish to whine or complain. We feel as independant as a wood sawyer, and those who dont wish to assist can just let it alone.

One thing more and we have done. It may be that if we are not sustained we may quit the publication of the paper, we dont think we shall; but if we do we shall return no money to anybody, and those who do not wish to subscribe, even on these terms, can withhold. We have enough of liabilities already on our hands associated with this publication, in defending the rights of the Saints, their immunities and privileges in the States, and we do not feel disposed to assume any more.

We shall also feel obliged if those indebted to us will forward the money.

Prussia and Switzerland.

THE leading subject of interest in Europe at the present time is the dispute between the King of Prussia and the republicans of Switzerland. The real ground of conflict between them is perhaps of little or no interest to others than the parties concerned; but as Switzerland is the only republic in the old world that is worthy of that name, and occupying an important position right in the midst of despots, by reason of which she has been able to give shelter and protection to political refugees of some note, the present difficulty: regarded with interest as being an attempt on the part of royalty to root up or humble republicanism.

Neufchatel, the bone of contention, was, in 1707, on the death of Marie, Duchesse de Nemours, annexed politically to the kingdom of Prussia; we say politically annexed, as the canton of Neufchatel is several hundred miles separated from the body of the Prussian monarchy. Prussian authority was recognized over that principality up to 1805 or the commencement of 1806. At that time Napoleon I. was deeply interested in furnishing kingdoms and states with rulers; and among his arrangements he secured for Prince Berthier the principality of Neufchatel—the King of Prussia renouncing all claims or titles thereto. In 1814, when Napoleon and his satellites had to relinquish the reins of government, the principality of Neufchatel was legally joined to the Swiss Confederation, at the wish of the inhabitants of Neufchatel and with the sanction of the allied powers. Prussia, regretting her arrangement with Napoleon, particularly as the little corporal was supposed to be secure on the island of Elba, despatched Mons. C. D'Oleyes, to her former principality, who, while he labored for the annexation of Neufchatel to Switzerland, because the people wished it so, proclaimed himself provisional governor. Diplomatists, though proverbially cunning, are not reputed extremely sagacious, and not at all times eulogised by mankind at large for fixing out things in a clear and straightforward manner. About this time they blundered considerably, and, among other things, made a bungling job of the disposition of Neufchatel. If any palliation for errors be admitted, it may be said that the Congress of Vienna sat in the midst of troublesome times. Napoleon had returned from Elba, and was no small terror to the nations whose ambassadors were then trying to undo his fixing out of Europe. An alliance was necessary, and it is possible that to secure Prussia the other powers acknowledged its claim upon Neufchatel without much, if any, real investigation, and almost about the same writing they acknowledged the principality a new canton added to the Swiss Confederation.

The Congress of Vienna, in 1815, solemnly acknowledged Geneva and le Valais, which Napoleon had united with France, and the principality of Neufchatel over which Berthier reigned—three new cantons united to Switzerland. The confederation up to that time numbered 19 cantons, and from that time to this she numbers 22. That same Congress restored to Prussia the provinces and terrritories she possessed at the peace of Tilsit in 1807; and in their enumeration is found the principality of Neufchatel. Here begins the discord. The claim of Prussia upon Neufchatel from that time was founded evidently upon a mistake, or underhanded Prussian pilfering intrigues, and maintained by Prussia's superiority over Switzerland in the councils of the nations. Prussia did not possess the principality of Neufchatel at the peace of Tilsit; she had before that a considerable time relinquished all title of sovereignty over it into the hands of Napoleon; and the manner in which it returns into the hands of Prussia by the bare mention of the principality of Neufchatel among a crowd of others, without any other negotiation, and while at the same time it was annexed to Switzerland, and had for some time previous been so acknowledged by the Congress, gives rise to the supposition that little attention had been paid to the wording of the protocol, and that Prussia had done something akin to smuggling—such are the sentiments of the Swiss.

From that time, however, up to 1848, Neufchatel held the anomalous position of being a canton of a republic, and at the same time owed allegiance to the King of Prussia. Switzerland had intestine troubles the latter portion of 1847 from the encroachments of Jesuitism, and had scarcely got cooled down, when the spirit of revolution and hostility to despotism burst upon the nations in the beginning of 1848. Close upon the heels of the departure of Louis Philippe, royalty had to clear out from Neufchatel. Frederick William, like many other crowned heads, had plenty of occupation at home watching the storm near his own palace, and being little anxious to measure arms with Switzerland, let the change pass over. The aristocracy, tailors and barbers of the town of Neufchatel have never been satisfied; and though they have had to acknowledge republican laws, and lost the tinsel and show of royalty, they have always been grunting about the dear King Frederick William. In September last they tried revolution, but only flourished a few hours in authority, as the majority, a very large majority, of the canton is thorough republican. The latter soon took the royalists prisoners, and placed them in security.

The present dispute between the kingdom and the republic is over these prisoners. The King of Prussia says: liberate these prisoners unconditionally and I have no objection to negotiate with you about the future of the canton, but I promise nothing. The Swiss government says, "no, we do not recognize your authority to interfere, and we shall therefore let the law take its course with them for treason." The King feels bad, and blusters out war. Prussia sought the good services of Napoleon to bring about an understanding; Switzerland sought his good offices likewise, but in the beginning he refused to take sides. Latterly he favored the liberation of the prisoners unconditionally, as Prussia had required, but the Swiss nobly turned a deaf ear. "Napoleon the Little," forgetting the services which Switzerland rendered him, got offended and intimated clearly that Switzerland need not look to France for protection or good offices. Upon which the inhabitants of Switzerland, from one end of their country to the other, speak out for war—defence upon their own strength. Never was a people more united than are the Swiss at the present moment. The ascerbity which has characterized the discussions between the advanced republicans and the conservatives has almost disappeared, and the cry is: let us unite, our country is in danger.

Prussia is a great nation and has a fine army, against which the Swiss could hope for little success on the plains, but in the interior of the country, among their rugged mountains, they are prepared for all Frederick William can send them. The 2nd of Jan. was the day on which the Prussian army was expected to enter upon their march to Helvetia, but we have latter news from Europe, and their departure is set back five or ten days more, as there were still hopes that some of the other powers may be able to suggest a course that would not humble either, and terminate the difficulty without the effusion of blood. Whether it may come to the tug of war is with some very doubtful, but while there lingers hope there is no cessation of labor in preparations for the attack, and there is equal vigor in the preparations for defence. Should it come to war, Switzerland has the best wishes of every freeman. We have not seen in any European paper, save those that are directly under imperial and royal eyes, any thing but encouragement for the mountaineers. There is no scarcity of men, officers or money. The old men exempt from duty, and the young lads not yet of years to be enrolled, are crowding as volunteers. The cantons offer the general government more than their demands, and the troops from that same contested canton of Neufchatel have petitioned to be placed in the advance guard when the fighting is to be done, that they may have the first brush with the royalty that they despise. The nation has warranted the government to procure unlimited credit, and moneyed men before they have been applied to have offered to furnish. If war it must be, it is devoutedly to be wished that the plumage of the shuffling, canting hypocrite may be trampled in the dust. Success to the land of Tell.

Utah Before Congress.

Mr. Morrill offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the President to inform the House whether resistance, organized or otherwise, has been made or is to be apprehended against the official authorities of Utah, and to communicate all correspondence relative to the appointment or declination of office in that Territory since January, 1852, and whether the laws thereof are practically administered with impartial justice to all the inhabitants there.

It affords us very great pleasure to draw the attention of our readers to the above extract from our Congressional columns. The wording of the extract is not so clear as we could have wished it—perhaps the storm effected the wires or the official fingers that dispatched the lightning message from Washington to New York—notwithstanding, what we have heard during the last five or six years about the Mormons resisting the non-Mormon officials sent to the Territory of Utah, and of Governor Young hurling defiance at the parent government to remove him from the gubernatorial chair, we guess the investigation is meant to test these charges.

Every friend of Truth and Justice will view with pleasure any constitutional measure adopted by Congress for an examination of the course pursued by the territorial officers of Utah—Mormon or non-Mormon. We go in for a fair, thorough, above-board examination—no farce—a bona fide trial by jury, with cross-examination of witnesses for and against. The Nincompoops, from Broochus & Co. down to Troskolawski, who have gone to Utah calculating to astonish the natives, cut a dash with patent leather high-heeled boots, black kid and Havanahs, be somebody and enjoy for dollars and rum sling, ad libitum, the privileges of the christian cities whence they came, found out that Utah was a new Territory where labor was a virtue, the inhabitants a funny sort of folks that don't think broad cloth, patent leather or kid make a gentleman, and with such peculiar notions had a corresponding institution which "was peculiarly hard upon the officers sent to reside there." Of course the much coveted grapes were sour, and the husbandmen of the vineyard guilty of resistance to the United States officers.

We do earnestly hope that President Pierce will come out like a man and bring the Mormons face to face with their accusers. If the last days of his administration are marked with impartial justice to a calumniated people, who have had heaped upon them every charge in the calender of crime, and that, too, by persons whose interest lay in the public belief of their accusations, we promise him the thanks of a people whose friendship will be craved long after their enemies will be sunk in the oblivion of their own insignificance. We ask no favor save that of being heard.

A Verdant Editor.

The editor of the Montreal Witness, in a late number of that paper, rejoices marvellously over the advantages of living in Canada—which, by-the-by, without detracting from the glory of our Northern friends, might as well be the subject of rejoicing in Timbuctoo. After enumerating advantages, among others, and probably the best, "cheap postage," he introduces "the pulpit of Canada" as being "remarkably sound and faithful." He says:

"We have no Foxes, or Holyoaks, or Parkers; no preachers of Mormonism, Spiritualism, or any of the more offensive forms of infidelity; and very few of Rationalism, Unitarianism, or Universalism."

We pass unchallenged the pious editor's statements about others, thinking, from the language of his rejoicing, that he has been too near his mother's leading strings to know much about any of them, but we think it not amiss to post him in a few words on Mormonism in Canada, as he is terribly in the dark. The Canadians have not been backward in receiving Mormonism. They may not make a great noise as many others, but our subscription list for Canada would astonish the Montreal Witness. There are preachers of Mormonism there, and, judging from their intercourse with us, some of them pretty effectual preachers, too. By the bye, Canada has furnished one of the Twelve Apostles. Among the first elders who carried Mormonism to Europe were some Canadians, and they and others from Canada have contributed in no small degree to the upbuilding of Mormonism both at home and abroad; but we must cease lest we tell the Witness too much, and it might look like bugling, as we are from Canada.

The Weather.

TOWARDS the end of last week the weather became intensely cold. For some hours on Saturday there was a bridge of ice between Brooklyn and the South Ferry, over which thousands of people passed on business and as many thousands on pleasure. The pleasure-seeking portion came nigh paying dearly for their sport, as in the excitement of their enjoyment they turned a deaf ear to the warning that the turn of the tide had separated the ice from the Brooklyn side. In a short time afterwards the ice bridge broke in the centre, and left them completely at sea. Active preparations were immediately made by boatmen to rush to the rescue, but fortunately the tugboat Rattler had steam up, and came quickly along side and rescued the terrified—about fifty persons in all. Sunday was a bitter cold day: in the morning the thermometer stood at zero, but towards evening it moderated considerably, and fleecy flakes began to fall thick and heavy. Monday was a severe day; the cold was intense and the wind fierce, drifting the snow in some places three and four feet high. The reports from the coast show great damage to shipping, with a considerable loss of life. The railway traffic has necessarily been stopped, and causes no small inconvenience. Tuesday the weather changed completely, and the before deserted streets were crowded with sleighs and their merry occupants, who seemed to rejoice amazingly in parading their best along the principal streets of the city.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Nothing very startling at home to notice, but under this heading we may extend our notice to other places and things distant. To begin with Kansas the Topeka Legislature met on the 6th inst., but Gov. Robinson had resigned, and the Lieutenant-Governor was absent much to the chagrin of the Free-Soilers. The members of this Legislature not having all arrived, together with the absence of the Lieutenant-Governor, the members who had met concluded to adjourn, and as they were leaving some eight of them were apprehended on a writ issued by Judge Cato, charging them with falsely assuming to act in an official capacity as legislators for Kansas. The other Legislature has met and was acknowledged by Governor Geary as the Legislature of Kansas.

The corruption Investigating Committee at Washington is busy, but with what success of course is kept to themselves, but if anything is to be had it is not from Mr. Raymond, of the Times, and his correspondent, Mr. Simonton, although it was on their charges that led to the establishment of this investigation. Mr. Raymond talks of honor and confidence, and Mr. Simonton says he is determined to suffer any penalty, but shall not disgorge. An honorable member, on being questioned if he had ever executed any bond by which land or any valuable consideration should accrue to any person on condition of any railroad bill passing, denied the right of the committee to examine his private business with others than honorable members, and it is thus that the corruption is exposed! Mum is the order at Washington, as "I don't remember" was at Windsor in the military investigation discreditable to honorable gentlemen.

We expected to have had something very nice and dazzling this week on the arrival of Captain Hartstein in the English frigate Retribution, but all the cannon firing, squibs, dinners and balls that were counted upon have all gone by the board. The gallant Captain, two Lieutenants, and twenty-seven men, the officers and crew that took out the Resolute, arrived quietly and without parade by the Washington on Tuesday—a very dull finish to such lightning streaks on the other side of the water. Marcy had given instructions before the Captain left, and he could not slide past them.

Senator Harlan, of Iowa, was re-elected, last Friday, to the seat which he vacated lately by the resolution of the Senate deciding that he had been previously unconstitutionally elected.

The Senate of the New York Legislature have appropriated $500 for a gold medal to be presented to Captain Harstein, with the thanks of the State, for the rescue of Dr. Kane. Better late than never.

Dr. Bigler, of Rochester, who was lately apprehended on the charge of causing the death of a young woman, formerly his servant, whom he had seduced from home, prostituted and then killed in his attempt to produce abortion, has been "admitted to bail and discharged from prison upon the order of Judge T. R. Strong. His recognizance was with four sureties and in the sum of $12,000. The Judge, in his opinion, intimates that the offence committed by Bigler, if any, is not of a higher grade than manslaughter." Has the Judge any daughters? If Bigler is the criminal he should be hung high up to dry.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

To the expectation of war between Prussia and Switzerland is now added unexpectedly the war de facto between Great Britain and China. The last mail from the East brings news of the bombardment of Canton by the British under Admiral Seymour. Though it takes considerable time to get through with the diplomatic paraphernalia, flourish of trumpets, proclamations, &c. before the blow is struck in Europe, it seems they go at it rough and ready with the Celestials. The latter have never at any time been very civil to "the outside barbarians," such as Queen Victoria and President Pierce, whether they have had good grounds for their bad manners or not is another thing, but that they have been saucy is certain both to the annoyance of John Bull and Jonathan. The beginning of the row is no opium business, nor nice quibbling such as the King of Prussia indulges in with Switzerland, but some straightforward insolence on the part of the Celestials to ambassadors who wanted nothing else than a row to get further into the Celestial empire. According to the telegraphic despatches from Trieste, December 27th, the Chinese had boarded a lorcha under the British flag on the 18th of October, and took by force twelve of the crew ashore. The British Consul Parkes remonstrated, but was insulted and threatened with violence. Admiral Seymour was called to his assistance, and having likewise been treated as a barbarian, began to bombard the forts of Canton on the 24th, and took some and destroyed others. Time was afforded for reflection, but no notice taken of the Admiral, so he recommenced on the 27th the bombardment, and on the 29th breached and stormed the wall, and the troops penetrated to the palace. Attempts on the part of the British to open negotiations were fruitless, so that hostilities recommenced on the 3d of November. On the 6th the Barraconta destroyed twenty-three war junks, receiving eighty shots in her hull and rigging. On the 12th the Bougne forts at the entrance of the Canton river were taken. On the 15th the Chinese had remanned the barrier forts and fired into the mail steamer Canton on her way down. The British loss in the above operations was trifling.

It is reported that an American ship had been fired into from one of the Chinese forts and satisfaction demanded or operations would be immediately commenced for that insult. As the mail steamer that brought the above news was leaving, a French frigate was approaching the scene of hostilities. France has likewise some satisfaction to demand for the cruel murder of a French Catholic missionary. As France, England and America are all equally willing to open trade with China, it is very likely they will make something of a small beginning. We expect the faithful proselytizing Protestants will rejoice over the prospect of sending out some tons of tracts to bewilder the poor Celestials.

The British are advancing against Persia, and the latter making every preparation to receive them warmly.

The Peace Plenipotentiaries met at Paris on the 31st December, and were very courteous to each other. They had met, but had not separated. Rumor has it that Russia renounces her pretensions to new Bolgrad, and the Isle of Serpents and the Delta of the Danube being given up to Turkey. In compensation for these amicable approaches, a district of land would be accorded to Russia towards the north of Moldavia.

Extremes Meet.

A READER of our paper, not a Mormon, has forwarded us the following for publication: though we don't say amen to all his ideas and statements, we give it a place in our columns for the edification of some and probably the amusement of others.—ED.

It is a general law pervading all departments of nature, the moral, as well as the physical world, that extremes meet, opposite natures and conditions being placed in juxtaposition to each other, and appearing to coalesce, though, in reality, they do not; thus, in organic forms there is the male and female, in material configurations there are right hand forms or dispositions of particles, also left hand forms, exactly resembling, and yet totally different; two different species of electricity combine in the atmosphere, the action of intense heat and of intense cold resembles in many instances, so also does the action of acids and of their opposites the alkalies frequently correspond. In the animal economy opposite conditions exactly resemble. So also in the moral economy of nature, holiness differs not, in appearance, from hypocrisy; perfect freedom is compatible with strict obedience, justice with not judging at all, selfishness is but self-sacrifice in another shape, parsimony and avarice may be and often are but care for the welfare of others; while generosity is commonly but a selfish, cowardly weakness, or nothing more than ostentatious prodigality. Thus, according to the saying of the Apostle, "Satan is transformed into an angel of light." Following the course of this analogy, we may look for the perfection of any virtue in juxtaposition with its opposite vice, the two completely resembling in outward form and feature. Seriousness and devotion must therefore be sought, not where the pietists seek it, in gloomy thoughts and constrained behavior, but in joyfulness and mirth, rejoicing before the Lord, (Jeremiah 31st Chap. 4th and 13th verses,) all nature is at the same time serious and joyous, and at no time more serious than in the most luxuriant joy. The spiritual God is to be sought and worshipped in the material universe. Riches is to be sought in contented poverty, happiness, in the patient endurance of all evil. True physical enjoyment is only to be found in restraining the appetites, while temperance in all things is compatible with the absence of all restraint, but such as the instinctive feelings impose.

The light afforded by the above principles may enable us the better to arrive at the respective merits of the different conditions monogamy and polygamy, which are opposites in some respects, not in all; but generate a host of opposites and conditions. Monogamy stands in opposition to polygamy, in giving the woman exclusive ownership of the man, which is all very well, and consistent with the most perfect moral principle when voluntarily conceded, not to any expressed claim of the woman, but in a spontaneous exercise of regard and confidence, but if imposed by a law, or claimed by the woman, becomes nothing less than despotic ownership and jealousy, degrading the man from the position of ruler to that of a slave, a meeting of extremes. Thus monogamy professedly intended to obviate jealousy in the woman but suggests and fosters it, another meeting of extremes. But the inferior in any relation may not dictate terms to the superior, which this form of the marriage relation causes the woman to do to the man, a third meeting of extremes; for where two ride on a horse one must precede the other, a superior position which both God and man assign to the man. Again, one special object of monogamy is to compel the parties to love one another with an undivided love, a pretty romantic notion, worthy of any preux cavalier and lady bright, as if affections could be coerced—what an absurdity! the usual effect of which is a life-time of quarreling and hatred, a fourth meeting of extremes. Also, the bond is evidently of no force, being enforced by no penalty, neither can it be, a fifth meeting of extremes, and a glorious absurdity, a bond without a penalty.

Lastly, Monogamy is intended to procure for the parties an equality of privilege and station, but it usually makes one party the slave of the other. These views of the case show evidently not only the folly, inefficacy and absurdity of human meddling with human instincts and relations, for "laws are powerless against the passions and the necessities," but it shows that all such meddling is eminently injurious.

Such are the legitimate effects of Monogamy; if not always, it is because spoiling does not always ruin a good nature. In Polygamy, on the contrary, all the parties are free; the woman is exempt from the conventional duty of watching the man, and he is free from her jealousy; the woman's duties to the man being divided, are onerous to none. Herein jealousy and dictation being annihilated by the abolition of exclusive possession, the woman is not tempted to pull the man down from the seat of dignity that God bestowed on him, for the selfish feeling of property in the man is diminished in the woman's breast, in a geometrical ratio, doubling with each accession to their number, till at last it amounts to nothing. Even among the women agreement is the usual result though there is palpable cause of quarrel—another meeting of extremes. This condition, therefore, places the man where God intended him to be, in a condition of honor and confidence from the woman; it also elevates the woman, for no woman can lower her husband, without, at the same time, lowering herself; and the prophet represents the seven women as elevated, not lowered, by attaching themselves to one man. Christ also is a polygamist, for, being the husband of the church, he has seven wives, the seven churches; and the figurative is founded on the real. In the monogamic condition, also, the physical inconveniences and diseases arising from the disproportion of instinct in the parties, incident to both, especially to the woman, are not rare nor slight.

Upon the whole, we may affirm that no virtue is to be found by directly seeking it, but must be suggested from within, for "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." "To the pure all things are pure." "All things are lawful to believers, but all things are not expedient." Therefore, virtue of any kind is not to be found in the obvious course of search, but rather in the opposite. The faith, the motive, is the meritorious ingredient in every action.

Modern Spiritual Manifestations.

ED. MORMON:—Dear Sir: As there is much agitation in nearly all parts of the United States on the subject of "Spirit manifestations," I offer a few remarks on the same for the consideration of your readers.

The early visions of Joseph Smith, commencing in the year 1820, which resulted in the revelation of the Book of Mormon, and the restoration of the fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ are the first Modern well authenticated visions which have come under my notice.

The visions of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris, wherein an angel from heaven, and the voice of God revealed to them the truth of the Book of Mormon, and commanded them to bear witness of the same to all nations, which took place about 1829, were the next in order, being confirmatory of the visions of Joseph Smith.

The visions of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in 1829, wherein John the Baptist appeared as a ministering angel, and, laying his hands on their heads, ordained them, in the name of the Messiah to the Priesthood of Aaron, was a very clear and important vision.

And the vision which they experienced soon afterwards was no less important; viz: wherein Peter, James and John, the Presidents of the former Apostles, came to them as ministering angels, and ordained them to the Apostleship of the Son of God. These two last visions were the more important, because the Priesthood and Apostleship had been lost to the world for so many ages.

From these visions, and from the ministrations thus restored by these, has sprung that powerful organization called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in which the manifestations of the spirit have been enjoyed by thousands and tens of thousands in many nations and languages.

These are notable facts which none can successfully gainsay or resist.

It is also a public fact that Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were murdered in Illinois in open day and in a public manner in 1844. And that scores of men, women and children of the Saints have from time to time been killed on account of their religion. And that scores of thousands of the people of the Saints, including their Apostles and leaders, have been driven from their homes in the United States, robbed and plundered of millions, and forced to seek shelter in the fastnesses of the Rocky Mountains.

It is also a public fact that there has been no redress for these outrages on the part of any Department of State or General Government.

That innocent blood is still crying from the ground unavenged, and that the prayers and tears of the widows and fatherless are had in remembrance before God and this nation.

It is also a manifest fact that a large majority of the citizens, including editors, priests and rulers, are accessories to these wholesale deeds of murder and plunder, by openly approving of the same, or winking at, and conniving with the actors in the same.

After this mighty people had gone forth beyond the Rocky Mountains, and the Prophets had been slain or banished from the country, then lo! and behold! the "Rochester Knockings" and other spiritual manifestations commenced, and soon attracted general attention and spread over the nation.

Thousands of converts were made, not only among the common people, but from the ranks of the learned and philosophic, Ministers, Editors, Statesmen and Judges—all classes were wrought upon, and converted over to this new and wonderful developement of "Spiritualism;" as it was called.

Many of these became its witnesses, its expounders and propagators. A. J. Davis and Judge Edmonds are among its most noted authors, and Partridge and Brittain, of Broadway, N. York, conduct the "Spiritual Telegraph," one of its ablest periodicals. These, and a host of others have written and published volumes on the subject.

The United States can, probably, now boast of millions of Spiritualists, while the country is flooded with periodicals, pamphlets and even large volumes, devoted to the subject, or containing spiritual revelations.

Now it is evident on the very face of the subject, that the Spiritual Manifestations commenced with "Mormonism, and those which have since been introduced, independent of that system, are in direct opposition, one to the other: and that, therefore, both cannot be true, and from the same source. The one being introduced and developed in the very nation, where the other had been publicly taught, rejected and expelled.

Moses and the Magicians of Egypt, Daniel and the soothsayers of Babylon—or the Apostles and Simon the sorcerer of Judea, were not in more direct opposition one to the other, than are these two great modern systems of spiritual power.

We will now point out a few of the many striking differences.

1st, The visions of Joseph Smith and his witnesses were plain, open visions, in which many witnesses saw and heard, while the illustrious spirits of the departed ministered in their glory, and talked with them face to face, as one man talks with another, reasoning from the Scriptures, and revealing important truths in accordance therewith.

How different this from the mysterious knockings, table tippings, trances, swoons, cramps, convulsions, contortions, fits, and many other unseemly, disgusting, and even horrible, or trifling manifestations of the other system.

2d, All the manifestations or administrations of spiritual power, connected with the Priesthood restored by Joseph Smith, are, in the name of Jesus Christ, under his authority, giving him the glory, and recognizing his name as the only name given under heaven, wherein men may lawfully use spiritual power and gifts.

How different this from the other Spiritual Manifestations! Their mediums do not act by and in the name of Jesus and his Priesthood in any of their spiritual gifts or acts, nor do they, in general acknowledge that He is the Son of God, or that His blood atoned for the sins of the world. It is not in their power to display their gifts in that Holy name. They cannot do it.

3d, The Priesthood of the Saints requires faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and penitence towards God as an indispensible qualification of the candidates for spiritual power.

While the mediums of the other power may be unbelievers in Christ, and immoral persons, in the daily practice of immorality and crime.

4th, The Gospel ordinances, such as baptism and the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus Christ, are the means through which the gift of the Holy Spirit is administered to a penitent believer; and after such believer is initiated, and is made partaker of spiritual power, a strict morality and a holy and prayerful life enjoined as indispensible to the continued enjoyment of the gift of the spirit. While the other spiritual mediums require no such conditions.

5th, The gifts of the Holy Spirit are not controled by the will of man, and exhibited in order to gratify the vainly curious, or at the challenge of a gainsayer, or an unbeliever, but were given to confirm and comfort the believer, and for benevolent and useful purposes.

While, on the other hand, the mediums of the opposite spiritual powers come and exhibit their gifts, to gratify the curious and vain, and at the challenge of the unbeliever.

6th, Every exercise of the true spiritual gifts is for edification, and for the profit and instruction of individuals, or of the Church. The gift of the Holy Spirit enlightens, comforts, elevates and purifies the affections, and developes the intellectual faculties of man. It leads into all truth, and therefore its ultimatum is the eternal union of all its adherents—for truth is one.

While the mediums and recipients of the other power are frequently distressed, choaked, paralyzed, cramped, distorted, thrown down, bound; or compelled to give utterance to things unseemly, false, or worse than useless, and sometimes to blasphemy, railing, and indecent expressions.

7th, The gifts of the Holy Spirit can not be used for money, or to get gain, or in other words, they cannot be bought and sold.

The other powers and gifts are frequently exhibited for a certain fee, or for so much per head for admission to their exhibition.

8th, The Priesthood of the Saints administers one Lord, one faith and one baptism. It levels all sects, creeds and parties, breaks down every division wall among its adherents, and by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus Christ administers the self-same spirit to every member, whereby they are united in one. Hence, there can be no lasting schism in the body. Thus united, the entire people who obey the Gospel grow in the unity of the spirit, till they are perfected, and compared to a holy temple in the Lord. In short, in the ultimate, they became one, as Christ and the Father are one.

While the familiar spirit mediums and their adherents are divided, and sub-divided, without any cementing principle, or bond of union. Hence, they have no more strength or governmental principle than a rope of sand.

What shall we say then, in conclusion?

Simply this—that God has sent this nation "Strong delusion that they may believe a lie and be damned, because they believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

The two great master spiritual powers which were at enmity in days of old, are now restored, or re-developed upon the earth. All men will be under the influence of one or the other ere long.

I rejoice that man is an agent, a candidate between the two, and that he can enlist on which side he chooses.

If Jesus Christ has all power in heaven and on earth, serve Him and yield to His spirit.

If, on the other hand, the Devil be God, serve him.

"As to me and my house, we will serve the Lord Jesus Christ."

Respectfully &c., P. P. PRATT.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 10, 1857.

Switzerland.

The following are the proceedings of the first sitting of the Federal Assembly at Berne, on Saturday, 27th December.

The session was opened by a speech from M. Martin, the President, in the following terms:

"Three months have scarcely elapsed since you declared that the Republicans of Neufchatel had deserved well of their country, for having alone triumphed over the Royalist revolt of the 3d September. Since then events have advanced, the position has become worse; it is no longer Neufchatel, it is all Switzerland which is in question. The Federal Council thought it necessary to convoke you again, to take measures demanded by the circumstances in which the country is placed. Justice followed its course tranquilly to discover not only the authors but the instigators of the rebellion of September, and to apply the punishment laid down by law for factions who in arms by night disturbed the public peace, and endeavored to overthrow the constitution of the country. A foreign Prince, the King of Prussia, has demanded of Switzerland the liberation of the prisoners—consequently the acknowledgment of his rights over the Principality of Neuchatel. This demand could not be admitted without abdicating our rights as a sovereign state—as a free and independent nation. That which the King of Prussia could not obtain he wishes to impose on us by force of arms. Under this menace the opinion of Switzerland could not be doubtful. At the first news a single cry escaped from the heart of all the children of the country—a unanimous burst of enthusiasm showed that the Swiss people have not degenerated, that they are worthy of their ancestors and of their liberty. We may joyfully affirm that throughout the people and the Government are animated by the most ardent patriotism, and are ready to make every sacrifice for the defence of our independence. Whatever their public opinion, they are all united in the same feeling, that of the danger of the country. Happy the country which can thus count on her children! Moreover, the cause for which we are to fight is a holy cause, that of liberty; it is the principle of the sovereignty of the people, upon which rests our Constitution, fighting against the worn-out principle of divine right supported by the treaties of 1815, a thousand times torn by our adversary who invokes them to-day. Let us know how to maintain in our deliberations the calmness and dignity which become an assembly of the representatives of a free people, and avoid even the semblance of fanfaronnade. What the country wants is acts. Let our decisions bear the impress of republican energy. Let us not recoil before any sacrifice—that is the surest way of guaranteeing our liberty, of maintaining our independence, and saving our country. We know that the entire people are with us. We have reached a crisis when the national existence of Switzerland is at stake. May the God of our fathers enable us to issue from it with honor; and, if the danger pass away, may this crisis contribute to still more strengthen concord among all the sons of our country, and the patriotism of her children! God protect Switzerland! God bless Switzerland!"

The assemblage then proceeded to the election of a new President, and afterwards to the nomination of the commission on the Neuchatel question.

The following telegraphic despatch has been received at Paris:

"BERNE, Dec. 28.

"Conformably to a decision of the Federal Assembly, a commission of 11 members has been appointed to prepare a report on the situation of affairs.

"The Federal Assembly adiourned without dissolving itself definitely.

"The proposition of the Emperor of the French for a mediation which was spoken of has not yet been received.

"The Federal Council has given orders for the speedy organization of the Landwehr.

"Councillor Furrer has left for Frankfort and Councillor Frey for Basle. The missions with which they are charged probably contain a common proposition.

"M. Barmann, the Swiss Envoy at the Court of the Tuileries, has arrived here. Hopes are entertained of peace."

A letter from Constance, in the Suabian Mercury, says:

"The Prusso-Swiss difficulty has placed us all at once in a very disagreeable position; for since yesterday measures have been taken to fortify the town on the side of Switzerland, and to construct redoubts. The military authorities have borrowed from the municipal administration the necessary tools, while awaiting supplies from Carlsrhue. The military posts have been augmented, and patrols are stationed along the frontier. On the other hand, a Swiss corps has arrived at Kreuzlingen and Emisdorf, opposite the town of Constance."

Under date of 26th December, the Federal Council of Switzerland addressed a message to the High Federal Assembly concerning the Neufchatel question.

After stating that it had intimated its willingness to effect an amicable settlement through the bons offices of France or England, but that it had declined to liberate the prisoners, though asked to do so by France, by Austria, and by Russia, the message says:

"In the course of October the affair seemed about to enter a phase favorable to Switzerland, thanks to the friendly efforts of the English Government. On the 25th of the said month the British Legation asked whether the Federal Council would consent to the immediate liberation of the Neufchatel prisoners in case the King of Prussia would give to France and England the confidential assurance that he would renounce his claims to the sovereignty of Neufchatel on the following conditions:

"1. That he should continue to bear the title of Prince of Neufchatel.

"2. That he should remain in possession of all his private property in the canton of Neufchatel.

"3. That certain religious and charitable establishments, in which the King took a lively interest, should be placed beyond all harm.

"The reply which we made to that verbal note is dated 29th October.

"We commenced by expressing our thanks to the British Government for the kind interest it had manifested in the Neufchatel question, as well as for the friendly disposition it had displayed. We declared ourselves disposed, as much it depended upon us, after having received the adhesion of the Government of Neufchatel to the overtures which had been made, to accept the points indicated by the English Government as the basis of a negotiation and settlement with the King of Prussia.

"With a view to provide the British Government with more ample information we thought fit to add the following observations:

"'1. According to the positive declaration of the Government of Neufchatel the latter is not aware that the King of Prussia has any private property in the canton of Neufchatel. Supposing, however, that such were the case, that property should be respected the same as any other private property.

"'As regards the revenues which the King possessed in his quality of sovereign of the country, they could not come under the head of private property. In case of an arrangement, to prevent all misunderstanding, it would be necessary to specify what private property belonged to the King. A special arrangement should also be made respecting the religious and charitable institutions.'

"These proposals (says the message) fell to the ground. They were not even proposed to the Berlin Cabinet, as, in the opinion of the English Government itself, their refusal could only lead to greater complications."

The message then treats of General Dufour's mission to Paris. On the 24th October the Emperor had addressed himself directly to General Dufour, offering to assist in the settlement of the point in dispute. The Emperor asked Switzerland to liberate the prisoners at the formal request of the Emperor, thus placing, so to say, the fate of Neufchatel in his hands, and thus, in his opinion, saving the national amour-propre. Should Switzerland refuse this overture, the Emperor would allow matters to take their course, and make no opposition to the concentration of a Prussian army in the Grand Duchy of Baden. It was thought advisable to send General Dufour to Paris to give a verbal answer to the Emperor. The General's instructions were—1. To thank the Emperor for the interest he took in Switzerland. 2. To express the regret of the Federal Council that it could not comply with the request of the Emperor to liberate the prisoners at once; on the contrary, that it must adhere to the basis which, at the suggestion of England, had been communicated to the English and French Governments.

The message explains the ground of this refusal, namely, that, unless the King of Prussia simultaneously with the liberation of the prisoners made a declaration of compensation, Switzerland would by complying compromise her rights, and it would be regarded as an act caused by fear.

The message then enters into details respecting the formal demand made by the Prussian representative for the unconditional liberation of the prisoners, and the refusal of the Federal Council on the 19th of November.
